I cannot believe that the Congress would allow such an interpretation of the administrative policies of the acts, but to date it exists and I am advised by some of my colleagues that attempts were made in the Seventy-third Congress to particularly identify those who could participate in the fruits of these emergency acts, but that the Congress has steadfastly adhered to the rule that all emergency acts passed under and by virtue of the request of the present administration should be administrative in policy and in no wise fundamental as concerns the prospective measurements of the act itself. I believe this most unfair, especially in cases where there is such an infinitesimal line of demarcation bordering strictly upon favoritism.

EXCEPTIONS

I know of many cases where this administrative policy which I speak of has been flagrantly violated, so that in truth and fact it shows the interpretation as has been alluded to is but a hunk of red tape, stifling the intent of the administration and corralling the nurtured sons of political favoritism in the realm of discrimination. I know of people who did not reside in their particular homes in my district but who had bankers and big interests vitally interested in their property holdings and who secured their loans by wiring and phoning their Congressmen and Senators, and otherwise becoming idolatrous to a scheme of government supposed to be fair to all alike.

I know that these exceptions have been made and loans granted when such big interests began their political maneuvering to accomplish loans which in turn resulted in fruits to them. I voice disapproval to such exceptions for the reason that this is a direct slap at the provisions of the Constitution of the United States of America giving equal rights to the citizens of the United States in matters of this sort. Even the Ten Commandments, as holy as they are in their prescription from the Deity, deny that such a discrimination and such a favoritism can be used even during normal times, much less during times when our very economic life is imperiled, and I do hope that those responsible for the enactment of these laws and those responsible for the provisions of administration will correct such tyrannical interpretations and favoritisms. I could say the same thing with reference to the Farm Loan Board and the activities of the Federal land bank, because I know that political favoritisms, unjust exactments, and misinterpretations of the administrative policies of the Farm Loan Board and the Federal land bank have wielded a mighty force of discontent among my people because of political hypocrisy and favoritism.

I shall vote for H. R. 6021. I have no other recourse, but in passing may I say this, that unless all applications filed since the middle of November 1934 are placed in line like all others, a noticeable tirade will result from the same sort of discrimination which I have described.

I trust my colleagues will understand my position and appreciate the fact that unless matters of this sort are brought to the attention of the Congress through observation and experience, legislation can never become fundamental.

ADDITIONAL HOME-MORTGAGE RELIEF

Mr. STACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Record by placing therein my appreciation of the Home Owners' Loan Act in regard to the relief it has brought to the distressed home owners in the United States.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. STACK. Mr. Speaker, ladies and gentlemen, my colleagues of the House, the subject that I am about to speak on interests the people of whom Abraham Lincoln, the great emancipator, once said: "The Lord must have loved them, He made so many of them—the common people."

Speaking as one of them I know their needs. I know full well their interest is not so much in whether you and I, their Representatives, will appropriate vast sums to build airplanes and battleships, or appropriate vast sums to prosecute giant power projects, great reforestation programs, national and international highways.

These people, whose servants you and I are, or at least ought to be, are not so much interested in what sort of an ambassadorial mansion this Nation shall have in France, Germany, Spain, and the other great foreign countries, but they are, however, interested, yea! vitally interested in their own homes, no matter how humble they may be.

Our great humanitarian and almost inspired President, in his efforts to help all our people, has made great strides toward restoring the morale of the American Nation and, I say to you, my dear friends, that in my humble judgment, the greatest single factor that has contributed toward restoring the confidence of our people is the work that has been done heretofore, through the Home Owners' Loan Corporation.

The Home Owners' Loan Corporation, as you know, was created by an act of the last Congress at the behest of the President to relieve the distressed home owner who was unable to continue payments of his obligation and was threatened with the loss of his home.

The act was loosely drawn because of the lack of provision for a sufficient appropriation to provide for the flood of applications that poured in at its inception, and especially when Congress passed the necessary legislation to guarantee the principal on the bonds, which became legal for trust funds in my State of Pennsylvania.

As a result of this lack of funds, more than 24,000 applications, which had been filed in the Philadelphia district (Delaware, Montgomery, Northampton, Lehigh, Bucks, and Chester Counties) and had not reached the title stage, were thrown into the scrap heap and the Corporation refuses to receive any more applications, although the act specifically provided that applications for loans were to be received for a period of 3 years after its passage. As a result of this, chaos has hit the mortgage market, and banks were unable or unwilling to take up the slack, and because of their unwillingness, within the next 60 days in Philadelphia alone, 2,600 homes are going to sheriff's sale.

Now, that is the condition right at this minute that is facing the people in Philadelphia and, no doubt, in your districts. What are you and I going to do about it? Are we going to sit idly by while the sheriff's hammer knocks down at public sale your constituents' homes and my constituents'

Coming from Philadelphia, the city of homes, as I do, the birthplace of "Old Glory", whose cradle rocked the tiny spark of liberty down in the old statehouse many years ago, I am here to tell you that it does not make much difference whether you and I shall return to Congress or not, but I am telling you that it will mean much to our people back home for you and me, their Representatives, to see to it that sufficient money is appropriated by this Congress so that the Home Owners' Loan Corporation will immediately begin to function where it left off the last day of last November. Again I tell you that it does not make much difference whether you and I come back here to Congress or not, "Old Glory" will still be the grandest flag in the world, America will still be the land of the brave and the home of the free, and I hope the wheels of the new deal will continue to revolve; but I am telling you that if you allow the bankers to take our peoples' homes away from them, my prayer for you will be, God help America!

Mr. Speaker, my saddest recollection as a barefooted boy in Ireland was the eviction of my people on the roadside because they could not meet the demands of the absentee landlords. Therefore I ask you, my colleagues of the House, that you see to it that enough bonds are floated to take care of all our people, the people of your district and my district, who are actually in distress whether they have filed an application for a loan or not when this appropriation is Preserve our homes, where true patriotism and morals are taught at our American mother's knee. I thank you.

THE INDEPENDENT ORDER OF ODD FELLOWS-A GREAT INTERNATIONAL FRATERNITY

Mr. CARTWRIGHT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a speech made by my colleague, the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. PITTENGER].

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CARTWRIGHT. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include therein an address delivered by Congressman PITTENGER, of Minnesota, at an Odd Fellows' meeting held at the Hotel Bradford at Boston, Mass., and over the National Broadcasting radio station on the evening of March 7, 1935.

Congressman PITTENGER is grand sire of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and, as such, has jurisdiction over this fraternal organization throughout the world.

The address delivered by Grand Sire PITTENGER, and which was broadcast by the National Broadcasting Co., is as follows:

My friends of New England, I am glad to meet this magnificent audience of 3,000 persons, members of one of the great fraternal organizations of the world, the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. I am here in the historic city of Boston, sacred soil of America, as the guest of the Odd Fellows of Massachusetts. I am happy to bring the greetings of the sovereign grand lodge not only to this grand jurisdiction, but to the neighboring jurisdictions of New England that are here represented.

England that are here represented.

I join with the members of the local Odd Fellows committee in expressing my appreciation to the National Broadcasting Co. for this opportunity to also talk to a radio audience about our great

I speak only facts when I tell you that Odd Fellowship is not a new institution in Massachusetts. While the first Odd Fellows new institution in Massachusetts. While the first Odd Fellows lodge on the North American Continent was organized at Baltimore, Md., on April 26, 1819, it is to be noted that the second Odd Fellows lodge on the continent was organized at Boston, Mass., on March 26, 1820, just 11 months after the order was introduced in America. The records speak eloquently of a long and distinguished service of Odd Fellowship in Massachusetts. Recent figures show 240 subordinate lodges, with a membership of approximately 55,000 men. In addition, the ladies' auxiliary, known as the "Rebekahs", numbers 212 lodges, with a membership of approximately 31,000 sisters. With these figures before me, I can say without any exaggeration that the sovereign grand lodge is proud of the membership of this great jurisdiction of Massachusetts.

Now, I want to talk to this audience for a few minutes tonight about fraternities. America has been blest with numerous fraternal organizations or lodges. Perhaps on no other continent have fraternal organizations flourished and prospered as they have here. Why fraternal organizations? What is their purpose? What have they done? These are some of the questions that you tonight may be asking, and especially if you are not members of any fraternity. I am glad to answer those questions.

Mankind has traveled a long road from barbarism to fraternalism. There was a time when the law of the jungle prevailed among the peoples of the earth. Tribes were the unit, and they moved about from place to place. When the aged or the crippled or the helpless infants impeded the progress of the tribe, they were car-helpless infants impeded the progress of the tribe, they were Carried out into the woods and left to perish. This was the rule of the survival of the fittest. As man developed into a civilized state, the rule still persisted. Man was a selfish creature, and self-interest crowded out all other impulses. This was true in

Then one day, on the 26th of April 1819, five men met at a tavern or hotel in Baltimore. They had come to this country from England. They had belonged to an Odd Fellows lodge in England. They met to form the first lodge here. That was about 116 years They met to form the first lodge here. That was about 116 years ago. Those men were strangers in America. They were foreigners. They were friendless. They faced the prejudice and suspicion of the people here. They decided to organize on this continent a new fraternity, based upon the idea that one should assist a brother in adversity and misfortune. They decided to do away with the law of the jungle, and to bear one another's burdens. The law of friendship and love was to replace the law of selfishness and hatred. And so the first Odd Fellows lodge was organized.

Those men were filled with a desire to render service to humanity. They were about to undertake one of the most important tasks ever given to man to perform. They did not know it, but they were about to organize the first great international fraternal organization in America. They must have talked in terms of fraternity. I visualize them, Thomas Wildey and four others, as they sat around the table. Someone said, as they talked matters over:

"We must have a definite understanding as to what our lodge is going to do. No Odd Fellow is to be buried in a pauper's grave, is going to do. No Odd Fellow is to be buried in a pauper's grave, by strangers. We will give to departed brothers a last loyal measure of devotion and respect. Tender hands will place the body, from by strangers. by strangers. We will give to departed brothers a last loyal measure of devotion and respect. Tender hands will place the body, from which life has departed, in its last resting place, and loving hearts will keep green the memory of the good deeds of the departed. We pledge this to one another, and we are going to organize a fraternity along these lines."

Then another brother probably remarked:

"But we have a duty to the living. The widows and orphaned children of our departed members need care and attention. We will help them with food, and clothing, and fuel if needed. The orphans must have a home and an education, so that they will orphans must have a home and an education, so that they will develop into clean and law-abiding men and women. We are going to take care of these children when death takes from them the protection of a father or mother."

And as they continued the discussion into the late hours of the night some brother, perhaps, said something like this:

"Some day we will be too old to work. That will also be true of other members of our fraternity. I do not like to see an old brother who may have lost all of his property go to the almshouse, We ought to take care of our aged members. We should not leave them to the mercy of strangers."

And so, in some such fashion as this, Odd Fellowship came into existence. I do not here trace its progress. It has had its ups and downs, its periods of prosperity and of depression. But always this great fraternity, after which the others are patterned, has grown and enlarged the field of opportunity to meet the increasing demands of mankind.

Starting with one lodge of five members in 1819 our order has spread over the world. We have chartered lodges in Australasia, Czechoslovakia, Denmark, Latin America, Netherlands, Norway, Poland, Sweden, and Switzerland.

Our order is world-wide. It teaches the great principles of friendship, love, and truth. They are taught in every language, and every tongue can speak its message.

On the North American Continent latest figures show approximately 15,000 lodges for men and 10,000 lodges for women. Our membership of this continent consists of over 1,100,000 men and over 700,000 women. In the matter of finances, the funds of the order invested in lodge buildings and otherwise are approximately $82,000,000. There are on the continent 65 homes devoted to the care of aged persons and orphaned children. These homes have a financial value of over $13,000,000. These are facts. They permit of only one conclusion, namely, that the Independent Order of Odd Fellows is solid and stable, and able to carry out the great purposes for which it was organized. These lodges and homes are the working tools, so to speak, which we use in carrying out the commands and obligations of our fraternity. Those commands and obligations are "to visit the sick, relieve the distressed, bury the dead, and educate the orphan." In 25,000 local units or organizations or lodges this program for the betterment units or organizations or lodges this program for the betterment of mankind has been enacted.

It is true that changing conditions have somewhat modified our program. For example, 40 or 50 years ago it was the common thing for the members to volunteer as watchers or attendants at the bedside of the sick, the brothers taking turn night after night for that purpose. In many sections this is still done. Today, in the large cities, hospitals and nurses have done away with this ancient custom. But regardless of economic and gove ernmental changes, the old rule that nothing of value can be substituted for friends still prevails. Without friends we are helpless. Fraternal contacts make friends, and there is no greater asset in the world. No governmental relief can ever be as effective as the help of a friend.

Let me give you an actual case. Last November I was out in the country, on the old homestead, down in Indiana, and I visited the Odd Fellows' lodge where I was initiated. At the close of an interesting meeting the presiding officer stated that Brother Jones had been ill with pneumonia for a month; that 40 acres of corn had been ill with pneumonia for a month; that 40 acres of corn was in the field and ought to be shucked and put in the corn crib; that in a couple of days every member who could do so was requested to come over and help harvest the crop. Now, this was fraternity. It was also Odd Fellowship. No governmental agency has ever functioned or ever will function as efficiently as did the presiding officer of this little country lodge on this occasion. He talked the language of friendship and brotherly love, and he translated the language of friendship and brotherly love, and he translated the language of friendship and brotherly love, and he translated the language of friendship and brotherly love, and he translated the language of friendship and brotherly love. lated it into action.

lated the language of friendship and brotherly love, and he trainslated the language of friendship and brotherly love, and he trainslated it into action.

Now, I presume that some of you folks will say that this is a sales talk. And I want to frankly admit that it is just exactly that. I want to sell to you the idea that fraternity and fraternal organizations in the United States and Canada are worthy of consideration by every man and woman eligible to knock at their doors. Fraternal organizations that have acquired any standing have done some good in the world. The Independent Order of Odd Fellows has good wishes and good will for all of its sister fraternities. All fraternities have the same great objective. Yet I say to you now that every statement I have made tonight, or that I will make, can be verified by the records. To you who have never become interested in fraternities, I am glad to tell you that you need that association more than it needs you. You do no one a favor to join the Independent Order of Odd Fellows or any other fraternal organization. They honor you when they accept your application for membership. The advantages are largely one-sided, and in favor of the individual who knocks at the door of the lodge room in the belief that friendship is a priceless jewel to be won by service for your fellow men.

lodge room in the belief that friendship is a priceless jewel to be won by service for your fellow men.

If we pass by these great objectives of Odd Fellowship, to visit the sick, relieve the distressed, and to bury the dead, without further discussion, we still have another great field of its activity that ought to appeal to every man and woman who wants to engage in a noble undertaking. I refer to the 65 homes which this order maintains on the continent. Those homes assure care and comfort for our aged members during the remaining years of their life. But the great objective of the Odd Fellows' homes is the care and education of the orphaned children of our deceased members. Surely no person listening to this talk who has ever seen a child, with its father and mother gone, with need for care and guidance, in a world where the great mass of mankind live to themses alone, can deny to that child the privilege of a home and an education. Now, these Odd Fellow homes to which I refer open the gateway of opportunity to just that class of children. Our hearts beat faster and our souls feel happier in the thought that these orphaned children are furnished a home and are given an education, and are turned out into the world staunch and true citizens of the country where they reside. Each member of our great fraternal organization can feel a well-earned satisfaction in the thought that he or she has contributed in a modest way to this noble purpose. No governmental institution can ever perform this great work as efficiently as fraternal organizations can do it. Those of you who respond to the appeal of patriotism can well consider the great patriotic task which the fraternal organizations of America, including the one for which I speak tonight, have undertaken. There is nothing that will contribute more to the stability of government patriotic task which the fraternal organizations of America, including the one for which I speak tonight, have undertaken. There is nothing that will contribute more to the stability of government than to have the young men and young women trained in the duties and the responsibilities of citizenship. That is just the thing that every great fraternal organization in America is doing with every orphaned child that comes within the field of their endeavor. This magic circle of service awaits you folks who have never comprehended the adage, "It is more blessed to give than to receive." receive

The Independent Order of Odd Fellows is nonpolitical and non-sectarian. Men and women of all political parties and of all creeds are welcome if they will subscribe to a belief in the God of the universe, and if they believe in the gospel of love. Our broad platform in this regard may well be expressed in the lan-guage of Larry Ho, our Minnesota poet, who said:

"I haven't any creed that would Stand a questioning test, I only play the game And do my level best;

To earn three honest meals a day,
To sing and dream and laugh, To split my sorrows and my joys No worse than half and half;

To carry love within my heart, A smile upon my face, To add a little sunshine, To this earthly dwelling place;

And out of simple human things, To gather now and then The deeper wisdom that can see How God still walks with men."

The ritual of Odd Fellowship is of Biblical origin. The beautiful story of the friendship of David and Jonathan is a part of our teachings. The parable of the good Samaritan is likewise essentiations.

tial to the ritual of the order. Then the great lesson of truth is presented to those who come within our circle. Odd Fellowship treats "truth" as one of the great virtues. Indeed, we need more of this characteristic among the peoples of the earth today. Truth and education should go hand in hand. When citizens of stability and character think and act the truth, they have reached a high pinnacle of civilization.

"Cried the sword, I ran it through With my bloody blade But behold it does not show That a thrust was made.

"Cried the fire, I burned it black With devouring flame, While the zealots pile the pyre But 'tis now the same.

"Cried the bomb, I blew it up With an anarch burst But behold it is the same As it was at first.

"Then it was That weapons knew
They in vain had wrought,
Naught on earth can kill a thought But another thought."

In conclusion, my friends, the symbol of Odd Fellowship is the three links, a sacred chain which we hope in the years to come will bind mankind together as brothers. The "motto" of Odd Fellowship is "Friendship, love, and truth", and the order welcomes to its membership those who subscribe to these great principles.

BONUS LEGISLATION

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 5 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Speaker, I am advised that Wednesday the Ways and Means Committee of this House voted 14 to 11 to send to the floor for consideration, H. R. 3896, which is known as the "Vinson bill", and which is a bill to provide for the payment of the World War adjusted-service certificates.

I am also advised that there is now under consideration a rule which, if adopted, will make it possible for H. R. 1, which is the Patman bill, for the payment of adjusted-service certificates, to be offered as a substitute for the Vinson bill.

This will, of course, bring before the House for immediate consideration a subject which has demanded the attention of the people of this Nation for a great many years; that is, the payment of the adjusted-compensation certificates held by the veterans of the World War.

It will bring this question to the immediate consideration of the House in two forms.

One, under the Patman bill, which provides for the payment of the adjusted-compensation certificates through the issuance of currency in the form of United States notes, and the other, the Vinson bill, which provides that the payment of said certificates shall be made through the United States Treasury; and it is generally admitted that since the sum to pay the certificates is a little in excess of $2,000,000,000, that this amount of money cannot be raised by taxation; thus it will be necessary to raise the funds for the payment of the certificates through the issuance of Government securities.

By reason of the difference in the method of paying the certificates, as provided in the two bills, there has arisen quite a controversy throughout the Nation as to which of the bills is the better.

That, together with the fact that the Vinson bill is receiving the backing of the heads of the American Legion, has caused a great deal of pressure, through the medium of telegrams and letters, to be placed upon the Members of Congress, urging them to support one bill or the other.

I received well in excess of 50 telegrams yesterday and the day before from American Legion posts and individuals of the Legion in my district and State, urging me to support the Vinson bill.

And right here I want to say that, in my opinion, the rank and file of the American Legion, and other service organizations, and the ex-service men who are not members of any organization, are not now, nor have they ever been, concerned with the method by which the money to pay their certificates would be raised; and, although the Vinson bill is receiving the backing of the heads of the American Legion, I am sure that the rank and file of that organization is not at all concerned with which of these measures is finally enacted into

By reason of the above statement, I wish to take this opportunity of advising the House, the citizenship of my district and State, and the ex-service men of the Nation as a whole as to what my stand on this matter is and will be.

I continue to hear statements made in cloakrooms and corridors, on the floor of this House, and in general conversation that the Vinson bill was introduced for the purpose of muddying the water, and in the hope that by the confusion caused in the ranks of those who favored the payment of the soldiers' bonus the passage of any soldiers' bonus legislation in this session of Congress would be blocked. Whether or not this is true, I do not say. I am sure, however, that by its introduction the ex-service men of this Nation, who would be the beneficiaries of bonus legislation, have lost ground which it will be difficult for them to regain.

If the rule above referred to is adopted, making it possible for the Patman bill to be substituted for the Vinson bill, the Patman bill will, of course, come up for consideration by the House first. That will necessitate a vote by the House upon the Patman bill first; and were I to follow the strict mandate laid down to me by the telegrams which I have referred to I would be forced to vote against the Patman bill. But if the Patman bill passed, even though I did vote against it, then the only recorded vote that I would have would be a vote against the payment of the soldiers' bonus, because it would then be adopted and the House would have no opportunity to vote for the Vinson bill.

By so doing I would break faith with, and my pledge to, the ex-service men and the interested parties in my district. Thus I shall vote for the first one of those measures which it is my opportunity to do.

I, of course, have my own idea as to which one of these plans is the better, but by reason of the great need of the ex-service men of this Nation, and by reason of the fact that I think they are so justly entitled to the payment of these adjusted certificates, I shall not quibble over the means by which they are paid.

I am cognizant of the fact that if the Patman bill passes both the House and the Senate and the President vetoes the measure and we are not able to pass it over his yeto that it will be immediately said by some that had we passed the Vinson bill it would not have been vetoed. This might truly be the situation. But I am constrained to the opinion, after many times having been advised through the press and by other means, that the President is at this time opposed to the payment of the adjusted-compensation certificates; that he would veto any measure which provided for their immediate payment in cash.

This is a chance that I, and the rest of you ladies and gentlemen of this body will have to take, and I sincerely hope that you will appreciate the obligation that this Government owes to those boys who, in a time of need, so willingly took up her defense, and with a smile on their lips and a song in their heart, marched out to do battle for the protection of our hard-won democracy and the democracy of a strife-ridden world, and will cast your votes for the payment of the adjusted-compensation certificates in cash in whatever manner the opportunity first is afforded you. [Applause.]

WHAT THE GOVERNMENT IS DOING IN THE WAY OF PUBLIC POWER IN THE TENNESSEE VALLEY AREA

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Record by inserting therein an address I delivered in Washington a few days ago.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, under the permission granted to me to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I insert the following address delivered by me before the National Conference of the Public Ownership League of America in Washington, D. C., February 25, 1935:

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, we are in the beginning of a new era in the development of our civilization; the dawning of the electric age.

If we but make the proper use of the great wealth of electric energy which nature has placed at our command, then we will have spread out before us and our children the most glorious period mankind has ever known.

Outside of the soil from which we live, electricity is the greatest natural resource in all the world. There is enough hydroelectric power in our navigable streams and their tributaries to light all the homes, cook all the meals, and run all the machinery in America. It is national wealth and should be used for the benefit of all.

The first voice that ever broke over this earth in the very dawn of creation was, "Let there be light"; and from the beginning of Genesis to the end of Revelation there is not a word said about the right of the Power Trust to own it or to control its distribution.

Electricity is a divine gift. It was offered to man for centuries—yes, for ages—before he ever learned to harness it or comprehend its worth

Throughout uncounted centuries Almighty God wrote his name in fire on the midnight darkness. His thunders hurled their recurring challenge to come and investigate. Throughout succeeding ages, man stood appalled and viewed with fear and trembling this terrible, scintillating, awe-inspiring, and sometimes death-dealing, apparition.

It was not until about 200 years ago that glorious old Benjamin Franklin, experimenting with his key and kite, first solved that ancient mystery, captured from the lightning's flash an electric spark, and revealed to the world a new source of energy that was destined to change the civilization of mankind.

A little more than 50 years ago, Thomas A. Edison, the greatest inventive genius of the human race, inserted a loop of wire into a vacuum tube, generated into it an electric spark, and created the first incandescent lamp, the first electric light.

By that one act he did more to change the course of our civilization than has any other human being who has ever lived in all the tides of time.

He not only gave us a new method of lighting our halls and our homes, but he also gave us the spark that fires the gas that drives the motor machine—the automobile, the airplane, and the submarine. He made possible the X-ray and the radio. He eliminated time and space, gave us a new system of overland transportation, enabled us to navigate the air, and taught us to roam with safety on the bottom of the seas.

He made possible all that great multiplicity of electrical equipment and appliances now used to lift from the shoulders of toiling humanity the great burdens under which mankind has struggled since the beginning of time.

In other words, he gave us the greatest ascendency over the forces of nature and the greatest command over our surroundings ever attained in all the history of the human race.

The generation and distribution of hydroelectric power to reach every human being in America, at rates based upon the cost of production and distribution, is one of the very serious problems with which we now have to deal. The power business is necessarily a monopoly. Since no monopoly affecting the lives of vast numbers of people should be entrusted to uncontrolled private selfish interests, it therefore follows that this monopoly should be controlled or operated through or by some public agency. Especially is that true with reference to the hydroelectric power in our navigable streams and their tributaries, which, as I said a moment ago, is national wealth, public property, and should be used for ago, is national wealth, public property, and should be used for the benefit of all the American people.

We have in the Tennessee Valley a great national power project, through which this plan is being worked out. As most of you know, I led the fight in the House for the bill creating the Tennessee Valley Authority; and especially for section 12, which was the very heart of the bill, introduced in the Senate by Senator Norris and in the House by myself, giving the Authority the right to build transmission lines, sell and distribute power, and build additional dams on the Tennessee River. I will not bore you with the details of the battle waged over that section of the measure. Suffice it to say that we won out, and that salutary provision was incorporated in the law as finally passed and approved by the President, creating the Tennessee Valley Authority.

Let me pause here to say that the T. V. A. is one of the most valuable organizations connected with this or any other Government. It is literally building for us a new civilization and is making it possible for us to enjoy the full and liberal use of electric energy—one of the greatest blessings mankind has ever known. known.

The T. V. A. is one of the most profitable investments the American people have ever made. It is now saving them millions upon millions of dollars every year, by bringing down electric light and power rates all over the country. By establishing its "yardstick" for the measurement of these rates and informing the public as to the value of electric energy, when based upon the cost of production, transmission, and distribution, it is forcing a reduction of light and nower rates from one end of the country. a reduction of light and power rates from one end of the country to the other, and these reductions have just begun.

We are going to keep up this fight until we place electric lights and power in reach of every human being in America, at rates and power in reach of every human being in America, at rates they can afford to pay.

As you probably know, the first contract for the sale of electric energy from Muscle Shoals was made by the T. V. A. with the city of Tupelo, Miss., my home town. It went into effect on February 7, 1934.

At the time of the passage of this measure, the power companies were huming power from the Government at Muscle Shoals panies were buying power from the Government at Muscle Shoals at 2 mills per kilowatt-hour and selling it to domestic consumers at 2 mills per kilowatt-hour and selling it to domestic consumers 300 yards away, in Florence, Ala., and throughout that entire section of the country, at the following monthly rates: 10 cents per kilowatt-hour, first 30 kilowatt-hours; 8 cents per kilowatt-hour, next 300 kilowatt-hours; 6 cents per kilowatt-hour, next 350 kilowatt-hours; 5 cents per kilowatt-hour, next 350 kilowatt-hours; 5 cents per kilowatt-hour excess.

This price of 2 mills per kilowatt-hour was yielding the Government a fair profit, and if all the power the Muscle Shoals project was capable of producing had been generated and sold at the dam at 2 mills per kilowatt-hour, it would have amortized the Government's investment within a reasonable time.

The Power Authority of New York found, after a thorough investigation, that if 80 percent of the power to be produced by the St. Lawrence project were marketed, it could be generated and transmitted 300 miles for a little less than 3½ mills per kilowatthour. That would also provide for amortizing the investment.

Therefore, it will be seen that the Government was losing nothing, but was really making money by selling this power at the ing, but was really making money by selling this power at the Muscle Shoals dam at 2 mills per kilowatt-hour. And yet you will see, from examining the rates which I have just quoted, that 1,000 kilowatt-hours, which cost the power company the total sum of $2, when sold to them at 2 mills per kilowatt-hour, was sold by the power company to the ultimate consumer for $66.10—that is, where one consumer used the entire 1,000 kilowatt-hours.

But if it was sold to 100 consumers, using 30 kilowatt-hours each a month, which was about the average domestic consumption in that area at that time, then this 1,000 kilowatt-hours, which cost the company $2, would cost those consumers $100. One of those small domestic consumers, who used 30 kilowatt-hours per month, paid $3 for electricity which cost the power company a total of 6 cents at the dam and which, according to the New York Power Authority, could have been transmitted 300 miles and sold for less than 33 cents.

This 1,000 kilowatt-hours could have been transmitted 300 miles and sold for a little less than $3.25; yet, when sold to these small consumers, not 300 miles away, but 300 yards away, it cost them the sum of $100

My God, what a racket! No wonder they did not want the Norris Rankin Muscle Shoals bill passed, with the salutary provisions contained in section 12. On that spread between the $2 paid for this power at the dam, and the $100 wrung from the helpless consumers at Florence in Alabama, Iuka, Corinth, Booneneipiess consumers at Florence in Alabama, flika, Corinta, Booneville, Baldwin, Nettleton, Fulton, Aberdeen, Columbus, Macon, Miss., and other points in Alabama, Mississippi, and Tennessee—on that spread are based the holding companies that are now spending millions of dollars on propaganda—telegrams, letters, petitions, publicity, and lobbyists—trying to defeat the administration's efforts to pass legislation that would rescue the American people from the ravages of these racketeers.

Under the Tupelo contract, the following retail "yardstick" rates for domestic consumers were established: First 50 kilowattrates for domestic consumers were established: First 50 kilowatthours, per month, at 3 cents per kilowatt-hour. Next 150 kilowatt-hours, per month, at 2 cents per kilowatt-hour. Next 200 kilowatt-hours, per month, at 1 cent per kilowatt-hour. Excess: Over 400 kilowatt-hours, per month, at 4 mills per kilowatt-hour. Compare these rates with the rates the power companies were charging in the Muscle Shoals area 2 years ago, and you will find the comparative cost of this 1,000 kilowatt-hours to be as

	Former power company rates	T. V. A. rates
10 cents per kilowatt-hour first 30 kilowatt-hours	$3.00 13.60	$0.90 3.60
	21. 00	2.40
7 cents per kilowatt-hour next 300 kilowatt-hours
7 cents per kilowatt-hour next 300 kilowatt-hours 6 cents per kilowatt-hour next 350 kilowatt-hours 5 cents per kilowatt-hour next 150 kilowatt-hours.	21. 00 7. 50	1.40

Thus, it will be seen that this 1,000 kilowatt-hours now cost a customer in Tupelo, Miss., 75 miles from Muscle Shoals, the sum of $8.90, while under the old Power Trust rates it would have cost him $66.10 within 300 yards of the Muscle Shoals Dam, where it cost the power company the sum of $2.

At that time the power companies were charging the same rates for commercial lighting that they were for domestic use. The commercial "yardstick" rates provided by the T. V. A. in the Tupelo contract are as follows:

Tupelo contract are as follows:

BASIC COMMERCIAL RATE FOR SERVICE EFFECTIVE FEBRUARY 7, 1934

Available to commercial customers taking service from the municipality's secondary system: First 250 kilowatt-hours, per month, at 3 cents per kilowatthour.

Next 750 kilowatt-hours, per month, at 2 cents per kilowatt-

Next 1,000 kilowatt-hours, per month, at 1 cent per kilowatt-hour. Excess: Over 2,000 kilowatt-hours, per month, at 0.8 cents per month.

Even with a slight surcharge of 10 percent added, this brought an enormous saving to the merchants of that city. I have before me some duplicate receipts showing what these commercial consumers paid under the old rates and what they paid under the new T. V. A. rates.

Here is one merchant who used 210 kilowatt-hours in January 1934, for which he paid $17.78 under the old rates. In March he used 311 kilowatt-hours for which he paid $9.59, under the T. V. A.

Another used 821 kilowatt-hours in January, for which he paid $62.85 under the old rates. He used 840 kilowatt-hours in March, for which he paid $21.23 under the T. V. A. rates. These are typical cases and show what these reductions amount to in dollars and cents

The industrial rates in Tupelo under the T. V. A. contract are as follows:

BASIC INDUSTRIAL RATE FOR SERVICE, EFFECTIVE FEBRUARY 7, 1934

Available to industrial power users having demands in excess of 10 kilowatts. Service at primary-distribution voltage or secondary-distribution voltage at discretion of municipality.

Demand charge: $1 per kilowatt per month.

Demand: Maximum integrated 30-minute period.

Energy charge: First 10,000 kilowatt-hours per month at 10 mills per kilowatt-

Next 25,000 kilowatt-hours per month at 6 mills per kilowatthour.

Next 65,000 kilowatt-hours per month at 4 mills per kilowatthour.

Next 400,000 kilowatt-hours per month at 3 mills per kilowatthour.

Excess over 500,000 kilowatt-hours per month at 2.5 mills per kilowatt-hour.

kilowatt-hour.

The tremendous savings made as a result of these new rates has helped our struggling small industries to pull through what otherwise would have been a most trying and difficult period. I see here one small industry in Tupelo consumed 1,680 kilowatt-hours during the month of January, for which it paid $92.19 under the old rates. In March, this same company consumed 2,080 kilowatt-hours, for which it paid $56.23 under the T. V. A. rates.

A cotton mill consumed 204,803 kilowatt-hours of electric energy in January 1934 at a cost of $3,181.33, under the old rates. In March it used 258,000 kilowatt-hours, for which it paid $1,896.40 under the T. V. A. rates. It used 26 percent more power in March than it did in January, and yet its power bill was reduced 40 percent.

If this cotton mill had paid the same rates for power in March that it paid in January, this 258,000 kilowatt-hours would have cost $4,008.

In other words, that cotton mill saved $2,112 on its March power bill. Spread that over 12 months, and at that rate this one small cotton mill would save $25,000 a year on its power bill

These unquestioned facts and figures show what the American people would save on their electric light and power bills if we could only get electric energy furnished to them at rates based upon the cost of production and distribution.

This contract has been in effect for I year, and here are some of the net results:

You will note that the use of electric energy for both domestic and commercial consumption more than doubled during that first year. The average monthly domestic consumption went from 42 kilowatt-hours to 103 kilowatt-hours, and the average monthly commercial consumption went from 183 kilowatt-hours to 348 kilowatt-hours, while the use of electrical appliances grew by leaps and bounds.

One eminent authority, in referring to this Tupelo report, says:
"In my 37 years' experience I don't believe I have ever observed such a remarkable demonstration of what can be done by a low-priced electricity. You will observe the consumers and the average kilowatt-hour per customer have more than doubled. The total sale of electricity has been approximately two and one-half times what it formerly was. The refrigerators have jumped from 195 to 559. The electric ranges have jumped from 15 to 150, or 10 times as many electric ranges. Water heaters started from nothing to 43; and almost a similar experience with the commercial users of elecand almost a similar experience with the commercial users of electricity."

Here is a report made by the mayor of Tupelo at the end of the first year of operation under this T. V. A. contract. It shows the most gratifying results, and is sufficient within itself to answer all the critics of the Tupelo contract. I read from the report:

I call your attention to the fact that there is included an item of $6,657.32 taxes, or included in lieu of taxes, which a private company would probably have had to pay. Note also an item of $5,227.21 to cover depreciation; also, items for interest and sinking funds on outstanding debts. In fact every possible element of expense is provided for, and then there is a net profit balance of $21,700.88

As was pointed out by one editorial writer, the result of this first year's operation in Tupelo was much better even than this statement of Mayor Nanney's of that city would indicate. He points out that the gross income for the year was $88,295.04, and that the expenses of operation were $44,962.48, leaving a net profit of $43,332.56. From this sum was deducted $11,954.42 for taxes and depreciation, $7,151.10 for interest on bonds and notes, and $3,173.96 was placed in the reserve account for emergencies. Therefore, it will be seen that the profit really accruing to the city included also these last three items, which added to the $21,700.88, would show a total profit of $43,332.56.

I submit that this is a marvelous showing, one of which any city might well be proud, and one that all the propaganda of the Power Trust cannot discount or explain away.

What is being done in Tupelo is also being done, more or less, in Corinth, Amory, Booneville, Iuka, Fulton, Pontotoc, and every other city or town in that area that is receiving power from Muscle Shoals at the T. V. A. rates.

It has been contended by the opposition that the T. V. A. rates are too low and that the T. V. A. does not take all elements of cost into account. That is not true. They count every element of cost, including 5 percent of their gross income to be paid the State of into account. That is not true. They count every element of cost, including 5 percent of their gross income to be paid the State of Alabama in lieu of taxes, and then get more than twice as much for this electricity as the power companies were paying for it before this bill was passed. The power companies did not kick then. They were getting this power at 2 mills a kilowatt-hour, which they said was all it was worth, since it was then, and is now, being produced, according to the Army engineers' report, at 1½ mills per kilowatt-

But the power companies, and especially the holding companies which own and control them, say that they have many items of expense the T. V. A. does not have to meet. That is true. Here are some of them:

some of them:

1. Dividends on watered stock.

2. Tributes to holding company.

3. Enormous salaries which grafting officials and directors pay themselves—from $25,000 to $250,000 a year—invariably taken out of the companies' assets at a time when its stocks have declined to the companies assets at a time when its stocks have declined to the vanishing point and when both the operating company and the holding company are hopelessly bankrupt.

4. Bonuses and other rake-offs, some of which make the salary of a member of the T. V. A. look like a tip to the waiter.

5. Money spent to hire high-priced lawyers for their political influences such as are now bombarding Congress against the utility

6. Expenses of propaganda such as they are now spending by the millions on telegrams, letters, etc., trying to browbeat Congress into defeating the administration's bill to put an end to racketeering through holding companies.

7. Then there is the money spent to buy up newspapers and magazines. They used to buy advertisements in newspapers. They then began to buy headlines, news columns, and editorials.

Now they just buy the papers or a controlling interest in them and hire their own editors and reporters.

8. Then there are their expensive lobbyists around Congress and the various State legislatures, to say nothing of the campaign expenses they have to put up for their candidates for office.

All these things cost money, and there are many other items that I have not mentioned, such as radio speakers, school-book writers, college professors, that have been found on their pay rolls.

writers, college professors, that have been found on their pay rolls.

All these things are expensive, even when paid for in watered stocks. No wonder they had to spread the price of $2 worth of electricity and sell it to the defenseless consumers in the Muscle Shoals area of Mississippi, Alabama, and Tennessee for $100. Otherwise, how would the Commonwealth & Southern, one of these holding companies that is now bombarding Congress against the utility bill, how would they have got the money to pay the president of that concern $130,000 salary in 1932—more than twice the salary of the President of the United States after he returned his cut; how else could they have met such expenditures in the depths of the greatest depression of all times without exploiting the helpless consumers of electric lights and power?

You see, the T. V. A. does not have to meet such expenditures, and therefore it is able to sell power at rates based upon the cost of production and distribution.

Now let's turn to the question of rural electrification. This is

Now let's turn to the question of rural electrification. This is one of the most important phases of this great program—taking cheap electricity to the farm homes of America.

If we can supply every farmer with electric lights and power at T. V. A. rates, so that he may light his home and his barn, pump his water, run his refrigerator, electric churn, radio and other necessary electrical appliances, at a reasonable cost, we will be giving him real farm relief that will make farm life more pleasant, more profitable, more attractive, and more abundant.

Shortly after the passage of the Muscle Shoals bill, I began to organize county electric power associations in the district which I have the honor to represent. The object of these associations was to get power from Muscle Shoals at T. V. A. rates, not only for was to get power from Muscle Shoals at T. V. A. rates, not only for the people in the towns and cities, but to get it carried to every farm home in the county, if possible.

I want to call your attention to what has been done through the County Electric Power Association in Alcorn County, Miss. In my opinion, they have the ideal system, and I heartily commend it to the people of every section of the country. The power system in Corinth, the county seat of Alcorn County, was formerly owned by the Mississippi Power Co. It was sold to the Tennessee Valley Authority, which in turn sold it to the Alcorn County Electric Authority, which in turn sold it to the Alcorn County Electric Power Association, which was incorporated under the laws of the State of Mississippi as a non-profit-sharing institution. During the summer of 1934 this county association entered into this contract with the Tennessee Valley Authority to purchase all of its electrical properties in the county, and at the same time entered into a contract with the T. V. A. for the purchase of electric energy at wholesale.

Although the rates in Corinth had already been reduced by the Dower company as a result of the example set by the T. V. A. in the power company as a result of the example set by the T. V. A. in the publication of its yardstick rates and the public demand for rate reduction which the example of the T. V. A. had inspired, yet this Alcorn County Electric Power Association immediately gave the consumers an additional reduction in rates averaging about the consumers an additional reduction in rates averaging about 50 percent.

For instance, 50 kilowatt-hours which cost a domestic consumer $4.60 under the rates prevailing before the T. V. A. Act was passed had been reduced by the power company to $3.50, and the Alcorn County Electric Power Association reduced it to $1.50. As I pointed out recently, 50 kilowatt-hours of electricity a month costs a farmer in Iowa $7.50; in Kentucky, $4.60; $6 in New York; $3.25 in Virginia; and $6.20 in Arkansss—under the rates now charged by the power companies where they serve any farmers at all.

One hundred kilowatt-hours under the rates prevailing at the

One hundred kilowatt-hours under the rates prevailing at the time of the passage of the T. V. A. Act would have cost a consumer in Corinth $8.60 a month, and if he had lived in the rural districts, there would have been an additional amount added as a line charge. The power company reduced it to $5.35 to a consumer in Corinth, and the county association immediately reduced it to $2.50 it to $2.50.

Now, remember that the county association made its rates to apply to the people in the rural districts the same as in the city of Corinth. Three hundred kilowatt-hours a month, at the time of the passage of the T. V. A. Act, would have cost a domestic consumer in Corinth $23.60. That was reduced to $9.35 by the power company after the T. V. A. Act went into effect and the county association reduced it to $5.50.

At the time the T. V. A. Act was passed 1,000 kilowatt-hours a month, which by the way, was costing the power company $2 at Muscle Shoals, 50 miles from Corinth, when sold to one domestic consumer in the city of Corinth would have cost him $66.10. At the present time it costs him $8.90, whether he lives in the city of Corinth, in the town of Rienzi, or out in the rural district.

Of course, even under the rates now charged by the power companies, after they have made their boasted reductions, this 1,000 kilowatt-hours a month would cost a farmer $19.59 in Georgia, panies, after they have made their boasted reductions, this 1,000 kilowatt-hours a month would cost a farmer $19.59 in Georgia, $19.80 in Pennsylvania, $34 in Kentucky, $41.89 in Maine, $35.90 in Arkansas, $45.50 in Virginia, $46.50 in Iowa.

Under the contract with the T. V. A., this county association is to pay for the entire system over a period of years out of the earnings from its operation. In addition to the present distribution system, its contract provides that the T. V. A. is to build approximately 100 miles of rural lines. This will furnish a network of lines reaching into practically every community in the county.

As I said, the electric rates throughout the county are uniform and members share equally in the benefits of the program, regardless of their location. Rates to the residents in the city are identical with the rates paid by the farmers in the rural districts. The property originally transferred to this county association by the T. V. A. was valued at $114,633, and it was estimated that the cost of the construction of these rural lines will be about $125,000. The county association is obligated to reimburse the T. V. A. for the full cost of these properties and to pay interest at the rate of the full cost of these properties and to pay interest at the rate of 3½ percent on the deferred payments.

Each consumer buys a membership in the association, which he may pay for in full or he may pay by the month at the rate of 1 cent per kilowatt-hour of electricity up to 100 kilowatt-hours. For instance, if he pays $1.50 for 50 kilowatt-hours of electricity, he pays then 50 cents, or 1 cent per kilowatt-hour, into the county association. If he only uses 25 kilowatt-hours, he pays 25 cents a month; if he uses 100 kilowatt-hours, he pays $1 into the County Association; but no matter how much more he uses, the monthly installment will not amount to more them. installment will not amount to more than $1.

I have before me a report of the Alcorn County Electric Power Association for the first 6 months of its existence. It shows that the gross operating revenues during that 6 months amounted to $38,460.26, and the gross operating expenses, including maintenance and taxes, amounted to $19,884.29. This gave the association a net operating revenue of $18,595.97. After all adjustments for depreciation and for interest on long-term debt, there remained a balance net profit of $14,435 to be transferred to surplus. This did not include any of the proceeds from the amortization charge of 1 cent per kilowatt-hour. If these proceeds had been included, the net balance available for transfer to surplus account would be approximately $19.370. approximately $19.370.

At this rate the present properties of this county association would be completely amortized within 3 to 4 years, and the entire cost, including the construction of the 100 miles of rural power lines, would be entirely wiped out within 6 or 7 years.

At the same time it has given the commercial consumers reduc-At the same time it has given the commercial consumers reductions averaging 50 percent on top of the reductions that had already been made as result of the activities of the T. V. A. One hundred kilowatt-hours, which a year ago cost a commercial consumer in Corinth $7, now costs him $4.30, including the $1 per month amortization fund, which makes his electric bill amount to $3.30. A merchant who used 300 kilowatt-hours a year ago paid $21 for it; today it will cost him $9.35. One who used 800 kilowatthours a year ago paid $52 for it; today it will cost him $20.35. One who used 1,400 kilowatt-hours a month a year ago paid $82 for it; today it costs him $29.15.

Reductions have also been made in the industrial power rate which have enabled the many small industries in the city of Corinth to keep going, pay their employees, and to show reasonable profits on their operations during the time this contract has been in effect.

I commend this county unit system because I believe it is the best plan that has yet been developed to reach all the people in a given area with cheap electric lights and power and to treat them all alike.

It is rebuilding the farm homes of that section. Someone has said that it is taking "light to the homes and hope to the hearts" of those distressed farmers. It gives them the power to run the farm machinery, enables them to enjoy all the comforts and conveniences that the city or town affords, and lifts the burdens of drudgery from the shoulders of the farmers, their vives and their children. It is literally building for them a wives, and their children. It is literally building for them a new civilization.

This is not a temporary proposition, but is to last for all time to come. To me it is the consummation of a life's dream. It is worth something to live in this marvelous age, this dawn of the electric era, and to watch the wonderful developments now being carried forward.

But to me it means more than that. To have been one of the But to me it means more than that. To have been one of the active participants in this great movement—one of the greatest of modern times—to see the light of this new civilization breaking over the district which I have the honor to represent, and to see its first benefits come to the people who have honored me with their suffrage, brings a degree of satisfaction that I dare say has come to few public men on this earth.

Whenever I see the glow of an electric light, whether it be in the factory window, over the merchant's counter, or in the humblest cabin home, I can say in my heart that I have helped to lighten that man's burdens.

want to see this work carried forward as rapidly as possible until it reaches every community and every home in America.

ADDITIONAL HOME-MORTGAGE RELIEF

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 6021) to provide additional home-mortgage relief, to amend the Federal Home Loan Bank Act, the Home Owners' Loan Act of 1933, and the National Housing Act, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 6021, with Mr. Celler in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BLANTON. Did not the Committee stop its business vesterday on the Brown amendment? Is the Brown amendment still pending?

The CHAIRMAN. The Brown amendment is still pending. When the Committee determined to rise, the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Brown] was pending.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the paragraph.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that debate upon this section and all amendments thereto close in 5 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman, I object. There is no reason to hurry this bill today. Let us take our time. We have got all day.

Mr. STEAGALL. I withdraw the request, Mr. Chairman. Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, when the Committee determined to rise last evening the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Brown] was being considered. The purpose of that amendment is to deny loans to any individual whose mortgage is held by an institution in process of liquidation. I do not think there is any necessity for the adoption of the amendment, for the reason that this work of the Corporation has practically closed. With the winding up of some pending applications there is not likely to be any further activity of the Corporation along this line.

The Corporation entering into this activity in the beginning, as I have heretofore called to the attention of the Committee, was at the instance of the President. It will be recalled that the Corporation, because of the necessity of setting up its organization and providing some form of procedure, was slow in getting out the money in its hands, and it was because of that condition and because of the distress of depositors in closed banks that it was urged that the Corporation enter into some arrangement with the representatives of closed institutions, in the interest of clearing up their affairs.

Of course, it will be understood that a receiver of a closed institution has no option but to foreclose when a loan matures and the borrower cannot pay. The receiver must then realize on the assets of the institution in liquidation as rapidly as possible.

The activity of the Corporation was undertaken in cooperation with the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and the officers of the Comptroller of the Currency and State regulatory authorities. When the Corporation began operations the deposits and savings of millions of workers and small businesses were tied up in over 6,000 insolvent institutions, holding over $660,000,000 of frozen home mortgages.

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. Will the gentleman vield?

Mr. COX. I yield.

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. The gentleman understands that if the Brown amendment is adopted it would not disqualify the Corporation from continuing its activities with institutions that are in liquidation, other than with respect to mortgages that are not in default?

Mr. COX. Let me answer the gentleman by stating that the Corporation has not, in the handling of this class of business, taken over mortgages which were not in distress.

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. Oh, yes. I beg the gentleman's pardon. The testimony before our committee is to the effect that it has taken over mortgages that were not is distress, but only a very small percentage. It was a way to aid the mortgagor and depositors of closed banks at the same time.

Mr. COX. It was only in exceptional cases that that was done. Of course, there were few instances, but it was not the policy of the Corporation to take over mortgages not in distress.

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. That is absolutely correct. May I make this further observation, that under the Brown amendment, any mortgage that is in distress in a closed institution would still be eligible.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Cox] has expired.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 5 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, it is so ordered. There was no objection.

Mr. COX. The Corporation, this division, has refinanced $377,330,817 for the benefit of 133,139 home owners. When the small balance now in the legal department is cleared, the amount refinanced will approximate $400,000,-000 out of more than $3,000,000,000 given to the Corporation up to the present time. Two hundred and sixty million dollars of home mortgages in these institutions have been refused consideration for lack of mortgage distress.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COX. I yield.

Mr. BLANTON. There are cases where, as early as January 1934, the mortgagee agreed to accept bonds. The Board carried the application on and on and delayed it for months until the mortgagee went into liquidation, where it can no longer act. Now it is not in a position to take bonds and the Board has refused to make the loans. Under the bill as drawn, without the Brown amendment, would they be permitted to reopen those cases and make those loans?

Mr. COX. I will yield to the author of the amendment to answer that question.

Mr. BLANTON. Well, I will ask the author, With his amendment would they be permitted to reopen those cases and make the loans?

Mr. BROWN of Michigan. If they are in default.

Mr. BLANTON. If they are in default, although the mortgagee is in liquidation, they can reopen these cases, with the gentleman's amendment?

Mr. BROWN of Michigan. They could do it either under the bill as it is, or with my amendment.

Mr. COX. The Corporation has rejected mortgages to the extent of $260,000,000 in these closed institutions, for lack of distress, and will have saved over 133,000 homes from foreclosure through this Department, and disbursed $400,-000,000 to hundreds of thousands of needy small depositors. Receivers were often obliged to agree to a reduction in the amount of the bank's claims, which had to be approved by Federal and State authorities and by the courts. As I stated at the outset, I understand there is not much further business of this character that the Corporation will be called upon to handle. I at first interpreted the Brown amendment to mean that the Corporation would not be permitted to make loans to any mortgagor whose mortgage was held by an institution in process of liquidation.

Mr. BROWN of Michigan. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COX. I yield.

Mr. BROWN of Michigan. I am sure the gentleman is wrong in his conclusion. If the mortgage is in default, it may be taken over in any event.

Mr. COX. But the Corporation does not refinance mortgages that are not in default and classified as distress.

Mr. HARTER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

Mr. Chairman, my remarks shall be addressed to those sections of the bill under consideration (H. R. 6021) which relate to the Home Owners' Loan Corporation and the granting of authority for the issuance of additional bonds so that the loaning activities of the Corporation may be continued.

Let me congratulate the Banking and Currency Committee upon the extensive hearings which they have held and the painstaking inquiry they have made into the necessity of granting additional funds.

As many of us know, high administration officials did not believe it necessary to continue the activities of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation and were reluctant to authorize the use of further public moneys for this purpose.

No Federal elected or appointed official is closer to the people than Members of Congress. We are in position to know conditions that exist in our respective districts—the distress that exists; whether private loaning agencies will make mortgage loans to distressed home owners; whether there is any further need of governmental lending; if foreclosures are decreasing—in general, just what the condition of our constituency is.

And when it was reported in November that no further home-loan applications would be received, and it was rumored that home-loan activities were to cease and that no more funds would be made available, a storm of protest arose in my district in Ohio. From every county in the district the cry went up from the distressed home owners—the mortgagees, and there are distressed mortgagees—the business men, and the lending institutions, that this was no time to fold up

I realize the Government cannot go on indefinitely and assume the burden of refunding all of the urban mortgages in the United States, but there is real distress among the people which should be relieved. A reasonable continuance of these efforts on behalf of the distressed home owner, in my judgment, will go far toward stabilizing the real-estate market and real-estate prices.

Therefore the consideration of this bill and its early passage deeply concerns the people of my district. They will be gratified to know that Congress has given attention to their needs.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in favor of the Brown amendment. I believe that if the Membership of this House thoroughly understood what the Brown amendment is designed to do, there would not be any doubt what the action of this body upon this amendment would be.

The Brown amendment is an amendment to subsection (1) of section 4 of the Home Owners' Loan Act. This section was adopted April 27, 1934. The Brown amendment strikes out the last clause of subsection (1) of section 4 of this clause reading as follows: "or in any case in which the home mortgage or other obligation or lien is held by an institution which is in liquidation." The section, outside of the last clause, provides, briefly, that no home mortgage or other obligation or lien shall be acquired by the Corporation, and no cash advances shall be made unless the applicant was in involuntary default on June 13, 1933, with respect to the indebtedness on his real estate and is unable to carry or refund his present mortgage indebtedness: Provided, That the foregoing limitation shall not apply in any case in which it is specifically shown to the satisfaction of the Corporation that a default after such date was due to unemployment or to economic conditions or misfortunes beyond the control of the applicant

The language stricken out by the Brown amendment permitted banks which were in liquidation upon their own motion to have their mortgages refunded and was designed for the purpose of freeing those institutions from their frozen assets. The object behind the language of original subsection (1) was sound; the plan was a wise one to get namey into the hands of the depositors in these closed institutions; but in carrying out the act and in its administration many of these institutional loans were given preference over those of less fortunate persons whose loans were held by banks, individuals, mortgage-lending institutions, and by insurance companies that were not in liquidation. The result has been that in many of the States, including my own, there has been an inequitable carrying out of this provision of the act; those who happened to have their mortgages in closed institutions were given a great advantage in the making of loans. Their loans were put through speedily while their neighbors whose mortgages were held by other banks and institutions did not have the advantage of having their loans made as promptly, although their distress may have been very much greater than the distress of those whose loans were held by the closed institutions. The Brown amendment would put everybody on the same basis of equality; the distressed home owner will have the same opportunity from this time on in the securing of additional loans.

The committee yesterday saw fit to authorize $1,750,000,000 additional to carry on the work of making loans to these distressed home owners. Let us see to it that every distressed home owner has the same opportunity as his neighbor; let us not give to these institutions that happen to hold a lot of mortgages, advantages which should not be theirs. I could cite you numerous cases in my own community where advantages have been taken of this Corporation through this method and individual distressed mortgagors have had no relief.

Mr. HARTER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 3 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mr. HARTER. As has been said upon the floor of this House very frequently yesterday and today, there have been mistakes made by officials, agents, and representatives of the Corporation. Such a tremendous volume of mortgage loans could not have been handled without some errors in judgment. On the whole, however, the measure has brought relief to hundreds of thousands of distressed mortgagors.

The record of the State office at Columbus, Ohio, of which Mr. Henry G. Brunner is the State manager, is worthy of the highest commendation. Ohio ranks, I believe, first in total number of loans closed and second in the dollar value of loans completed.

The gravest criticism that has been made in Ohio and throughout my district is that of the wholesale operation. Unfortunately, throughout Ohio, particularly in the great cities of Cleveland, Toledo, Akron, Youngstown, and elsewhere, there was great banking distress. Many banks were unable to open after the bank holiday and were put in liquidation.

Upon the adoption of the institutional amendment of April 1934 these banks immediately took advantage of this opportunity and refunded millions of dollars' worth of frozen mortgages. In fact, I am told that the total amount of the wholesale operations in Ohio comes to about $144,000,000, while the retail operation, as of February 14, amounted to approximately $211,000,000. Thus it will be seen that nearly threesevenths of the bonds disbursed in Ohio went to banks and the criticism that is made is that the distressed home owner, whose mortgage did not happen to be held by a liquidating institution—was last received and preference given to putting through promptly and expeditiously the applications on behalf of banks in the hands of liquidators.

Unfortunately, some glaring errors occurred in the case of persons who were in no wise distressed and not eligible for a home loan, except under the provisions of this amendment, who had their loans promptly refunded while their less fortunate and more distressed fellow citizens have not yet received relief from the H. O. L. C.

Emergency slips were put upon the bank case mortgages so that they could be hurried through to final disbursement, while other mortgagors had to wait their turn, and many of them have not had their applications granted yet.

I shall read a portion of a letter I received from one of the fee attorneys under date of January 25, 1935:

Liquidating bank cases at this writing are being advanced to fee attorneys. Distressed applicants, as you know, have been unable to have their applications advanced since November 16, 1934.

I am writing this to acquaint you of two concrete cases sent to me, as fee attorney, to close. One involves the home of Mr. ——, Akron, Ohio. You probably know Mr. —— and the connection he has with —— at a salary of $400 per month. He owed the First Central $1,721.15, balance of mortgage on home property; said mortgage, however, had matured. This case has been disbursed and closed. The other application is that of Mr. ——, vice president of —— Co. since 1921, now drawing $700 per month salary. He owes the First Central $3,679 on the mortgage on his home. I am enclosing a copy of an original letter in the file. This case was sent from 640 North Main Street (district office of H. O. L. C.) to me on December 15, 1934, with the following notation: "November 7, 1934, this is eligible. The distress of the closed bank is substituted for that of the applicant."

Mr. Chairman, this is what has occurred in many cases. The gentleman from Michigan, in opposing the Brown amendment yesterday, said that the amount of funds that had been disbursed under this section was negligible. I deny that such is the fact. The statement of the Corporation is to the effect that about 15 percent of all the funds that have been disbursed under this act have gone to these wholesale cases.

In the State of Ohio more than 40 percent of all the money that has come into the State has been turned over to closed institutions. As I previously stated, the purpose back of that was all right, but in many instances the money has not gone into the hands of the depositors of those banks. In my own community I know of a bank that had deposits of more than $30,000,000 and every dollar that has come in through homeloan bonds—and there have been hundreds of thousands of dollars in mortgages refunded in that institution—has gone back to the R. F. C. in Washington,

No individual will suffer if we adopt this amendment. If he is a distressed home owner and eligible, he may have his loan refunded, whether it is held by a closed institution or held by anyone else. All will be equal, and no one class of cases will have the right-of-way over any other class.

I am happy to say that I proposed an amendment to the present bill—H. R. 6021—and have presented it fully to the Banking and Currency Committee of this House, which in turn has seen fit to adopt it as a committee amendment. This is the Brown amendment we are now considering. This eliminates from the present bill the language contained in subsection L of section 4 of the act, as amended April 27, 1934, and will do away entirely with the bulk or wholesale operations.

From this time on, and in the further lending activities of the Corporation, the distress of the individual home owner and the value of the security he offers will be the sole test of eligibility.

It is my well-considered opinion that for a limited time further applications on behalf of distressed home owners should be received. Many who held off, utilizing all of their savings and their meager earnings, in order to protect their real estate by making payments upon their mortgages, find themselves at the end of their resources and are facing fore-closure unless we open the way for relief to them. The fact that they have been provident and more fortunate up to this date than some of their neighbors does not mitigate their distress, and they should be given an opportunity to file their applications and have their eligibility determined.

If the public once knows that a deadline of, say, 60 days after the passage of this act has been set, all are warned that they must take advantage of the act within such limit of time if at all.

Let us pass this measure promptly in the hope that it may be fully enacted and approved at the earliest possible moment. It was designed as a relief measure, and while the original act has been of tremendous assistance to many of our citizens, the work is not complete. This measure has been long delayed. It is to be hoped that no further unreasonable delay will be encountered in its enactment. [Applause.]

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. Andrews of New York: Page 7, line 17, after the word "following", insert a new paragraph to read as follows—

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, a point of order. Does not the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Brown] have to be disposed of before another amendment is offered? This is not offered as an amendment to the Brown amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Brown] is a proposed new section to follow section 10.

Mr. BLANTON. Then all amendments which would perfect the text should be voted upon before the Brown amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. All amendments that perfect section 10 would naturally come before the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Brown]; that is correct.

The Clerk resumed the reading of the amendment, as follows:

Insert a new paragraph to read: "In the appointment of agents and the selection of employees for said Corporation, and in the promotion of agents or employees, no partisan political test or qualification shall be permitted or given consideration, but all agents and employees shall be appointed, employed, or promoted solely upon the basis of merit and efficiency. Any member of the Board who is found guilty of a violation of this provision by the President of the United States shall be removed from office by the President of the United States and any agent or employee of the Corporation who is found guilty of a violation of this section by the Board shall be removed from office by said Board."

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the amendment is not germane to the section to which it is offered as a new section, it is not germane to the succeeding sections, it is not germane to the bill, and it interferes with the ordinary discretion of an executive.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman from New York [Mr. Andrews] on the point of order.

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. Mr. Chairman, this amendment was offered to this section a year ago in the consideration of this very measure, and at that time the ruling was it was germane and there was a vote on it by roll call.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] desire to be heard?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, this bill nowhere deals with politics or deals with partisan appointments. It does not embrace this subject. The amendment which the gentle-cal amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule.

The amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. Andrews] seeks to amend subsection (j) of section 4 of the Home Owners' Loan Act of 1933, which in effect provides for the appointment and compensation of officers, employees, agents, attorneys, and so forth. The pending amendment seeks to change the phraseology of subsection (j) of section 4 relative to said appointment of agents, employees, attorneys, and so forth, and in that sense it is germane to subsection (j) of section 4 of the Home Owners' Loan Act of 1933, and therefore is germane to the pending bill. The point of order is overruled.

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. Mr. Chairman, I consider the passage of this measure possibly the most worthy consideration of this session. I want to stop to recall to your mind the very large organization set up by this act which must handle these loans in which we are all so much interested. If we stop to think of it, this is probably the largest single business organization within the Government. This organization handles nothing but purely business matters. It should not be interested in a partisan, political consideration along with business matters. I am not saying that in any office that has been the case, although I have heard some dissatisfaction expressed in connection with the handling of loans by Members on your side of the House.

Mr. Chairman, I personally believe this amendment would be good protection not only to members of the Democratic Party but to each individual Democratic Member in his district, to be able to point out to your constituents, whether Republican or Democrat, that such provision is now in this act, even if you voted it down last year. I believe it would be a good protection to your President and to the Democratic side of this House. I believe the day will come in many of your districts when you would appreciate having such provision actually written into this measure.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. I yield to the gentleman from

Mr. BLANTON. Of course, the gentleman believes in his amendment generally as a sound piece of legislation?

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. I certainly do.

Mr. BLANTON. Then if that is true, and if the minority were the majority, the gentleman would be in favor of passing a resolution to prevent the Republican Party from considering politics in reference to postmasters when they appoint Republicans to every postmastership in the United

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. I do not know that I would. I think this is quite a different matter.

Mr. BLANTON. Then the whole system that has existed for 50 years would have to be changed.

Mr. GINGERY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. GINGERY. Does not the gentleman know that there is at present a rule that no politician may hold a job in the Home Owners' Loan Corporation?

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. I do not know where the rule is, if there is one, or how it is applied.

Mr. GINGERY. I was fired out of a job there, so I had to run for this office. Many others were kicked out, too.

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. I know the matter of patronage comes up in a consideration of this question. But if the Members on that side are not getting jobs in this Home Owners' Loan Corporation, and I assume you are recommending good men, you might as well vote for this amendment and get the credit for it. Of course, if you are putting up efficient applicants, this amendment would not stop those individuals from getting a good job.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. Yes.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. We passed the home-loan bank bill in the Seventy-second Congress under the previous adminisman from New York [Mr. Andrews] offers is strictly a politi- | tration. Did the gentleman or anyone on his side suggest the same kind of amendment at that time?

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. This amendment was offered last year and was not agreed to, largely through the vote of the Democrats.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I am referring to the Seventy-second Congress, when we passed the home-loan bank bill, when Mr. Hoover was President. Did the gentleman suggest the same amendment at that time?

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. No; at the time it was passed, we understood there was going to be a Democratic administration operating the Government. [Laughter.]

Mr. FITZPATRICK. But Republicans were already in office, and most of them hold office today.

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. That may be true. In conclusion. I simply want to say that I think the majority of our people, if they knew this situation, would want to see the home-loan bank operated under this amendment with the knowledge it would be a protection for each one of you, as well as a protection for our citizens, and I believe the amendment should be voted favorably, and I hope someone will ask for a roll call so we may see how many believe in operating the system in this way.

Mr. STEFAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. ANDREWS of New York. I yield.

Mr. STEFAN. The gentleman referred to the fact that this amendment was voted down a year ago. Is this the amendment that Mr. Norris offered in the Senate, which was later voted down in the House?

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. Yes; this is the same as the so-called "Norris amendment."

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Every time this legislation has been considered in the House, statements have been made that are not based upon

In the Seventy-second Congress, during the administration of Mr. Hoover, we passed a bill, as the gentleman from New York has just stated. That bill, however, was a fraud upon the public. It absolutely provided no relief. I attempted to amend that bill so as to make it workable, but with the assistance of members of the committee on both sides of the House, my amendments were defeated.

I offered an amendment to guarantee the principal on the bonds as well as the interest, and I stated that until this was done we would never get any benefit for distressed people from the legislation which was then pending.

I firmly believe my amendment would have been adopted when I offered it if it had not been for the fact that the Committee rose at 4:30 in the afternoon, when I had consumed the 30 minutes that had been allowed me, and the next morning, when the House met, the gentleman from Alabama, Mr. Steagall, and the gentleman from Massachusetts, Mr. Luce, who had conserved their time, rose and told the Members of the House that such an amendment would cost the Government $24,000,000,000. Since that time we have guaranteed the principal and we have guaranteed the interest, and you can see how much money this has cost. The misstatement defeated my amendment at the time. . I was denied the right to answer their argument before the vote was taken.

The committee now tell us that Mr. Fahey says the amount in this bill is going to be sufficient. I say that Mr. Fahey does not know what he is talking about if it is intended to take care of the home owners of this country who are going to find themselves in distress when their mortgages become due this year. If you want to shut down under this act and stop making loans, come out and say so. That is just what

I do not have the act before me, but the pending amendment refers to subsection (1) of section 4 of the act, and I should like someone to answer the question as to whether or not the Brown amendment would prevent me, if I happen to have a mortgage in a closed bank that is in liquidation, from going to the Home Owners' Loan Corporation and asking for a loan to take up my mortgage when it becomes due, say, in 40 days from now.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. COCHRAN. I yield to my friend from Texas. Mr. BLANTON. If the gentleman's mortgages were not pressing him, he could not receive relief; in other words, unless they were threatening to foreclose.

Mr. COCHRAN. I understand I would have to be in distress or I would not be recognized, but I am in distress when my mortgage becomes due and I have no way to refinance.

Mr. BLANTON. If the gentleman were in distress, he could get some relief from the bill itself.

Mr. COCHRAN. Even though my mortgage be in a closed

Mr. STEAGALL. Oh, Mr. Chairman, I thought it had been made clear to the House that this amendment not only does not prevent the extension of relief directly for the benefit of the mortgagor whose mortgage is held by an institution in process of liquidation but that the purpose of the amendment is to confine the relief extended so that the benefit inures solely, or at least primarily, to the benefit of the mortgagor, so that the funds cannot any longer be

I hope before the final vote is taken upon this bill the House will see the wisdom of extending the time beyond 60 days and also of increasing the amount of additional bonds that can be issued.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. COCHRAN. I yield.

Mr. SISSON. Is the gentleman aware of the fact that the bill as it stands now does not extend the time 60 days beyond the passage of the act, as a matter of right, but only as a matter of discretion and as good faith is proved?

Mr. COCHRAN. I fully understand that, and that is the reason I offered the amendment yesterday.

Mr. Chairman, we are told that unemployment has increased. That means citizens who own their homes, at least many of them, find themselves today unable to care for the payments due on the outstanding mortgage. Their distress period is just arriving. Heretofore they have not applied for loans but will soon find it necessary to do so. You are shutting them out under the provisions of this bill. I am pleading for the little fellows who have homes worth three, four, five, or six thousand dollars. The ones who have saved sufficient from their pay envelops to try to purchase a place that they can call "home." Their life savings are in that home, small as it might be, but they have an equity that they will lose if they cannot borrow to refinance the outstanding obligation. We can loan money to great corporations, to railroads, and, in my opinion, it is very doubtful if you will ever get it back; but we are going to deny the citizens of our country a reasonable loan to save their homes. The security offered is far better than that which we receive from the giant corporations and the railroads. There is no watered stock in the home. Our monetary system might fail, Government bonds might be affected; but unless an act of God destroys the home, it will always be there, and it can always be sold for an amount equal to that advanced. I urge you not to deny this relief to the home owner.

I have letter after letter asking me if Congress is going to provide for those who cannot file now because the mort-gages are not due. They tell me the holders of the notes insist that when the mortgages become due they must be reduced, or they will not be refinanced. They say that they have been out of employment and cannot reduce the notes at this time. Therefore, they will lose their property unless we provide, through the Home Loan Act, ways and means for them to refinance. It is that class I am thinking of today when I appeal to you not to close the door.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

Mr. Chairman, I have had something to say heretofore about the general principle of this bill; I think the fallacy running all through it is that no loan is ever made to a home owner. [Applause.]

Under the bill the Government is going to continue to lend money to 97 percent of the amount to institutions. The home owner today with no mortgage on his home, and who is in the greatest distress, cannot get a loan anywhere. What home owner ever gets a loan? It is the fellow who holds the mortgage who gets the money.

Mr. REILLY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR. Yes.

Mr. REILLY. Has there been any bar to anyone's filing an application?

Mr. O'CONNOR. The home owner cannot file an application under this act unless he is burdened by an existing mortgage.

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I yield.

Mr. SNELL. I have received a letter from a constituent which bears out the gentleman's statement. Under the same circumstances as described by the gentleman, she has been renting her home to get enough to live on. Now she cannot rent it and it is for sale for taxes.

Mr. O'CONNOR. This bill is for the relief of the moneylending institutions.

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. I have an amendment pending and no Democrat has spoken against it. I wonder if they all agree to it. [Laughter.]

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. Will the gentleman

Mr. O'CONNOR. Yes; gladly.

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. The gentleman made a statement that 97 percent of these loans went to corporations. The gentleman ought also to state to the House that which he knows to be a fact, that 97 percent of all the mortgages are owned by money-lending institutions.

Mr. O'CONNOR. The gentleman said "urban."

But I rose to talk about section 10.

Mr. HOLLISTER. Does the gentleman from New York expect to vote against the bill?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I have not made up my mind yet. I might. [Laughter.]

I rose to talk about section 10, which provides that no person shall be appointed as an officer of the Corporation unless he lives in the State where he functions. I regret somewhat that that kind of legislation should be necessary, but in view of the arbitrary, unreasonable, and egotistic attitude of the present head of the Corporation, I feel that we should put that amendment in effect. [Applause.]

For instance, let me show you the situation in New York. Of course, we have no lawyers in New York, we have no people experienced in real-estate business in New York. We must import them from the other States.

We have in New York a regional Home Owners' Loan office, probably the largest in the country. The head of that office, the manager, is a gentleman from Pittsburgh, who was a tax advisor to the Mellon family. Of course, I do not know whether he is a Democrat. I do not know that the Mellons ever had any Democrats around them. The chief assistant to that gentleman is a man named "McGlynn", from Pennsylvania. The treasurer is a man named "Banister", from Massachusetts. The head attorney is a man named "Furniss", from Massachusetts. The head litigation attorney is a man named "Keefer", from Massachusetts. The legal adviser is from Chicago and I have not his name at the moment. The head of delinquent accounts is a man named "Jones", from South Carolina. The head of the tax department is a Mr. Davis of Texas. The head of the mortgage arrears is not from New York-I could not find for the moment from what State or Territory he came; maybe Hawaii. The manager of the legal department is a young man from New Jersey who just got out of law school. So on down the list. Everyone in charge in the regional office in New York is from one of these other great States of the Union.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I offer a preferential amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Blanton: Page 7, line 19, after the word "office" insert "or congressional district"; and in line 21, after the word "State", insert "or congressional district, respectively"; and in line 22 strike out the last sentence of the paragraph beginning with the word "this."

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair suggests to the gentleman from Texas that the gentleman withhold his amendment until the committee has disposed of the other perfecting amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. Andrews].

Mr. BLANTON. That amendment added a new section, Mr. Chairman. Mine is perfecting the text of section 10.

The CHAIRMAN. Both are perfecting amendments, and the Chair thinks it is best to conclude the deliberations and vote upon the Andrews amendment before we take up the gentleman's amendment.

Mr. BLANTON. I make the point of order that any amendment that changes the text in any way or seeks to perfect it is preferential, and is to be voted upon before an amendment simply adding something to the bill. This is striking out part of the bill itself.

The CHAIRMAN. The Andrews amendment does something to the bill in the way of perfecting it, and that is exactly what the gentleman's amendment does, and the committee would have two perfecting amendments pending at the same time if the gentleman's amendment was offered at this time. The Chair suggests that the gentleman withhold his amendment until we conclude deliberations and vote on the Andrews amendment. The Chair will then recognize the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the Andrews amendment. The amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. Andrews] was voted on in this body in the last session of Congress and is known as the "Norris amendment." Those of you who read the Congressional Record at the time the amendment was discussed in the other body will remember that the Corporation went on record in writing at that time as being opposed to the institution of civil service for employees of the Corporation. To my mind that is proof conclusive that the kind of merit system they have in mind is a system that permits the insiders to control the appointment of the employees in the Corporation, and simply excludes those they do not want to consider.

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAMSPECK. Yes.

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. As I recall, the President of the United States was in support of the amendment at the time it was considered in the Senate.

Mr. RAMSPECK. The gentleman may be correct, but that does not change my opinion about the position of the officers of the Corporation when they refused the only merit system of selecting employees that has ever been devised in this country.

Mr. STEAGALL. But is not this the situation today, that we are now going down the road with the administration of this agency of the Government, and if we were to attempt to put into complete operation the principles underlying the amendment, it would compel the Home Owners' Loan Corporation to start over and review and revamp the entire personnel in order to comply with the rule laid down in the amendment.

Mr. RAMSPECK. Perhaps that is so, but the point I make is that the system they have substituted for what they please to call the spoils system is not a system of merit, but it is a worse spoils system than the old system by which elected representatives of the people made the recommendations. They have substituted the recommendation of appointed officers who are responsible to no one. [Applause.]

Mr. HOEPPEL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. RAMSPECK. Yes.

Mr. HOEPPEL. Answering the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Steagall], it is my observation that if we will replace the inefficient, incompetent people in southern California in the H. O. L. C., we will make more progress, and then put in people who can pass an examination.

Mr. RAMSPECK. I say to the gentleman from New York [Mr. Andrews], the author of the amendment, if he will offer an amendment to put the employees under civil service, I shall support him, but I will not support any policy that turns over to the executive officers of this Government the right to select public employees without regard to the interest and welfare of the elected representatives of the people, either Democratic or Republican. [Applause.]

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. Will the gentleman state to the House what has been the record of the Corporation so far as making loans to distressed home owners in his district is concerned?

Mr. RAMSPECK. In my district they have made a great many loans, but the personnel policy in the State of Georgia has been rotten, and it is so all over the country. [Applause.] They have selected people who have no regard whatever for the public. They have adopted the policy of "the public be damned", and it is not fair to the people of this country to impose upon them employees in public office who do not have regard for the distressed people of the country and who have no sympathy with them.

Mr. SHORT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAMSPECK. I yield.

Mr. SHORT. I think what the gentleman from Georgia has said is absolutely true. I do not condemn or blame the majority party for appointing good, honest Democrats as officers, employees, and agents to administer this act, but I do condemn them for discriminating among applicants who apply for loans.

Mr. RAMSPECK. I condemn that also, if such a situation exists anywhere.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. RAMSPECK] has expired.

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 5 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

There was no objection.

Mr. RAMSPECK. Since the gentleman from North Caroline [Mr. Hancock] has brought the matter up, let me go into this Georgia situation. They put in charge of the Georgia office a man who is president of a building-and-loan association, doing business with the Corporation. He is also connected with a building-material firm selling products to contractors who get business from the Corporation. That was brought to the attention of the gentleman's committee, and, in my judgment, the committee ought to have acted upon it, because it is a well-known principle that a public servant ought not also represent a private interest dealing with a public agency. [Applause.]

Mr. PIERCE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAMSPECK. I yield.

Mr. PIERCE. Is that not true throughout the whole Nation?

Mr. RAMSPECK. There is no question about the fact that the Home Owners' Loan Corporation is in the hands of agencies engaged in loaning money upon real estate.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAMSPECK. I yield.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Does the gentleman know where there has been any discrimination made against those who have made applications for loans on account of politics?

Mr. RAMSPECK. I am not charging anything of that sort, but I am discussing a policy which I think is as old as the history of this Nation, namely, that a public servant ought to be free from any private interest dealing with the agency which he heads. I will say to my colleague from North Carolina [Mr. Hancock] that he would not for a moment stand on this floor and defend the appointment of the president of a railroad company as a member of the Inter- | state Commerce Commission. This is the same principle. I yield to the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. I heartily concur, as a matter of principle, that no man should serve two interests: but is it not a fact that the man to whom the gentleman referred just now has faithfully, efficiently, and honestly discharged his duty, and that the distressed home owners in my friend's district have been fully and adequately cared for, and that more loans have been made in the gentleman's district than in any other district in Georgia?

Mr. RAMSPECK. It is true that more loans have been made in my district than in any other district in Georgia. We have 10 Members in Congress, and approximately oneseventh of the population of the State and one-quarter of the wealth of the State is in my district. Therefore there is more demand for it. I make no charges against the integrity or honesty of this man, but I say he is not in sympathy with the people he is serving. He does not treat them with courtesy. He is not the type of personality that ought to head a public institution. But I am not discussing that. I am discussing the principle involved, of putting in charge of this great Corporation, a Corporation which has approximately $5,000,000,000 of the people's money to administer, people who are engaged in the business of lending money on real estate. That is a wrong principle, and this Congress ought to change it. [Applause.]

Mr. KOPPLEMANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAMSPECK. I yield.

Mr. KOPPLEMANN. In the gentleman's State of Georgia, if the gentleman, as Congressman, should write to any of the personnel officers in charge in his district concerning an application which has been referred to him or upon which he has been questioned by a constituent, does he give the gentleman the information or does he not?

Mr. RAMSPECK. He does not; and further than that, my judgment is that an applicant is discriminated against if he takes a congressional endorsement to any personnel

Mr. KOPPLEMANN. Let me ask the gentleman further why he is not given this information?

Mr. RAMSPECK. I cannot answer the question, but I do not want to go into the question of patronage. I am not interested in patronage. I believe in civil service. If I had my way, every employee of the Government would be under civil service. [Applause.] But I do not propose to follow the gentleman from New York [Mr. Andrews] in his subterfuge, which simply puts the power into the hands of these appointive officers of the Government, who are responsible to nobody, and I hope this House will vote down the amend-

Mr. SWEENEY. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. RAMSPECK. I yield.

Mr. SWEENEY. In view of the very frank statement made by the gentleman on the floor today, does not the gentleman believe we ought to investigate the Home Owners' Loan Corporation?

Mr. RAMSPECK. I think it would have served a good purpose to investigate the personnel policy of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation, but I am not making any charges about graft or about favoritism in the making of loans. As far as I know, there has been nothing of that sort in my district. I am discussing a policy which is as old as this Government itself, namely, that we must keep our employees of the Government free from private interests. [Applause.]

The Committee on Banking and Currency is to be commended for including in this measure the amendment to the Home Owners' Loan Act offered by my colleague from Georgia [Mr. Brown].

This matter is section 10 of the bill, and provides that persons employed in the State and regional offices must have been residents of the State or region served by the office at the time the office was established.

I particularly wish to commend the manner in which my colleague secured the adoption of this provision by the unanimous consent of the committee, so I am informed. It is seldom, if ever, that a new member of a committee is so successful in putting through such an important amendment.

This is a just, and, I think, wise change in the personnel policy of the Corporation. It is not fair to the citizens of the country to have this agency manned by people sent into the regional offices from other sections of the country. We have capable and qualified men who can fill the positions, men and women who understand the people of their own sections and who are in sympathy with their distress. Our people are entitled to deal with their fellow citizens, and should not be required to transact their business with strangers.

If any employee of the Corporation cannot be trusted to serve faithfully in his own section or State, then he should not be an employee of this Corporation.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Ramspeck] has again expired.

Mr. GRAY of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, if the object here is to save homes, we are overlooking some vital elements necessary and indispensable to such relief. We must go further than this bill. Since the home owners purchased their homes and contracted these mortgage debts, there has been a fall of values depreciating his home as security more than one-half while his mortgage debt has remained the same. Under this fall of values and the price level there is not one in a hundred home owners who are facing foreclosure of their mortgage whose property now will meet the appraisement required to refinance his loan. Until there is a rise of real-estate values, a restoration of the general property price level, there can be no substantial relief provided for the distressed home owners, and their homes will be foreclosed and they will become tenants under landlords.

But even the very few distressed home owners who can meet the appraisement required will not be able to save their homes under this bill. Without first, a restoration of earnings and income they can no more meet their mortgage installments, the payment of their taxes and accruing interest after being refinanced by the Home Loan Corporation, than they could meet these payments before. Over 240,000 of these refinanced home owners are now already in default on their new mortgages and must be foreclosed and taken over by the Government instead of the original mortgagee and the Government will become the landlord of the thousands who are still unable to pay. But this is not all the failure being suffered. This is not all the complications in which the Government is being involved without benefit or relief to the home owners. In the city of Chicago alone, refinanced home owners are in default in the payment of two millions of taxes which the Government is being compelled to pay to protect the securities of these new mort-

With the Government guaranteeing the payment of both the interest and the principal of these bonds and its liability for taxes assessed, the obligations of the Government are fast mounting in multiplied millions of dollars, all without relief to the home owners. Without a restoration of the general price level and without first restoring earnings and income to the people, to the home owners of the country, the provisions of this bill will fail of relief; all will be futile and in vain to save and salvage the home owner's home.

The mortgages now in default upon the home owner's home are largely renewal debts made and contracted under a higher property value and when the home owners of the country were making ample earnings and income to meet the interest and installment payments. While these prosperous conditions remained, the mortgage holders' security was adequate with the excess value of these homes, and the home owners with earnings and income were assured of their time to pay. They were amply able to meet their obligations, and both borrowers and lenders were assured, satisfied, and content with their obligations and relations. And if these property valuations and the earnings and income existing at the time the mortgages were made had continued on uninterrupted, both the home owner's home would have been secured and the home-mortgage lenders would have been assured in the payment and collection of the debt.

But when the manipulating bankers left in control of our money system secretly contracted and withdrew one-half of the money and credit in use and circulation to increase and multiply the value of their bond and war-debt claims, the effect of the contraction of money under the operation of monetary laws was to force down the prices and values, lowering the valuation of the home owner's home far down below the mortgage lien and left the mortgage lender without security for its mortgage debt. The home owners finding themselves without income were unable to meet their payments and the lenders finding themselves without adequate security for their loans, joined with the home owners for relief and in the demand for the Government to guarantee and refinance these mortgages.

While this is called a home owner's bill, it is being taken advantage of more by lenders, more to serve mortgagees than mortgagors in the collection of otherwise impossible debts, and to relieve mortgagees from taking over depreciated property in payment and of far less value than the loan at the time the mortgage was made. In operation and effect this legislation is a misnomer or erroneously labelled. It is being used more to relieve insurance companies, banks, and trust companies, to enable them to transfer their investments to the Government and the loss to be borne by taxpayers of the country.

To make this a home-owner's loan in fact, as well as in name and form, we must first restore the property price level to the level of values when the mortgages were made. We must first restore the earnings and income of home owners and this legislation will not be needed. Building-and-loan associations and private lenders would again refinance the home owners and the Government would be relieved of these impossible obligations and responsibilities. Without a restoration of property values, without a return of earnings and income, the effort to relieve distressed home owners is a farce, a mockery, and a delusion, raising the hopes of the home owners only to cast them down again. To bring full and adequate relief to the home owners of the country, as well as to all other distressed people, will only require a reversal of the currency manipulations and operations which forced down values and the price level and values and prices will be restored again.

Until there is a restoration of values, until there is a rise in the general price level, until there is a return of earnings and income, a restoration of the taxpaying power, the interest and the debt-paying power, and until the monetary operations forcing down values are reversed and values again restored, there can be no relief to the home owners. The banks' artificial means of lending and spending, the destruction of food crops and the materials for clothing, and the reduction of the necessaries of life, while the people are suffering and in want, will prove a disappointment and failure, a vain maneuver serving only for the time.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. Andrews].

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BLANTON. Is this the amendment which would prevent the appointment of Democrats and require the appointment of Republicans? If it is I am against it ment of Republicans? If it is, I am against it.

The CHAIRMAN. That is not a parliamentary inquiry.

The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. Andrews].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. Andrews) there were—ayes 52, noes 118.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment. The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Blanton: Page 7, line 19, after the word "office", insert the words "or congressional district"; and in line 21 after the word "State", insert the words "or congressional district, respectively"; and in line 22 strike out the last sentence beginning with the word "This."

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto close in 10 minutes.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, under the present law and after this bill is passed this board will have in each county and in each congressional district a local county attorney to pass on titles, and a local county appraiser.

Until the first of this year my district embraced 19 counties in Texas. In these 19 counties I had selected, hand-picked them, 19 splendid attorneys, the best in my district, 1 from each county; and 19 splendid gentlemen as appraisers, 1 from each county. They were appointed. Not a single objection has ever been raised to one of those attorneys. Objection was raised to only one appraiser. He was the son of former Congressman, Hon. Joseph V. Cockrell; he was a grand nephew of former United States Senator from Missouri, Francis M. Cockrell, whom many of the oldtimers here knew. He was a high-class man, one of the finest men in my district, and one of the ablest men in my district. He knew all the people in his county and their history and every piece of property for 40 years back. The only objection raised against him was that arrogant Mr. Fahey claimed he was too old. I called attention to the fact that one member of this board was 71 years of age—older than the appraiser was, and notwithstanding he had been the appraiser for over a year and had made several hundred appraisals, he was supplanted by another, without one single word notifying him about it. He was not told that his services were unsatisfactory. He was not notified that he was deemed too old. He was not advised that he had been fired. Not one word of complaint did they send him. Without any notice, and without any hearing he was supplanted and boycotted and no more appraisals were sent him. It was a most damnable outrage.

When his home citizens found it out they sent this H. O. L. C. Board a vigorous protest signed by the chamber of commerce, the newspapers, the bankers, the mayor and city officials, many of the county officials, many of the clubs, and many of the leading, substantial citizens of the city, certifying that Judge Cockrell was a man of strict honor and integrity, was able and efficient, and was well qualified to make such appraisals.

But he had not paid $10 to Chairman Fahey's big chief appraiser here, Philip W. Kniskern, for Kniskern's book he was unloading on all appraisers, and did not pay his own way to Dallas, 200 miles from home, to be examined on Kniskern's book; hence he was boycotted.

Hon. Fred Cockrell is as well qualified as any member on that Board to handle any office that was within the gift of the H. O. L. C., but they arbitrarily objected in their own minds but said not a word to him about it. Now let me tell you about this chief appraiser known as "Mr. Philip Kniskern." In order to get rid of all appraisers over the country that had been appointed by Congressmen, and allowed to do so by Chairman Fahey, Mr. Philip Kniskern required every single appraiser in the United States, although they had been appraising for 18 months, to take a Philip Kniskern examination that was in a book Philip Kniskern had just written on evaluations. This book was specially designed by Philip Kniskern to get rid of congressional appointees. He required those appraisers at first to pay $10 apiece for his book. If they did not pay the $10, they did not pass. [Laughter.] He finally got down to the point where he would sell the book for $6 when many refused to buy it at $10. In the State of Texas, and in many of the other States, since the Philip Kniskern examination was held they have removed practically every appraiser who did not buy Kniskern's book. Every one of them in my district who did not buy that Philip Kniskern book has been removed. Yet they has been appraising satisfactorily for 18 months.

If Chairman Fahey were to live a thousand years he would not have as much sense as Judge Fred Cockrell has now, and Chairman Fahey would not be any abler or better qualified on property values.

After these faithful, loyal, county appraisers had ably and diligently performed valuable service on starvation pay for over 18 months, I want you to see just what kind of a notice was sent them, requiring them to be examined on Philip Kniskern's new book:

Home Owners' Loan Corporation, Dallas, Tex., January 11, 1935.

Mr. RICHARD McCARTY,

Albany, Tex.

Dear Sir: Pursuant to instructions from Washington through Mr. R. Franklin Hull, regional appraiser of this Corporation, a written examination for the appraisal personnel of this district is written examination for the appraisal personner of this district is to be held in Dallas on Friday, January 18, 1935, at 1 p. m. This examination is to be given for the benefit of those of our fee appraisers who did not take the August examination and new appraisers appointed subsequent to that date, and for those who did take the examination but now wish to make an effort to raise did take the examination but now wish to make an effort to raise their rating.

In line with instruction from the Washington office of this Corporation, our previously appointed fee appraisers, who do not receive a final approved grading, are not qualified for further appraisal work after December 31, 1934.

The grading heretofore assigned to you by the Appraisal Division, as a result of your failure to take the August examination and based upon your record in Washington, does not qualify you for further appraisal work for this Corporation until such a time as your rating is raised to a satisfactory standard; opportunity, accordingly, is offered you in the above-written examination to effect such a rating.

At this time we have no definite knowledge as to the extent of future appraisal work for the Corporation. However, the possession of an approved grade will qualify you for any future appraisal work that may develop in the event additional funds for H. O. L. C. use should be appropriated by Congress.

Expenses of the trip to Dallas for the purpose of taking the examination will not be paid by the Corporation.

It is requested that you advise the writer, by return mail, in

It is requested that you advise the writer, by return mail, in the enclosed envelop, as to whether you will be present for the examination on the above date; prompt advice is essential in order that satisfactory arrangements for the examination may be

Yours very truly,

J. J. THAMES, Division Appraiser.

They had sent such a formal notice out in August demanding that appraisers appear in Dallas on their own expenses.

But Col. Dick McCarty did not pay Philip Kniskern $1 for his book, and he did not pay out $50 in expenses and waste a lot of time going to and from Dallas, 200 miles from his home, to take Mr. Philip Kniskern's examination, initiated by Mr. Autocrat Fahey to get rid of congressional appointees. He felt that after appraising all appraisals in Shackelford County without criticism for 18 long months he ought to be qualified. And I want to show you Col. Dick McCarty's reply:

Office of Country Journalism, Albany, Tex., January 14, 1935.

Home Owners' Loan Corporation, Dallas, Tex.

(Attention J. J. Thomas, Division Appraiser.)

Dear Sir: In accordance with your request that I advise you whether or not that I will be in Dallas for an examination to see whether I am qualified as fee appraiser, which examination is to be held on the 18th of January, I beg now to advise you I will not be

In your letter you stated that the expenses of such a trip would not be paid by the Home Owners' Loan Corporation. You further stated, in effect, that inasmuch as I failed to appear at Dallas for the August examination, if I did not appear for this examination I would not be qualified for further appraisal work after December 31 last. I take it, therefore, that I am no longer the appraiser for this country. for this county.

After checking my records, I find that during the more than 18 months' work as fee appraiser for this county I have made 23 appraisals, 22 of which were in this county and 1 made upon your special request at Stamford, Tex. Eight of the appraisals were made at Moran, Tex. I have traveled 400 miles in such work, and for my work and expense you have paid me during the 18 months only $115.

I can easily understand how it would be profitable for one in the more populous centers to attend at his own expense such trips for examination, but I fail to understand how the Washington office can expect it of one receiving the meager compensation such as I have received to do so.

Inasmuch as I am automatically discharged for refusing to attend the Dallas meeting to be held on January 18 at my own expense, I am sending a copy of this letter to the Honorable Thomas L. Blanton, Congressman from this district, through whose courtesy and without any solicitation I received this appointment, to the end that he may appoint my successor. letter of January 11 to me is also forwarded to him.

Very truly yours,

RICHARD H. MCCARTY.

Stamford is about 40 miles from Albany where Colonel McCarty lives, and Moran is 15 miles from his home. And with all such travel at his own expense, he had received only $115 for 18 months' work. Yet they wanted him to spend $50 to go 200 miles to Dallas to take Kniskern's examination.

So they removed Hon. Richard H. McCarty, and when they did it they removed a splendid gentleman in my old home county, where I was married and where some of my children were born. And if Autocrat Fahey does not reinstate these men, I am going to punish him on every occasion.

Col. Dick McCarty is known as the "prince of journalists" all over the United States. His matchless editorials have been copied frequently in the New York Times and other metropolitan newspapers. He is one of the best-known country editors in the United States, and one of the best beloved men in the United States. He had a birthday not long ago and the editors from all over Texas, 600 miles away, gathered at his little home town and gave him a 2-day celebration. Last fall when this Kniskern examination came on they notified him to appear. Col. Dick McCarty has known intimately the people of his county for 40 years. He knows every piece of property in the county, and its history. It was simply ridiculous for Autocrat Fahey to require him to take this Kniskern examination. He refused to go and was removed. Had he paid $10 for Kniskern's book he would not have been removed.

Mr. Chairman, all on earth my amendment does is to require this autocratic Board and arrogant Mr. Fahey to appoint the county attorneys in your district from your district and not send outsiders there from 400 to 1,000 miles away. If my amendment is adopted, it will require this autocratic Board, headed by this prince of autocrats, Mr. Fahey, the most arrogant man who ever held a public office in the United States, when they appoint a county appraiser in your district, to appoint that county appraiser from the men in your district and not send in some henchmen from distant places out of your district. [Applause.]

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, the first provision of the amendment before the House is somewhat in conformity with the section as drawn; but the latter part of the amendment, which provides that the language following the period in line 22 down to and including the period in line 24 be stricken from the bill, presents a matter of serious importance.

The bill would require the Board to name their attorneys, agents, and employees from among residents of the State or region in which they serve and those to be retained would be required to meet this qualification. The committee thought that time should be given for the Board to readjust these appointments to meet the requirements laid down in this section. So the provision was adopted which allows 90 days for the Board to make proper rules and regulations to make their appointments conform to the standards established.

Mr. Chairman, if the amendment now offered is adopted, it will become immediately operative on the passage of this bill, and will necessitate a task practicably impossible. It will lead to confusion, to unnecessary expense, and will seriously handicap and embarrass the Board in continuing the work which we regard as so urgent. The Corporation must go forward with this work immediately to meet the distressed conditions of the country. The amendment would eliminate proper time for the Board to put these requirements into effect and would greatly hamper the administration of this act, and I think would present very serious difficulties. For this reason the amendment should not be adopted.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw the last clause of my amendment, as some of the Members seem to object to it. That is the clause relating to the 90 days. I ask that that part be eliminated.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the modified amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Modified amendment proposed by Mr. Blanton: On page 7, line 19, after the word "office" insert "or congressional district", and in line 21, after the word "State", insert "or congressional district, respectively."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment | offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Blanton], as modified.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. RAMSPECK: On page 7, line 22, after the word "office", strike out the period, insert a comma, and the following: "or who is an officer or director of any firm, corpo-ration, or association engaged in lending money on real estate."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. RAMSPECK].

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now recurs on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BROWN]. The Clerk will read the amendment for information.

The Clerk read the Brown amendment, as follows:

Amendment offred by Mr. Brown of Michigan: Page 7, after line 24, insert the following new section:

"Sec. 11. Subsection (1) of section 4 of the Home Owners' Loan Act of 1933, as amended, is amended by the striking out the last command therein and the following: 'or in any case in which the home more reason of the above the last command the following: 'or in any case in which the home more reason of the policy of the last command the following: 'or lies to be a section of the last command the following: 'or lies to be a section of the last command the following: 'or lies to be a section of the last command the following: 'or lies to be a section of the last command the following that the last command the following the last command the last command the last command the last command the last comm the home mortgage or other obligation or lien is held by an institution which is in liquidation."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MASSINGALE. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Massingale: Page 7, line 25, insert a new section to read as follows:

"Sec. 11. Section to read as follows.

"Sec. 11. Section 4 of the Home Loan Act of 1933 is amended by adding the following subsection following subsection (h):

"Provided, No person shall be allowed to act as appraiser if he is in the employ of any company holding a loan on the property, or if he is interested in the subject matter of the loan."

Mr. SWEENEY. Mr. Chairman, does not the Ramspeck amendment, which has just been adopted, cover this?

Mr. RAMSPECK. If the gentleman will permit, I think the amendment just adopted, which prevented the employment of any person who is an officer or director in a corporation, firm, or association engaged in lending money on real estate, would cover the purpose the gentleman has in

Mr. MASSINGALE. I do not think so.

Mr. Chairman, the purpose of this amendment is thisand I want to say to the House that so far as I am concerned I am favorable to the bill, not because I believe in the bill as it has been recommended for passage by the committee, but I am for it somewhat like a drowning man catches at a straw. If we can get any kind of relief out of this bill-and I think it is remote that we are going to get any; that is, I mean the common people of the country-I want what little there may be a prospect of getting.

I admired yesterday the frank and fair statement that was made by the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. Golds-BOROUGH ]. When this bill first was presented here I thought I was an ingrate; I thought I was cruel and suspicious, because I had the idea, from what I saw of the operation of this bill down in Oklahoma, that somebody was being milked and that a fraud was being perpetrated upon the people of the country. After I heard the explanation of the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. Goldsborough] of what took place in Congress when this bill was passed I came back to my original idea of what this bill was intended for. These eulogies that were paid the building-and-loan associations and other agencies in dispensing this money for the Government of the United States kind of impressed me. I thought perhaps they were doing a benevolent piece of work, but I discover that this bill originated simply for the purpose of taking over the frozen assets of the building-and-loan companies and other lending institutions of the country and was not intended to benefit the fellow who needed help on his home.

This amendment, I really believe, is the only one that has been proposed here that is in the interest of Uncle Sam and, God knows, from what has come out in the hearings on this bill, he needs some sympathy. Here we have appropriated or expended nearly $3,000,000,000, and the buildingand-loan companies own the bank, they appoint the appraisers and they just do business with one another. Now. there ought to be a stop to this for what little is to be dispensed in the future, and I want to say to you that when I say "little", I say it advisedly. Why, we have only $1,750,000,000 more to put out. Now, we ought to take care of the Government to some extent with respect to that money, and let me give you this-I know this kind of operation is going on down where I live. A lot of building-andloan companies are in liquidation, and they are selling and unloading to the Government of the United States the very worst form of their securities at 100 cents on the dollar.

Mr. ELLENBOGEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman

Mr. MASSINGALE. I yield. Mr. ELLENBOGEN. I want to add to what the gentleman has said that in many cases the attorneys for the banks also examine the titles.

Mr. MASSINGALE. Yes, they do that; and it is a one-sided business which I think ought to stop. We ought to appoint appraisers who are not members and have no stock in any building-and-loan association.

Now, they do this in Oklahoma-I do not know what they are doing here, and let me give you this as a qualification for an appraiser in Oklahoma. This is from Mr. John F. Mahr, the Home Owners' Loan Corporation administrator in the State of Oklahoma. He wrote me a letter and gave me the privilege, he said, of naming some fellows whom he might consider to act as appraisers down there, and here is his language:

Please bear in mind when making your recommendation that in order to qualify, the applicants must be thoroughly grounded in the real-estate and home-mortgage business or be an active architect or home builder. They must not only have a knowledge of home values but must have demonstrated the same as an active appraiser for a going lending concern, Federal or State court.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may proceed for 3 additional minutes. The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. MASSINGALE. This means he has to be connected with a building-and-loan association and I really think that the man intended that the word "going" should qualify not only the lending concern, but that it should qualify the two courts mentioned, the Federal court and the State court. The only courts in our part of the country that are going" courts now are courts of foreclosure. They are foreclosing real-estate mortgages on farms and on city property and if you take that kind of litigation out of court we have no courts that are doing business down in Oklahoma.

I will say to you gentlemen this, and I want you to bear this in mind-the Government of the United States is entitled at least to a degree of protection in this matter. In this $1,750,000,000 that we are yet to give away, let us fix it so that if a fellow on the outside, a home owner, wants to come in and borrow on his home, he will not be turned down by the title examiner and the appraiser who belong to a building-and-loan association and his loan will not be laid aside, but give him a shot at it. As I told you a while ago, I know of loan companies down in Oklahoma that are in process of liquidation insofar as their debts are concerned.

Mr. MASSINGALE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 2 minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma?

There was no objection.

Mr. MASSINGALE. I find this condition down there: The Government of the United States is going down there among these depressed people, and the people are more depressed in my part of the world than anywhere else in this Nation. They are paying 100 percent on the dollar to the building-and-loan associations for the loans, and the loan | company is liquidating its indebtedness and paying old men and women 65 cents on the dollar for money that they have had there for 3 and 5 years. Now, that is the object of my amendment. I have another amendment-I do not know whether I am going to get time to offer it or not. I want to offer it for the RECORD. It is to the effect that these loan agencies, building-and-loan associations that are in liquidation, or those attempting to satisfy their debts at a discount-that we shall not do any business with them; that they shall take these bonds that the Government of the United States is turning into their laps and have their creditors, men and women who have put money up on withdrawal stock, which they agreed when they got the money to satisfy on 30 days' demand-that they cannot go out and settle their debts at 65 cents on the dollar and get money from the United States 100 percent on frozen assets.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this section and amendments thereto now close.

The motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question recurs on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. Massingale]. The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. Nichols) there were 61 ayes and 63 noes.

Mr. MASSINGALE. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chair appointed as tellers Mr. Hancock of North Carolina and Mr. Massingale.

The Committee again divided; and the tellers reported that there were 93 aves and 54 noes.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MASSINGALE. Mr. Chairman, I believe that the amendment above proposed and which was adopted by the House is an amendment that no fair-minded business person could object to. In fact, I do not believe that any buildingand-loan association, or any other loan agency, should object to it. As stated above, the Government has expended approximately $3,000,000,000, and the bulk has gone to money-lending agencies on real estate. As I understand from what has been said on the floor of the House, a very small part of it has gone in the way of direct loans to owners

I certainly have no objection to any loan agency being helped and rehabilitated by the Government of the United States, provided an indirect benefit of the beneficence of the Government gets to the owner. I am not accusing any building-and-loan association, or any other agency, of committing any act that any other person similarly situated would not as a rule do. When this law was passed it was intended, as revealed in a statement by one of the committee, Mr. Goldsborough, of Maryland, that Congress meant to appropriate and it has appropriated huge sums of money, up to this time, for the express and avowed purpose of saving building-and-loan associations and other loan agencies from loss and probable ruin.

However, it is not fair to the Government of the United States to give to the loan agencies the right to spend this money and the right to appraise the properties and loans. I think the Government of the United States ought to have some person, not connected with the beneficiaries of the act, to see that it has some form of protection, and it was for that reason that I introduced the amendment above referred to.

As I have stated, it must be apparent that this amendment is not only decent, but citizens of the United States ought to be willing to concede that their Government, which is lavishing billions of dollars for recovery, should be given some consideration as to the value of the securities it is dealing in and not leave the whole transaction up to the persons intended to be benefited by the act.

Now, this amendment is carrying an additional $1,750,-000,000, and perhaps more, to be further distributed to these various loan agencies, and while the Government has had no protection, so far as representation is concerned, in the negotiations that have heretofore taken place, I insist that | it should be represented in the expenditure of the additional $1,750,000,000.

I think this amendment will mean also that the individual home owner is assured of greater participation in the benefits intended to be distributed to the people under this law, than they would receive without some wholesome provision providing that the loan companies shall not be allowed to act as appraisers where they are interested in the subject matter of the loan, and that no other person should be allowed to act as appraiser if he is in the employ of any company whose loan is being absorbed or taken over by the Government.

In other words, I do not think that the loan agencies should be permitted to act as juror, witness, and court, in determining what the Government should pay for these loans and leave Uncle Sam in the role of looking on with his check book in his hand ready to fill in whatever amount the loan agency suggests, and to have no voice in the

During the discussion of this act, the following proceedings appear in regard to another amendment offered by me:

Mr. Massingale. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. Massingale: Amend section 4 of Home Owners' Loan Act of 1933, by adding a new subsection, following subsection M of section 4 of said act, as follows:

"(N) Provided, That when any building-and-loan association receives bonds from this Corporation at 100 cents on the dollar, such building-and-loan association shall be required to pay holders of its stock, its depositors, and its other creditors 100 cents on the amount invested by such stockholders, depositors, and creditors in said building and loan association, and it shall not be permitted to settle with any of its stockholders, depositors, or other creditors by distributing to them, or any of them, the bonds of this Corporation on any agreement, contract, or understanding of this Corporation on any agreement, contract, or understanding that requires such stockholder, depositor, or other creditor, to discount his claim against such building-and-loan association."

I offered this amendment for the reason that I have been informed that there are loan companies in Oklahoma who are liquidating their indebtedness, and by that I mean this: Some companies have sold what is called "withdrawal stock", or have taken from people large sums of money on deposit, and have given their stock for that money with the understanding that they could surrender their stock and get their money with interest. Some of this money has been on deposit for several years and upon demand being made for its return, a return has been refused, not because the building-and-loan association did not want to pay it perhaps, but because it could not pay it on account of depressed conditions, and since the Government has come to their rescue by taking up their frozen loans, I do not think it is fair that the Government should do business with such loan companies at 100 cents on the dollar and permit the loan companies to require their depositors to discount their claims against the loan companies.

When this last amendment was proposed, the Chair ruled the amendment not to be germane to the act under consideration and, of course, I have no complaint to make and I believe that the Chair was technically correct in sustaining the point of order to this amendment. There are a number of men I know in the building-and-loan business in western Oklahoma that will agree with me in this: They, themselves, would not approve of such conduct on the part of any building-and-loan association with which they are connected. I do not believe that the class of men to whom I refer would engage in such practices, but this amendment was proposed in an effort to check and control those who did require that their creditors discount their claims against them and who did, at the same time, take money from the Government of the United States at the full face value of the loans, which the Government is paying off for them in order that they may keep their heads above the water and in order to keep their loan associations from ruin. There are things in connection with the making of these loans that the people should know.

Some 800,000 loans have been handled by the H. O. L. C. since this law was enacted, and these transactions took place within the short period of 15 months. I think the | average loan was approximately $3,000, and it is reported that 240,000 of the 800,000 loans handled are in default. If one-third of the loans handled have become in default on payments, interest, and taxes in 15 months, it stands to reason that a much larger percent of the 800,000 loans will be in default later on; and this means that the Government will be compelled to pay off the taxes or else begin a wholesale foreclosure business. We have enough foreclosure business now; in fact, the courts are jammed with foreclosures; and I fear that the Government of the United States is on the road to becoming the greatest landlord, so far as town and city residences are concerned, that the world has ever known anything about.

In all, approximately $5,000,000,000 has been handed over by the Government of the United States for use by mortgage companies, loan agencies, building-and-loan associations, and other concerns holding mortgages on city property. Five billion dollars is a vast sum of money.

I am going to give my support to this bill, not because I want to do it in its present lop-sided form, but I am supporting it in the hope that with the amendments approved during the recent hearing on the bill, the people in distress have a prospect of getting some little relief and perhaps it will enable some of them to save their homes.

It was stated on the floor of the House, and advanced as an argument for the favorable consideration of the bill, that the loan companies would not make any new loans and that it was up to the Congress to provide this additional $1.750,-000,000 in order to save the homes of the people in the cities and towns. I fully agree with the statement that no further private loans are going to be made and why should they be made when it is known to the world that Congress is going to extend further credit of $1,750,000,000 to these agencies which now have mortgages? This will enable them to collect 100 cents on the dollar on many loans that are of doubtful value. Such companies, of course, are not interested in making new loans; it is a far more profitable business to them to let the Government clear their note cases by taking over their uncollectible notes at 100 cents on the dollar.

I further contend that this present bill is an incongruous law and should not have been passed without further amendment. For instance: as the law reads, a person having an apartment of more than four units, is not eligible for a loan in any event. Though his building is worth $25,000, if he desires to borrow $1,000 to take up an existing loan on his apartment, he is not eligible to receive the loan. It is not designed so much to help him save his home; the main purpose is to help him borrow more.

On the other hand, it makes no difference what the size of his apartment may be, whether a 2-unit apartment or a 25-unit apartment, he is allowed to borrow as much as $50,000, if he wants to spend that money on repairs and go deeper in debt. It does not take any argument to show that such incongruous provisions of the bill will not be

I am wondering, when supporting this measure, if the Members of Congress from the greater cities of the country are going to be as generous to my class of people as I am to them and their class of people. Congress is going to be confronted with an act providing that the Government of the United States make direct loans to farmers to protect their farm homes from foreclosure. This contemplated piece of legislation only calls for $3,000,000,000, $2,000,-000,000 less than the amount appropriated under this bill. I do not claim that the farmer is any more entitled to protection than the city dweller, but he is certainly entitled to as much consideration and to the same protection that is given to the town man.

Another bill of importance to the farmer, that will call for the expenditure of moneys, is a bill providing for protecting the soil from wind and water erosion and, generally, to conserve the land of the country. The appropriations contemplated in the two bills mentioned in behalf of farmers will aggregate but little more than 50 percent of what has already been authorized for expenditure by the Government in behalf of the fellow living in the cities and towns.

I sincerely trust that when these farm-relief measures come up for consideration of the Congress that there will be no hesitancy in rendering to the farmer a like service to that rendered the beneficiaries of this piece of legislation.

Mr. SWEENEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Sweeney: After the Massingale amendment, which is now section 12 of the bill, add a new section to read as follows:

"Sec. 13. The fourth sentence of section 4 (d) of the Home Owners' Loan Act of 1933 is amended to read as follows:

"Each home mortgage or other obligation or lien so acquired shall be carried as a first lien or refinanced as a home mortgage by the Corporation on the basis of the price paid therefor by the Corporation, and shall be amortized by means of monthly payments sufficient to retire the interest and principal within a period of sufficient to retire the interest and principal within a period of not to exceed 15 years, but the amortization payments of any home owner may be made quarterly, semiannually, or annually if in the judgment of the Corporation the situation of the home owner rejudgment of the Corporation the situation of the home owner requires it. Effective 30 days after the passage of this act, payments of any or all obligations due the Home Owners' Loan Corporation from a home owner may be paid at any branch agency of said Home Owners' Loan Corporation, or of any post office or subsection of any post office throughout the United States.'"

Mr. HOLLISTER. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.
Mr. HOLLISTER. It is impossible to tell from the reading by the Clerk just where this amendment will appear in the bill or in the original act. As I understand it, the Massingale amendment was to subdivision (h) of section 4, and this is to follow the Massingale amendment in the original act?

The CHAIRMAN. The Massingale amendment was adopted, and that was section 12.

Mr. HOLLISTER. Section 12 of the bill? The CHAIRMAN. That was an amendment to section 4 of the original act to follow subdivision (h).

Mr. HOLLISTER. Does this follow as another subdivision? The CHAIRMAN. No; it becomes a new section of this present bill.

Mr. HOLLISTER. I understood the Clerk to read it as following the Massingale amendment. Is that correct?

The CHAIRMAN. It is not.

Mr. SWEENEY. Mr. Chairman, the only new matter in this amendment is that providing a means of convenience of payment. It provides that effective 30 days after the passage of the act payment of any and all obligations due the Home Owners' Loan Corporation may be made at any branch agency of said Corporation or at any post office or substation of any post office throughout the United States.

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry. The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Ohio yield for that purpose?

Mr. SWEENEY. I yield.

Mr. MOTT. I am still unable to understand from the Chairman's statement just where we are in the bill. What is the last section that the Clerk read?

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment of the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. Massingale] is a new section to the pending bill, H. R. 6021, and it became section 12 of the bill that we are now considering. The amendment now pending, if it prevails, will become section 13 of this bill.

Mr. MOTT. And where will this section go in the old act? The CHAIRMAN. It would be an amendment to section 4 (d) of the old act.

Mr. MOTT. Will the Chairman inform me to what section of the pending bill the amendment is now offered?

Mr. SWEENEY. It is section 10.

The CHAIRMAN. It follows the amendment of the gentleman from Oklahoma.

Mr. MOTT. Is that an amendment to section 10?

Mr. SWEENEY. It is a new section.

The CHAIRMAN. That became a new section. The amendment of the gentleman from Oklahoma became section 12, and if the pending amendment prevails, it will become section 13 of the pending bill.

Mr. MOTT. I did not hear section 11 of the bill read. Has that section been read and disposed of?

The CHAIRMAN. Section 11 of the pending bill has not vet been read.

Mr. MOTT. That answers my question.

Mr. SWEENEY. The existing law does not provide any methods of payment or how they shall be made. Regulations required payments to be forwarded to Washington. I am sure it is the experience of many Members of the House who are familiar with the subject that the home owners have been compelled to go to the post office and buy a money order at an expense of 25 cents or more each month and send that money order to Washington. The Board is contemplating now the establishment of regional offices throughout the country where these collections may be received. This change helps but does not correct the situation. Take, for example, the State of Pennsylvania. If the regional office is located at Harrisburg, then the home owner in Pittsburgh, in Altoona, or any other place, who has obligations to pay to the corporation, if he has no checking account must, of necessity, go to the post office and get a money order and mail his remittance to Harrisburg. That will amount to 25 cents or more each time, on an average, and three or four dollars a year means a lot to these poor people. I am asking that the facilities of the post offices of this country be placed at the disposal of these home owners, so that they can go to the nearest post office or substation and make their monthly payments instead of purchasing a money order and mailing it to the Home Owners' Loan Corporation at Washington or the regional office in their State if they do not happen to live in the city where the agency is located. We have placed at the disposal of the Treasury Department the facilities of the post offices throughout the Nation to sell baby bonds. We utilize public Federal buildings for a great many things, sometimes at great expense to the Government. Let us help these distressed home owners and not subject them to additional expense.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SWEENEY. Yes.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. To what section of the original act does the gentleman's amendment properly belong? Mr. SWEENEY. Section 4 (d) of the original act.

The first part of my amendment is already in the act. have incorporated that entire sentence and added the new matter referred to.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be again reported.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection the Clerk will again report the amendment.

There was no objection, and the Clerk again reported the Sweeney amendment.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. I think the committee has no objection to the amendment.

Mr. SWEENEY. With the understanding that the committee has no objection, I am satisfied the House will adopt my amendment.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, let me suggest to the members of the committee they have set up a bookkeeping system in the Home Owners' Loan Corporation, and they are mailing out their remittance notices, and people mail in their remittances. There is nothing to prevent the Corporation from setting up branch collection offices under paragraph (k) of section 4 of the original act, which says the Board is authorized to make such bylaws, rules, and regulations, not inconsistent with the provisions of this section, as may be necessary for the proper conduct of the affairs of the Corporation. So why should we necessarily try to impose further restrictions upon them and cramp their style as far as the mere matter of bookkeeping is concerned? After all, the Corporation can best determine for itself how it shall collect this money and how the remittance notices shall be sent out. I see no reason why this amendment should be adopted.

Mr. CONNERY. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield.

Mr. CONNERY. The Corporation will not do it at all unless it is set out in the law for them. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Sweeney] is trying to protect these people. I know that in our own place they are gradually cutting out the branch offices. There will be no branch offices for the small cities and towns, and they will have to mail in their remittances to the big cities. That will mean an expense, There will not be any branch office to take care of that unless it is written into the law that they can go to the post offices in the little towns or villages.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Let me suggest that if we set up a lot of collection offices in every post office and have a man stationed there for that work, manifestly we will add to the force down here as well as the field force in administering the thing.

Mr. CONNERY. It would help the people, and the small amount it will cost will not amount to anything.

Mr. SWEENEY. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield.

Mr. SWEENEY. I am satisfied the Home Owners' Loan Corporation will be with us for a long time; that they will have to set up a repair department, a collection department, and all that sort of thing. This method is simply giving the poor people a chance to make their remittances in their own home town.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Let me suggest that everybody who is designated to receive money will have to be bonded. It makes it possible to write a great many bonds, which might prove to be an interesting possibility.

Mr. SWEENEY. There are many people there now who are already under bond.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Dirksen] has expired.

Mr. HOEPPEL. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SWEENEY1.

The Clerk read as follows:

At the end of the amendment offered by Mr. Sweeney insert the following: "Interest on the unpaid balance of the obligation of the home owner to the Corporation shall be at a rate not exceeding 4 percent per annum."

Mr. HOEPPEL. Mr. Chairman, we have been told that the measure we are considering is a relief measure, and indeed it is; but unfortunately relief has been extended in too many instances to financial institutions rather than to our distressed citizens, with the result that the acute suffering of our people, with its insidious demoralization of the fibers of society, continues. In proof of this assertion and for the information of the Membership of the House, I should like to read from a clipping received today, pertaining to conditions in southern California, in reference to the Federal Emergency Relief Administration:

HUNDREDS STARVE-STARVATION, DISEASE

That is the subhead. Speaking with reference to the investigation launched by the unemployed relief workers of Los Angeles County, the article reads:

During the 10 minutes allotted to state her case, Mrs. Purdy painted a sordid word picture of "slow starvation" in scores of families, rapid spread of tuberculosis among women and school children and babies crying for milk.

Written opposite this is a statement from my correspondent, as follows:

I am told that thousands of gallons of milk went down the sewer to keep up the price.

I am convinced in my own mind that conditions like this are existing.

I also wish to read an extract from a letter received yesterday from a man who served overseas with me in France. He is a fine, outstanding, worthy American citizen with a wife and two children. This is what he states:

Things seem to be going from bad to worse for me out here, and the time is not far distant when I will have to take my bundle and  buoyant hopes as long as I can but have arrived, frankly, where I haven't the slightest trace of a definite plan or a cheering hope.

My worldly possessions are the clothes I am wearing, and my monetary census amounts to the round number naught. I have to borrow a stamp to get this to you. This is not sob-sister stuff, but actual conditions, and when men like me begin to use what little brains they have, with gaunt starvation and even worse humiliation confronting us from every angle, and multiply my isolated case by a million and add 11,000,000 additional, it is not difficult to believe that there possibly may not be another national election in 1936. This can no more endure than it did in a similar time in France, when the people took matters in hands. I hope it will not come, but I am fearful of it.

Conditions such as are pictured in this letter and in the article read absolutely demand that we devote our most earnest thought and endeavor toward alleviating in every possible way the burden of distress which is pressing so heavily upon our people. We cannot afford to disregard one avenue of relief, one opportunity for extending a helping hand to our overburdened, suffering citizens.

Referring to my amendment, which seeks to reduce the interest exacted from the distressed home owner from 5 to 4 percent, I wish to say that when we passed the original Home Owners' Loan Act we provided an unguaranteed bond which bore 4-percent interest, and we then charged the distressed mortgagor 5 percent, which was adequate under those conditions. Now, since we have guaranteed the bonds, and since they are selling under 3 percent, Uncle Sam is acting the part of Shylock when he continues to exact 5 percent from the distressed mortgagor. From the standpoint of justice to our distressed home owners, this amendment ought to be adopted. If it is not adopted in this House, I think it is very probable that a similar amendment will be offered and adopted in the Senate. The Senate has already sent over to us a bill providing 31/2 percent interest on loans to our distressed farmers. This bill, reducing the interest rate to the farmer, has met opposition in committee and has not yet been reported to the House for action, notwithstanding its merit and the relief which is contemplated to be given to our distressed farmers. If we do not adopt my amendment at this time, providing similar relief to our distressed home owners, I believe it is very probable that the bill will come back to us from the Senate with 'an amendment of this nature, for the Senate has by its action in providing for reduction of interest rates to our farmers expressed itself as opposed to interest profiteering on the part of the

It may be said that we cannot get the funds, but I would remind those who make such statements that we are selling baby bonds today at 2 percent and less. Why can we not utilize these funds obtained from baby bonds to purchase our own Home Owners' Loan Corporation bonds? In addition, we have over a billion dollars on deposit in Postal Savings which we lend to the private banker at 21/2 percent without any security. These Postal Savings funds should likewise be applied to the purchase of Home Owners' Loan Corporation bonds. Under this procedure, if my amendment is adopted and the interest rate reduced to 4 percent, there will still be a profit to the Government of approximately 11/2 percent on the interest charged the distressed home owner. If we continue to exact 5 percent interest from the distressed home owner, the Government would make a profit as high as 21/2 percent per annum if we applied our own Federal funds in the purchase of the bonds. Even though we do not apply Federal funds as we should for this purpose, there is still a profit of more than 21/4 percent accruing to the Government from the interest payments of the distressed home owner on the funds which are today obtained from the private banking hierarchy.

I contend that the Government should not make a profit on interest exactions from the distressed home owner as it is doing today to the tune of two and a quarter percent, not including the cost of the Home Owners' Loan mortgage transactions.

ONE-PERCENT INTEREST GUARANTEES PROFIT

I have in my office a communication from a building and loan association in which I hold certificates advising me that they can make a good profit on the handling of loans where | then I hope the committee will vote on the amendment.

they lend money at 1 percent more than they themselves pay for the funds deposited. As the Government has very little overhead, and as the Home Owners' Loan Corporation transactions have been handled generally in block or large groups, and as the funds are obtained through the sale of bonds in huge amounts, it is reasonable to assume that the Home Owners Loan Corporation would make a profit if they charged the home owners not more than 1 or 11/4 percent more than they themselves pay to the private lender for the necessary funds

If this amendment of mine is adopted, the distressed home owner will be saved at least $47,500,000, which is no small figure to the hundreds of thousands of home owners who are in mortgage distress and also out of employment.

Of course, it is understood that those in the Congress who favor the bankers and the building-and-loan associations will oppose this amendment, inasmuch as the 4-percent interest which I propose for the home owner who obtains relief from the Home Owners' Loan Corporation would be virtually only one-half of what the home owner is required to pay today to the private banker and the private building-and-loan associations, exacting 7 and 8 percent and even higher rates of

If we wish to do something for the distressed citizen, we can do it in this instance without expense to the taxpayer, and we should do it, even though our action may not meet with the approval of the private financial leaders, whose principal agency is centered in Wall Street.

DISABLED VETERANS ALSO PAY UNNECESSARY INTEREST TRIBUTE

Notwithstanding that the Government has more than sufficient Postal Savings available, and also that Government issues at 3 percent or less are continually oversubscribed by the Wall Street money barons, we find it is still necessary for disabled war veterans, borrowing on their life insurance policies, to pay the Veterans' Administration 6 percent interest for such loans.

Many private insurance companies charge less than 6 percent when their policyholders are forced to borrow on their policies, and no fair-minded individual, recognizing these facts, can justify the interest exaction of 6 percent which the Veterans' Administration demands when unemployed and desperate veterans are forced to borrow on their policies.

At a later date I shall discuss this question in more detail and show, from official records, that the record of the Government in the insurance business justifies a serious doubt as to the benefits accruing to the individual citizen through Government competition with private business.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, our advices are that the cost of handling loans on real estate of the type provided for in this bill runs between 1 and 2 percent, as developed by the experience of the established lending institutions of the country. It costs on an average about 3 percent and above to obtain the funds with which to carry on the work of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation. Everybody can understand that in setting up an emergency institution of this kind, with foreclosures widespread throughout the Nation, with conditions of distress so accentuated as to demand this unusual and extraordinary effort of the Government to come to the rescue of the home owners of the country, it is inevitable that with an institution of this type there should be a higher initial expense in putting the system into operation; so that the interest rate would be somewhat greater than the rate which experience shows is necessary in the lending institutions of the United

Mr. HOEPPEL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. STEAGALL. I am sorry; I have not time to yield. Mr. HOEPPEL. The gentleman has unlimited time. The gentleman ought to yield to me and let me answer his state-

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, I decline to yield. We must finish this bill today. I want to make a statement, and

Mr. Chairman, this is the situation: People of this country who were confronted with foreclosures upon their homes, with the danger of having their families left without shelter, are not concerned with a trivial difference in the interest rate to be paid if they can refinance their indebtedness and save their homes. It is easy to talk about reducing interest rates; that makes good reading back home; but it is a trivial thing to the individual borrowers who are about lose their homes. It will be a serious thing for them, however, if we so hamper and handicap the Home Owners' Loan Corporation in the matter of interest charges that they are forced to employ stricter methods of appraisal, to restrict their loans, and curtail the relief that they have been enabled to afford the citizens of the country who are in danger of losing their homes. That is what is going to happen if we put an interest rate into effect that will involve enormous losses to the Government. Everybody knows that the problem of losses is bound to confront the Home Owners' Loan Corporation sooner or later. If we want to give money away, that is another matter. But I am sure this House desires to adhere to the policies upon which we embarked; that we desire to go forward with this work until the task is finished and not attempt to throw difficulties and handicaps into the management of this organization and the lending of these funds. There could be but one result from such a policy, and that would be to tighten up requirements and to restrict the relief to be afforded the distressed citizens of the country. The rates of interest being paid by mortgagors financed by the Home Owners' Loan Corporation are the lowest ever known in the United States.

I ask that the amendment be voted down.

Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto do now close.

Mr. HOEPPEL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield before he presses his motion?

Mr. STEAGALL. No.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Alabama.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. Mott and Mr. Hoeppel) there were-ayes 100, noes 27. So the motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from California [Mr. HOEPPEL] to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SWEENEY].

Mr. HOEPPEL. May we have the amendment read?

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment to the amendment may be read.

The Clerk read the Hoeppel amendment to the Sweeney amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SWEENEY].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment in the form of a new section.

The Clerk read as follows:

Following Sweeney amendment: Section 4 of the Home Owners' Loan Act of 1933, as amended, by adding at the end thereof a new subsection to read as follows:

"STAY OF PROCEEDINGS

"If on or within 5 years after the day this amendment takes "If on or within 5 years after the day this amendment takes effect any home owner or owner of real property occupied by such owner files an application to refinance the mortgage or other indebtedness upon his home or real property occupied by such owner under the provisions of this act and said application is refused, rejected, or unduly delayed and such owner and applicant is in default in the payment of either principal or interest of any debt secured by a mortgage on such home or real property, or of taxes the nonpayment of which constitutes a default under such mortgage such default shall constitute an act of bankruptcy and such gage, such default shall constitute an act of bankruptcy, and such home owner being therefore unable to pay his or her debts as they fall due shall be deemed insolvent and a bankrupt for the purpose of this title.

"No proceeding to foreclose or otherwise to enforce any claim against or out of the home, or real property of such bankrupt and no sale or foreclosure, execution, or otherwise shall be instituted, further prosecuted, held, or made on or within 5 years after the day this act takes effect except upon petition in bankruptcy duly filed in a court of the United States pursuant to the act of July 1, 1898, entitled 'An act to establish a uniform system of bank-ruptcy throughout the United States', as heretofore amended."

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the amendment that it is not germane to the section which it seeks to amend.

Mr. TRUAX. Will the gentleman withhold his point of order?

Mr. STEAGALL. All debate has been closed on all sections and amendments thereto.

Mr. TRUAX. This is a new section.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order. because the amendment as offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TRUAX] is not germane to the section of the pending bill or to the section of the act of 1933 it seeks to amend. It is not within the province of the Banking and Currency Committee to pass upon matters of bankruptcy; bankruptcy is the gist of the gentleman's amendment. That is a matter which would be within the province of the Judiciary Committee. For these reasons and others the point of order is sustained.

Mr. MASSINGALE. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. Massingale: Amend section 4 of Home Owners' Loan Act of 1933, by adding a new subsection, following subsection M of section 4 of said act, as follows:

"(N) Provided, That when any building-and-loan association receives bonds from this Corporation at 100 cents on the dollar, such building-and-loan association shall be required to pay holders of its stock, its depositors, and its other creditors 100 cents on the amount invested by such stockholders, depositors, and creditors in said building-and-loan association, and it shall not be permitted to settle with any of its stockholders, depositors, or other creditors by distributing to them, or any of them, the bonds of this Corporation on any agreement, contract, or understanding that requires such stockholder, depositor, or other creditor, to discount his claim against such building-and-loan association."

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the amendment is not germane to the section. It deals with a subject foreign to anything covered by this proposed legislation.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. Massingale] desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. MASSINGALE. Mr. Chairman, I hastily drew up this proposed amendment, but it occurs to me it is germane to this subject.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has examined as carefully as he could the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. Massingale], which seeks to amend section 4, subsection (m) of the Home Owners' Loan Act of 1933. The Chair feels that in view of the fact the gentleman's amendment refers to building-and-loan associations, which is not covered by subsection (m) of section 4 of the Home Owners' Loan Act of 1933, the point of order is well taken because the amendment is not germane. The Chair therefore sustains the point of order.

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Morr: Page 7, following section 10, insert a new section: "Subsection (j) of section 4 of the Home Owners' Loan Act of 1933 is amended by striking out the following language contained in the first sentence of said section: without regard to the provisions of other laws applicable to the employment or compensation of officers, attorneys, or agents of the United States."

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Chairman, this is the civil-service amendment, and it puts all officers and employees of H. O. L. C. under civil service. The reason it is offered, aside from its intrinsic merit, which is generally admitted by everyone, is that through it I want to accept an offer which was made on the floor a few minutes ago. While the gentleman from Georgia was speaking in opposition to the civil-service amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. Andrews], the gentleman from Georgia stated that had the gentleman from New York offered a straight civil-service amendment he would be glad to support it. This remark received a considerable amount of applause from both sides of the House, and I really think the Democrats concurred in | we enacted into law the Frazier-Lemke Farm Bankruptcy it even to a louder extent than the Republicans.

Now, Mr. Chairman, this is simply an amendment bringing all employees of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation under the civil-service laws of the United States. It is so simple that no one can misunderstand it. It merely amends section 4 of the original act by eliminating the language exempting H. O. L. C. employees and officers from civil service, and if adopted, the amendment will automatically put them all under civil service.

This is the kind of a civil-service amendment the gentleman from Georgia stated on the floor he would support, and, as I have said, his offer was loudly applauded by Democrats. Well, Mr. Chairman, here is now that precise amendment. I am anxious to see whether our friends on the other side will vote as they applaud, or whether this amendment, like the Andrews amendment, will be voted down by a straight party vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. Mott].

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.
Mr. McFARLANE. Does this include putting the Republican Members of Congress under civil service?

The CHAIRMAN. That is not a parliamentary inquiry. The question was taken: and on a division (demanded by Mr. Morr), there were—ayes 43, noes 103.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.
Mr. WOLCOTT. Will the Chair inform me whether the Brown amendment, adding a new paragraph, has been voted

The CHAIRMAN. The Brown amendment added a new section which became section 11 of the pending bill.

Mr. WOLCOTT. That amendment has been voted upon? The CHAIRMAN. It has been voted upon and adopted. The Clerk read as follows:

Sec. 14. Subsection (m) of section 4 of the Home Owners' Loan Act of 1933, as amended, is amended by striking out "$300,000,000" and inserting in lieu thereof "$400,000,000."

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the Clerk be instructed to number the sections properly, as we proceed with the bill, in view of the fact that the section numbers should be changed.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There was no objection.

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, the amendment which I offered a moment ago and which was ruled out of order, under the rules of this House, is the only legislation, in my humble judgment, that will relieve from foreclosure and save from losing their homes the hundreds of thousands and millions of home owners who have not been able or who will be unable to refinance their home mortgages.

I call your attention to the fact that this word "mortgage" is the most hideous word that can be uttered to these distressed people. This word "mortgage", composed of the two French words "mort", meaning death, and "gage", meaning the hand of death, is what this word is doing to these distressed people-literally choking and strangling them to an economic death.

Much solicitude has been presented and much sympathy has been offered for the thousands of people who cannot be reached by the legislation which we have now enacted. Regardless of all the speed that may be attached to these new amendments and this new legislation, even though I admit you have stirred up these bureaucrats in the H. O. L. C., as well as the autocrats, yet what are you going to do about the poor devil who cannot or will not be reached. Are you going to continue to let him sacrifice his home, his all, the same as you did with the American farmer until June 23, 1934, when

Act? This is the only vehicle that can be used; the only mechanics that can be employed is to enact my amendment for a national moratorium that will be declared constitutional by every court in this land. My moratorium amendment is constitutional because it is an amendment to the National Bankruptcy Act, an act over which the Congress of the United States has plenary power. You are the only body, the only agency in the world that can help these people and save their homes. Do you expect help from the money lenders and the Shylocks? Why, you might as well go and stand upon the beach and bid the main flood to abate its usual height. You may as well question the wolf as to why he has made the ewe bleat for her lamb. You may as well undertake to do anything most hard as to seek to soften that than what is harder—his damnable money-lender's heart.

Mr. Chairman, the man who has a home may be rich in the eyes of his family. He may have a roof to shelter those whom his heart holds dearest. His table may be furnished with frugal fare, and if he has the dauntless courage of manhood and woman's deathless love, he may be far richer, this humble worker, than the millionaire in his marble halls. [Applause.]

SEC. 16. Section 6 of the Home Owners' Loan Act of 1933, as amended, is amended by adding the following sentence at the end thereof: "For the purposes of this section, the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to allocate and make immediately available to the Board out of the funds appropriated pursuant to section 5 (g) the sum of $200,000, which shall be in addition to the funds heretofore appropriated or made available pursuant to this section, and shall be subject to the call of the Board and shall remain available until expended. Such funds shall be seed impartially in the promption and development of local thrift used impartially in the promotion and development of local thrift and home financing institutions whether State chartered or Federal."

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last

Mr. Chairman, I want to direct the attention of Members on both sides of the House, because this is an entirely nonpartisan matter and a nonpartisan question, to a provision which appears in the latter part of this bill in section 22, wherein the Housing Administration is authorized to insure loans for the purpose of modernization and repair, when made upon commercial business places, small manufactories, and so forth, to the extent, as appears in this bill, of $25,000, and I direct your attention to the fact that my colleague from the State of New York, Mr. O'CONNOR, will offer an amendment at the appropriate place for the purpose of increasing this $25,000 authorization to $50,000, as the maximum limit. I also call your attention to the fact that this does not involve any appropriation of money. It does not involve any additional authorization as to the amount of liability which the Government assumes through the Housing Administration. It is merely a broadening of its power under this section to set the wheels of industry going, to put men to work, and I especially direct your attention to the fact that this is the emergency part of the act. It expires the 31st of December of this year, while the remaining portions of the act are permanent, being the reconstruction portions. This was placed in operation about the middle of last August and as showing the interest the country has been taking in this, over 12,700 financial institutions, with resources of over $44,000,-000,000, have signed the credit-insurance contracts under title I of this act and 4,400 of them at the present time are actually reporting modernization loans under this section.

Now, why am I directing the attention of Members to this? Ladies and gentlemen of the committee, this is an administration measure. This was requested by the Federal Housing Administration. They came in and asked for it—the most important provision that could be given to them.

In proof of that I call your attention to the fact that the original bill as introduced by the Chairman of the Banking and Currency Committee contained an authorization for $50,000, and in committee, by a vote of 12 to 11, without giving any sound reason for it whatever, the Banking and Currency Committee cut it in two to $25,000.

We heard yesterday the appeal of the Chairman of the Banking and Currency Committee to follow the administration. And then the Banking and Currency Committee gives you a "gold brick", because there are a lot of men in this Chamber who voted for the home-owners' loan provision, believing there was 60 days' extension within which, as a matter of right, distressed home owners could have their loans considered by the Home Owners' Loan Administration. But you did not get anything of the sort for your constituents. You got something that looked like the real thing. You got a gold brick."

I am sorry to say that, but I am obliged to say it because I do not want you to follow the ordinary presumption that the committee is always right.

Mr. HOLLISTER. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I believe that some further explanation should be made, in view of the statement made by the gentleman from New York, so that the membership of the Committee may understand what it is we are discussing.

The Housing Act, which was passed last year, was supposed to take care of the individual home, and approached the question of home mortgages from several points of view.

Title I provided that the Government would insure to the extent of 20 percent a line of credit which an institution approved by the Housing Administration might extend to a borrower, no one of which loans could exceed $2,000.

In other words, there was to be no insurance of any particular loan. The insurance was to be of the line or credit which the private institution was to give, as approved by the Housing Administration. If the Housing Administration approved a $50,000 line of credit, and there was a loss of $10,000 altogether, the Government took that loss; if there was a loss of $15,000 altogether, the Government would take a loss of $10,000, or 20 percent of the line of credit the institution might have, which the Government agreed to insure.

These loans were limited to $2,000, and were for modernizing, renovating, and improving homes. The provision in this bill-and I am not now discussing the merits of it, but merely pointing out to the members of the committee what it means—extends this insurance to a line of loans up to $25,000 for each loan, as made by accredited institutions. If the line of credit which the Housing Administration extends to the lending institution should be $100,000, they might make four $25,000 loans, and if one of those was completely lost, the Government would have to pay $20,000, because the Government is insuring 20 percent of the whole line of credit that the institution puts out, and the institution itself would take a loss of $5,000. If the loss were only $10,000, either in one or two or three loans, the Government would take the whole loss.

The reason I emphasize that is because so many people have the idea that the Government insures 20 percent of each individual loan, and they say there will be no loss to the Government because the lending institutions will be particularly careful not to make loans when they may have to take 80 percent of the loss. That is not the case. The lending institution might not have to take any loss whatsoever, even if they lost two or three loans, depending on the amount of the loss and on the size of the line of credit that the Government gave. Incidentally, in the present bill these loans are to be made not on mortgage security but they are supposed to be character loans, the theory being that if there is a man of good character and good prospects he should be able to borrow up to $2,000 to improve his

The suggestion is made that $25,000 should be loaned on apartment houses, commercial buildings, hotels, and so forth, without security, with which to put in machinery or to add a wing or to make certain improvements to the real estate. It is a considerable extension from the $2,000 in the original bill to the $25,000 in this bill, or $50,000 before it was amended in committee. If we look at this as an idea wanted it $50,000 and the $25,000 was a compromise, the that we are trying to pump money out to boost industry and thereby willing to take a loss to the Government-

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time be extended 5 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOLLISTER. If the theory of this is that the Government is going to back any pumping out of private money, no matter how it is done, there is no particular reason to limit it to $25,000 or $50,000 or even $100,000, if we are careful enough in the accredited institutions that we support. What we must understand, however, when we go into this, that it is no longer a small-home proposition, that we are branching out on a pretty large scale, and are taking a certain risk in Government money, and naturally to the extent that the limit is raised from $2,000 to $25,000 or $50,000, to that extent the Government is taking a larger risk than when it is taking on a lot of $2,000 loans.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOLLISTER. Yes.

Mr. SISSON. First, I want to thank the gentleman for his unusually fair and clear statement, although it is not unusual for him. It is the same statement that the gentleman always makes, whether in committee or on the floor.

Mr. HOLLISTER. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. SISSON. I call the gentleman's attention to the fact that the total liability assumed by the Government under this section still remains the same, $200,000,000.

Mr. HOLLISTER. That is correct.

Mr. SISSON. But I think the gentleman probably inadvertently or else with an understanding of this section a little different from mine-although it is not very importantsaid that there was a distinction as between the insured loan made for the purpose of rehabilitating factories, commercial places, etc., and the insured loan for the purpose of modernizing homes. Does not the gentleman understand that the limit of the 20 percent applies to all of the loans under the approval of the lending institution?

Mr. HOLLISTER. Oh, absolutely. As a matter of fact, I might suggest to the gentleman that if this thing is to go to $25,000, I see no reason for any limit whatsoever. If the Government will approve a lending institution and back the kind of loans that institution will make up to $25,000, I see no reason to limit it to any particular kind. It seems to me that it might be wide open.

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. HOLLISTER. Yes.

Mr. DINGELL. I wonder if the gentleman understands that the Federal Housing Administrator approves fully the original amount of $50,000 as presented in the bill?

Mr. HOLLISTER. There is no question about that.

Mr. DINGELL. He approves that because he has a surplus of $100,000,000 to take care of this problem.

Mr. HOLLISTER. He has more than that.

Mr. DINGELL. He admits that he has at least $100,-

Mr. HOLLISTER. He has not any cash on hand. The gentleman means that the provisions of the original bill have not been exhausted.

Mr. DINGELL. That is right. There is $100,000,000 on the insured loans.

Mr. HOLLISTER. More than that.

Mr. DINGELL. Congress has provided $200,000,000, and the Federal Housing Administrator bases his decision on a survey which I made. We are all familiar with the fact that 40 percent of our unemployed are in the building industry. Is there any reason why the committee should have cut that to $25,000? Why did not the committee eliminate it entirely?

Mr. HOLLISTER. I can answer the gentleman very easily on that. A great number of the members of the committee thought it should not be in there at all. A number of them theory being that on $25,000 loans there will be less loss than | on $50,000.

Mr. DINGELL. I am obliged to disagree with the gentleman. The loss is 20 percent on any loan, whether it is $25,000 or $50,000, and it applies to the total within the portfolio of a certain institution.

Mr. HOLLISTER. That is correct.

Mr. DINGELL. So it does not make any difference in the final analysis.

Mr. DONDERO. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOLLISTER. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan. Mr. DONDERO. In the example which the gentleman gave, if there are $100,000 in loans made and there are losses up to $20,000, do I understand that the Federal Government stands the entire $20,000 loss and the loaning company does not stand any part of it?

Mr. HOLLISTER. That is correct.

Mr. DONDERO. No matter whether the loss is in one loan or several loans?

Mr. HOLLISTER. No matter whether the loss be all in one loan or in four or five loans. That is correct.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. HOLLISTER] has expired.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto close in 5 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There was no objection.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, the purpose of the Housing Act was to furnish a means to modernize homes. It did not embrace apartment houses or hotels or office buildings. It was to modernize homes.

Section 22 of the bill, to which the gentleman called attention, seeks to enlarge that purpose, authorizing $25,000 for apartment houses, hotels, and office buildings. Instead of passing the amendment as the gentleman suggests, doubling the $25,000 to $50,000, I am in favor of adding a period after the word "property", in line 23, page 13, and striking out the balance of that paragraph, so that all of the money will be used to modernize homes.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. BLANTON. In just a moment I will.

Then we would carry out the original purpose of the Housing Act, and then there would be plenty of money in this appropriation for actual home owners to modernize their homes. If this money is going to be used for apartment houses, hotels, and office buildings, either one of two things will happen. Either this money will be spent so lavishly on other purposes that most home owners will not be able to get money to modernize their homes, or else all home owners will be denied absolutely any relief whatsoever, for all of it will be spent on big apartment houses, big hotels, and big office buildings in the big cities, at $50,000 a whack.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. BLANTON. I yield.

Mr. O'CONNOR. The gentleman realizes that in my district in New York, for instance, and in many districts throughout the metropolitan centers, no home-loan mortgage has ever been made?

Mr. BLANTON. And I will tell the gentleman why. Many of those homes are mansions that cost several hundred thousand dollars each. The gentleman is seeking to grant this relief to apartment houses instead of to home owners. For instance, he would have them loan money to apartment houses like the Shoreham, the Alban Towers, the Kennedy-Warren, the Broadmoor, the Westchester, the Cathedral Mansions, and the Wardman Park, which house enough people to start a new city here in Washington. Now, that is not the purpose of the Home Loan Act or of the Housing Act.

Mr. O'CONNOR. No; that is not the purpose. Mr. BLANTON. But whenever you take in big apartment houses and big hotels and big office buildings, there | will not be any money for the home owners. You could grant $50,000 each, under such provision, to all of the big office buildings in Radio City. You could embrace every kind of building.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I hope the gentleman is not going to adopt the method of Mr. Fahey by trying to overwhelm me with words.

Mr. BLANTON. No. I am going to yield now and let the gentleman use his own words, because I am in sympathy with him whenever he attacks Mr. "Autocrat" Fahey.

Mr. O'CONNOR. In my district in Manhattan no loan has ever been made under this act. We have principally apartment houses and tenements. Those tenements are the homes of the people who live in them. Those tenements have been their homes for 25, 50, and 75 years. All the proposed amendment does is to permit alterations on their homes, insured only to 20 percent by the Government, so that cold-water flats may be turned into modern homes.

Mr. BLANTON. But the gentleman from Ohio pointed out just how far that might go. And as soon as the apartments were renovated on Government funds the landlords would double the rents on the tenants.

Mr. O'CONNOR. There is one billion five hundred million available by private agencies for alterations, 75 percent of which goes directly for labor.

Mr. BLANTON. I am sorry I cannot yield further. The gentleman will be heard in his own time. However, I am in favor of limiting these funds to the purposes of the Housing Act, which is to renovate homes. I am in favor of granting to the home owners the right to modernize their homes. These big apartment houses are not their homes. They live in them, of course, but the people who live in them would not be benefited, as they would be forced to pay higher rents. The owners are the ones who are being benefited. At the same time this Government is being placed where it may take a big loss, as was pointed out by the gentleman from Cincinnati a moment ago.

Mr. REILLY. The object of including this provision in the bill is because after a survey by the Housing Corporation they could not use the billion dollars given them, and they want to take in another field in order to take that up.

Mr. BLANTON. If the gentleman from New York wants to pass that kind of a bill and wants to take in big apartment houses and big hotels and big office buildings, he ought to bring in a separate measure and let it stand on its own feet. But we should not rob these home owners of their funds to modernize.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Blanton] has expired.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 18. Section 8 of the Home Owners' Loan Act of 1933, as amended, is amended by adding at the end thereof a new subsection to read as follows

tion to read as follows:

"(f) No person, partnership, association, or corporation shall, directly or indirectly, solicit, contract for, charge, or receive, or attempt to solicit, contract for, charge, or receive, from any person applying to the Corporation for a loan, any moneys, check, note, or other form of obligation, representing payment of any difference which may exist between the market value and the par value of the bonds of Home Owners' Loan Corporation. Any person, partnership, association, or corporation violating the provisions of this subsection shall, upon conviction thereof, be fined not more than $5,000 or imprisoned not more than 2 years or both."

Mr. SAUTHOFF. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment. The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SAUTHOFF: Page 11, line 3, after the period at the end of said line, add the following:

"(g) In case foreclosures are prosecuted to conclusion the plaintiff shall not obtain any default judgment for any sums still unpaid after all recourse has been had and exhausted against the collateral securing the loan."

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. SAUTHOFF. Mr. Chairman, I shall not need to take the 5 minutes. I just want to make two observations. One is that we are pouring steadily into these various needs for emergency relief vast sums of Government money; we are not relieving with any private money. As the gentleman from Massachusetts pointed out yesterday, the banks now hold $14,000,000,000 of the Government's $28,000,000,000 that has been poured into these various relief operations. The second observation is that the banks are holding and not releasing any private funds. Until they do we shall simply have to keep on pouring money constantly into these channels. What I want to see happen is some private money released for the purpose of taking up private business enterprise. You all know just as well as I that whenever you have gone to a bank they cannot make a loan even though your collateral be five or six times the value of the loan you solicit. What does the bank tell you? I have a bank at home with $11,000,000 of deposits and $5,000,000 of reserves, but it will not lend this money. I have gone in with collateral five or six times as great as the loan I wanted to make, and they said. "We cannot make the loan because the bank examiners throw out the note if it is for a longer time than

The thing I think we ought to do, and the thing to which I call the attention of the Committee on Banking and Currency, is to pass legislation that will compel a bank to pay taxes on anything they carry in their reserves over 25 percent, in order to release some of this money and get it into the channels of trade. There is plenty of money; the trouble is, the money is idle, there is no velocity to it. Until you get it out and get some velocity to it you cannot do business. Such legislation will force the banking department to liberalize its ruling that a bank cannot take a note with a maturity date greater than 30 days. That is why I am offering this amendment. I want to afford some relief, because, after all, you know as well as I do that if these home owners' loans have to be foreclosed there is no sense in taking a default judgment good for 20 years thereafter. They will not have any assets. Give them a chance to get back on their

Mr. WHITE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SAUTHOFF. I yield.

Mr. WHITE. Does not the gentleman think the repeal of the tax-exempt provision on Government securities would bring his plan into operation?

Mr. SAUTHOFF. No; I do not think it would.

Mr. FORD of California. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SAUTHOFF. I yield.

Mr. FORD of California. The philosophy the gentleman has just expressed should make him want to vote for this provision to raise the limit from $25,000 to $50,000, because it is going to bring private money out and put it to work. That is exactly what it is intended to do.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the amendment that it is not germane to the section.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has examined section 8 of the original act, which the amendment of the gentleman from Wisconsin seeks to amend. The pending amendment relates to default judgment in foreclosure action and the effect of foreclosure upon the collateral behind the mortgage. In other words, the amendment refers to civil diffi-culties and remedies. Section 8 of the original act relates well-nigh exclusively to penalties to criminal action for the forging, altering, or counterfeiting of any debenture or bond of this Corporation and refers specifically to the Criminal Code. Criminal penalties cannot be mixed with civil remedies. For these reasons, the Chair is of opinion that the amendment of the gentleman from Wisconsin is not germane and, therefore, sustains the point of order.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto close in 5 minutes.

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I ask unanimous consent to return to that section of the bill to which the amendment of the gentleman from Wisconsin would be germane.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, who is going to determine to which section of the bill the amendment is germane?

Mr. McFARLANE. I understood the Chair had ruled that the amendment would be germane to an earlier section of the

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is not able to state to what section of the bill it would be germane.

Mr. McFARLANE. I understood, from speaking to the chairman a while ago, that this amendment would be germane to an earlier section of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. No. The Chair sustained the point of order that the amendment was not germane to section 8, subdivision (a) of the original act.

It is not the province of the Chair to indicate to what section such an amendment might be germane.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, I object to the request of the gentleman from Texas.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There was no objection.

Mr. GIFFORD. I wish to direct my remarks to these socalled "character loans" and increasing them from $2,000 to $25,000. Is it any argument for the gentleman from New York to make that the limit of the losses is only $200,000,000 anyhow? Is it to be assumed that we might well lose the whole $200,000,000?

Mr. Chairman, I think a report ought to be made as to the success or amounts made on this particular type of loans. A list of the approved banks was read; also the number of banks that had made such loans. Many banks would not make those loans for more than 1 year. Do we realize that in many distant localities borrowers who may and do go to New York City where there are several banks, we understand, that will take such loans no matter where they originate, knowing that out of the total number of those several loans they could not probably lose over 20 percent, which is insured by the Government.

Mr. SISSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GIFFORD. I yield to the gentleman from New York. Mr. SISSON. I am sure the gentleman does not want to mislead the House. The gentleman, I believe, inadvertently made a misstatement when he said that the bank could only lose 20 percent.

Mr. GIFFORD. No. I said the limit of liability to the Government is $200,000,000.

Mr. SISSON. Yes; and the limit of liability is also 20

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I wish to stress the point that the limit of loans to be assumed by the Government is $200,000,000. We insure the liability of one banking institution to 20 percent of its losses. Now, increasing from $2,500 to $25,000 without security on a character loan, so-called, is going far afield; and when you extend it to $50,000, it seems to me that it is going altogether too far in this by allowing the R. F. C. a lot more money to take care of industrial loans on only adequate security, so called. We here attempt to bring in apartment houses, hotels, and industrial activities without security in spite of the unfortunate record which they have made in the last few years in most localities.

Mr. DINGELL. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. GIFFORD. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.
Mr. DINGELL. Does the gentleman know that the insurance feature of the bill provides that one-fourth of 1 percent premium is incumbent upon the borrower, and that is five times the experience on losses from this type of loan?

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Chairman, may I get to the point, if I can? With the $2,000 character loans distributed as they are, we do not expect to lose very much money. Why tack on a feature in the bill where we would be assured to lose a lot of money? That is not good banking. It is going altogether too far. I rather criticize banks taking loans from far-distant localities. Ultimately it will lead to large losses. I would like to ask the gentleman if he thinks a bank in New York City should be willing to take loans from any part of the country which are presented to them simply because they know that the Government is going to take care of a 20-percent loss? To increase it to $50,000 might be a means of jeopardizing the real intent of the Housing Act.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GIFFORD. I yield to the gentleman from New York. Mr. O'CONNOR. The Members from New York City have taken pretty good care of Cape Cod.

Mr. GIFFORD. Yes. They sent carload after carload of cabbage bought in the State of New York to relieve the farmers of New York to New England, enraging New England farmers, and allowed to decay in storehouses. We do not forget that unfair and odorous transaction.

Mr. O'CONNOR. We voted for the fish and oysters in the gentleman's community.

Mr. GIFFORD. How has New York City cared for us? I would like to know.

Mr. O'CONNOR. There have been 12,700 institutions which have accepted these loans. They are not all in New York City. They are all over the country.

The Clerk read as follows:

Sec. 19. Paragraph (5) of subsection (c) of section 402 of the National Housing Act is amended by adding the following sentence at the end thereof: "The Corporation shall be entitled to the free use of the United States mails for its official business in the same manner as the executive departments of the Government, and shall determine its necessary expenditures under this act and the manner in which the same shall be incurred, allowed, and paid, without regard to the provisions of any other law governing the expenditure of public funds."

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Williams: On page 11, line 9, after the word "Government", change the comma to a period, insert quotation marks, and strike out the remainder of the paragraph.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Chairman, this amendment is in accordance with the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Buchann] on yesterday and adopted by the Committee. It will be observed that this section refers to the use of mails by the Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corporation. The first part of it I think should stand, but the part I request be stricken is the part which removes their accounts from the audit of the General Accounting Office. I think there can be no objection to this amendment, and I do not care to discuss it further. It simply places the accounts of that Corporation, in accordance with the Executive order of the President, as I understand it, on exactly the same basis as all other corporations, namely, that they shall submit their expenditure accounts to the General Accounting Office for audit.

Mr. CONNERY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. CONNERY. And brings back to our Appropriations Committee a little of our previously removed power?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. WILLIAMS].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CARPENTER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman from Kansas will permit, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto close in 5 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There was no objection.

Mr. CARPENTER. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the chairman of the committee a question in advance of what I have to say in regard to this bill. Under the law as it now exists, or as provided in this bill, will local agents of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation be granted the free use of the mails in connection with the transmission of their reports, as well as their other official business?

Mr. WILLIAMS. The gentleman is referring to the section we are now considering?

Mr. CARPENTER. Yes.

Mr. WILLIAMS. No; this paragraph has no application to them at all. This refers to the National Housing Act.

Mr. CARPENTER. Is there any provision of law that will give them this privilege?

Mr. WILLIAMS. No; they have not that privilege now. Mr. CARPENTER. Mr. Chairman, I rise to suggest that there should be an amendment adopted for that purpose. In my State, last year, the local agents of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation in the various counties were given orders not to take any more applications. Their pay ceased then and there and yet they were given orders from the Home Owners' Loan Corporation to go out and appraise and check up different loans and to run all over the country and make any number of investigations. They did this, and at the same time their right to the free use of the mails was stopped. They did not have the use of the free use of the mails; they had to use the mail and pay postage. They spent a lot of money in this way, and they also had expenses for office rent, for gasoline, and other matters, to say nothing of their own time, for which they were not reimbursed. This condition lasted from 3 to 6 months. The agents all over the State of Kansas for 6 months were out several hundred dollars of expenses, including a large amount for postage. These men should be reimbursed for these expenditures. The matter is now before the head of the Corporation here in Washington, and they have been promised an investigation of the matter and some definite action. I think the least we can do is to give them the right to use the mails like other Government agencies, free of charge, when they are transacting Government business.

Let me say further that soon we will pass this bill, and in doing so we are fulfilling a pledge we have made to our constituents during the past few months that this Congress would enact legislation to further carry on the Home Owners' Loan Corporation and give these people relief, because before the first of the year we know that the Home Owners' Loan Corporation ceased receiving and acting on applications, and we were flooded with requests from people who had applications pending for the last year and were about to receive their loans when such relief was shut off.

I wish to commend the committee for the hard work it has done, and I am pleased that we were able on the floor here to get amendments adopted that will help this legislation. We have had the experience of the operations of this act for the past year. We know its weak points and I am pleased that we got through an amendment that will make a man having a little shop in connection with his home eligible for a loan, and other beneficial amendments.

There is one objection I wish to voice here, although I do not believe there is any proper place for such an amendment; but I want the Home Owners' Loan Corporation to know how we feel in regard to this law and its operation and be advised of the intention of Congress. There has grown up a practice in considering applications for loans of considering provisions that are not in the act, and I refer to the practice indulged in by the Corporation that if Dun & Bradstreet or some other credit agency makes an adverse report against a man they refuse to grant him a loan.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. CARPENTER. Yes.

Mr. O'CONNOR. We tried to find out from the chairman of the Corporation why he employed Dun & Bradstreet, who was behind the employment of them, and what Dun & Bradstreet could find out about a home owner. We never were able to find out, except that hundreds of thousands of dollars have been paid to Dun & Bradstreet because of some connection they have with somebody in the Home Owners' Loan Corporation. [Applause.]

Mr. CARPENTER. I may say, in conclusion, if a man had a good standing or favorable rating with Dun & Bradstreet, he would not need to apply for any such loan. [Applause.] [Here the gavel fell.]

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 25. The last sentence of section 2 of the National Housing Act is amended to read as follows: "No insurance shall be granted under this section to any such financial institution with respect to any obligation representing any such loan, advance of credit, or purchase by it in excess of $2,000 for the purpose of financing alterations, repairs, and improvements on real property other than apartment houses, hotels, office and other commercial buildings, hospitals, and manufacturing or industrial plants; and no insurance shall be granted under this section to any such financial institution with respect to any obligation representing any such loan, advance of credit, or purchase by it in excess of $25,000 for the purpose of financing alterations, repairs, and improvements on real property improved by apartment houses, hotels, office, and other commercial buildings, hospitals, and manufacturing or industrial plants; including installation of new permanent equipment and machinery in such manufacturing or industrial plants; nor unless the obligation bears such interest, has such maturity, and contains such other terms, conditions, and restrictions as the Administrator shall prescribe."

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

On page 13, strike out section 25.

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, ladies and gentlemen of the Committee, in offering the amendment to strike out section 22 of the printed bill, or 25 of the bill as it now stands, I am sure no one in this House, notwithstanding the inuendoes which have been made, will think that I am motivated by any sectional interest. I am merely trying to keep the Government's operations on a sound basis. If this amendment is adopted, title I of the original act will remain the law as it now stands and permit the Federal Housing Administration to continue to insure small loans through approved institutions for the purpose of enabling the people throughout the country who cannot secure credit otherwise to improve, renovize, and modernize their homes. My good friend, Mr. Hollister, has already splendidly explained what is before us. Based on the testimony which was presented to us by Mr. Eccles, Mr. Dean, Mr. Riefler, and Mr. Fahey last year, this was supposed to be the real purpose of title I of the Federal Housing Act. Loans were limited to $2,000 to any one person. It was represented that millions of homes in this country were in dire need of repair and that through a renovizing program they could be put back in decent living condition. It was also believed that through this means of financing, improvements could be made which would add to the living comforts of thousands of families. Coincident with this desirable objective was the hope of stampeding private capital into action, stimulating the durable-goods industries, and putting men back to work. I always had my misgivings about the success of this plan, but as the Record will show, I was willing to go along with this program, hoping that I was wrong.

Here is what has happened, according to the testimony of the Administrator and his assistants: Up to February 12, approximately $40,000,000 in advances through approved institutions has been insured by the Housing Administration under title I. Since the Government is liable up to 20 percent of the aggregate amount of loans insured through any one institution, its liability up to date amounts to approximately $8,000,000. It has cost approximately one and onehalf million dollars, or 19 percent, based on the Government's liability, to bring about this small amount of housing activity. Under the act $200,000,000 was set apart to insure loans up to a billion dollars. I have no doubt but that those in charge have done the best they could under general conditions, and I have not a single word of criticism to say against the personnel of the Administration. I am still hopeful that it may yet bring about a great revival of business activity through stimulation of the durable-goods industries. Of course, my first concern is in seeing that these funds provided in title I are used to bring about better homes, and thereby better living conditions, among the masses of the people in this country.

If section 22 of the printed bill becomes a part of the law. it practically means the abandonment of the original purpose, and no longer will this sum of money be used for assisting small home owners but will be gobbled up by commercial and industrial institutions throughout the country. If you do not strike out the section, as I propose by my amendment to do, it is my prediction that the entire amount of balance in the insurance account, amounting to $192,000,000, will go to pay losses to the large banks and big installment financing companies in this country. Mr. Moffett advised us that out of a total of $40,000,000 of loans insured, approximately $6,500,000 had been insured through the National City Bank in New York. I am perfectly willing to see the Government assist in a sound way every legitimate industry and commercial establishment in this country, but we have already provided through the Reconstruction Finance Corporation a plan and a means for doing this. If this amendment of mine does not carry, it means that your Government will, in my opinion, be practically giving a bonus of 20 percent in order to entice and induce these institutions to do what they should voluntarily and patriotically do to aid in bringing about recovery. Under the present regulations, the borrower under title I of the present law pays 9.72 percent interest on his loan. Under regulations prescribed by the Federal Housing Administration, if the borrower defaults on an installment, the lending institution can add a 5 percent additional charge, which makes the interest or cost 14.72 percent on every hundred dollars. Please do not forget that these are what may be termed "character" loans, and, according to the testimony before our committee last year, no security could be lawfully taken. Do you think it is right to require the small home owner to mortgage his home to the Home Owners' Loan Corporation and permit commercial and industrial corporations to secure $50,000 loans, guaranteed up to 20 percent by the Government, without any security? In other words, if this amendment is not stricken out, it means in a way that these lending institutions would be liable for only about 70 cents on every dollar which they lend. In making this statement I am assuming that they will collect an average of 10 percent interest throughout the life of the loan. I cannot but think that this is unsound, unfair, and contrary to sound public policy. It is even worse than that.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. I yield.

Mr. SISSON. If the gentleman prefers to finish his statement before yielding, I shall gladly wait.

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. No; I am always glad to stop any time for my friend from New York.

Mr. SISSON. The gentleman's courtesy exceeds my ability to ask the question. I know the gentleman does not want to mislead the House any more than he would be guilty of helping one section of the country at the expense of another; but when the gentleman stated that the Administration has spent a million and a half dollars for the purpose of securing advancements of loans to the extent of about $40,000,000, the gentleman should give the House the information so that it could take into account that this was one of the last acts passed in June 1934 and that the Administration, in spending the one and one-half million dollars, had to organize its administration set-up here and its set-ups all over the United States. So how can the gentleman say that one and a half million dollars was spent simply for the purpose of getting these loans?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from North Carolina his expired.

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time be extended 5 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. We all know that in getting an organization off to a start, expense is usually greater than at any other time. However, the Housing Administration has spent $2,300,000 in connection with all of its work, including the little that has been done under title II and nothing under title III. I asked Mr. McDonald, Assistant Administrator, these questions, which will be found on page 70 of the record of hearings, and which I think will be of interest to the Membership of the House:

Mr. Hancock. Under this section right here, the American Radiator Co. could make a contract with a hospital, or some manufacturing or industrial plant, to install a steam or hot-water heating system, involving the expenditure of $40,000, and you would be in position to insure that loan?

Mr. McDonald. We would, if they secured the money from a bank that is approved by us, or other financial institution that was approved by us, or other mancial institution that was approved by us.

Mr. Hancock. Now, may I ask this one further question?

You say that the corporation or the Administration has insured loans up to about $50,000,000?

Mr. McDonald. $40,000,000?

What has it cost you so far to make these loans or effect that insurance?

Mr. Hancock. $40,000,000? What has it cost you so far to make these loans, or effect that insurance?
Mr. McDonald. An analysis of that would show that we have spent approximately $1,500,000 on title I.

As I have tried to state before, if section 22 remains in the bill, we are departing far and wide from the original purpose of this act, and the Government will be engaged in making further contributions or gifts to the lending institutions approved by the Administrator. This is bad business, as sure as you live.

Mr. REILLY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. Yes; I yield.

Mr. REILLY. I know that my colleague wants to give the Committee full information. Is it not a fact that Mr. Moffett and Mr. McDonald both testified that their efforts in this housing business had resulted in expending $250,000,000 by private enterprise?

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. Mr. McDonald and Mr. Moffett both claimed that through their activities the Housing Administration has indirectly agitated or stimulated the spending of $250,000,000. This is, of course, largely a guess, though it may be an entirely correct one. I am not contending that the administration of this act has not produced some good results, and I am inclined to believe that there is a wonderful potential opportunity for mortgage activity involved in the proper and effective administration of title II of the Housing Act. I question seriously, however, whether title III will ever amount to what its proponents hoped it would. I believe it is unsound and therefore unworkable. Time will tell.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. Yes.

Mr. SISSON. The gentleman last year was not opposed to taking $500,000,000 for building-and-loan associations and putting it through the House when the committee brought in a bill which was emasculated, which had the heart taken out of it, and we had to put this real bill on the statute books through a minority report against the wishes of the gentleman now speaking and most of the rest of the committee.

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. The gentleman's statement is partially correct. I felt then that greater good could have been brought about toward stimulating building activity and home ownership if the amendment I proposed last year had become a law than under the plan involved in the Housing Act; and I still believe that I was right. Judging by what has happened, I am inclined to think that most any other Member of the House will agree with me. I want to say, however, that the building-and-loan associations have shown nothing but a friendly attitude toward the Housing Administration and have tried in every practical way to cooperate in making their plans and efforts effective. No representative of the building-and-loan associations has ever said one word to me with respect to the amendment which I am proposing.

Mr. DINGELL. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. Yes.

Mr. DINGELL. Who pays the insurance premium on

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. The borrower pays for it by way of a reduction of his loan, but the Government will in the final analysis pay much more if these big $50,000 loans turn out to be sour, as I believe at least 20 percent of them will.

Mr. DINGELL. I beg to differ with the gentleman. Permit me to say that the premium is paid by the borrower and it is five times the amount of the loan.

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. I do not understand it to be exactly that way. And if the Government is not in the picture and has no ultimate liability, why did we appropriate $200,000,000 to take care of the losses?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from North Carolina has expired.

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 2 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOOK. And what would the building-and-loan associations do under the same circumstances?

Mr. HANCOCK or North Carolina. The building-and-loan associations are the real, genuine thrift and home-financing institutions in this country and have toted their part of the burden throughout this depression. They make amortized mortgage loans and charge an average rate of interest between 6 and 7 percent. I suggest you examine their record for the past several years.

Mr. HOOK. Can the gentleman tell me why it is, because of actions of the Federal Housing Administration, that the building-and-loan associations have been forced to cut down their interest rates?

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. Surely no one would claim that anything which has been done by the Federal Housing Administration under title I has had the slightest influence on interest rates charged by building-and-loan associations. The policy of the Roosevelt administration, together with a plethora of idle money in the lending institutions, have combined together to bring about a lower rate of interest in all financing, which is very desirable, wholesome, and constructive.

Mr. TAYLOR of South Carolina. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. I yield. Mr. TAYLOR of South Carolina. As a matter of fact, building-and-loan associations are not interested in the class of loans that the Federal Housing Administration is intending to take care of.

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. Not particularly. want to also say that these institutions are not interested in seeing the bond authorization of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation increased beyond the amount recommended by officials of the Corporation. They have favored a slowing up of the Corporation's activities in the belief that private enterprise could take care of the mortgage situation. Whether they are right remains to be seen. I hope they are. I regret that my friend from Oklahoma a while ago spoke as he did about the building-and-loan associations. Of course, I do not know the local situation in Oklahoma. I think I should say here, however, that the record shows that building-andloan associations have been carrying more than a third of all urban mortgages in the country and have been responsible for the ownership of more homes than any other type of lending institutions. I believe it is also correct that, though they carry a third of the urban mortgages, they have received only approximately 14 percent of the bonds issued by the Home Owners' Loan Corporation to refinance mortgages.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. HANCOCK] has expired.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, we might as well get right down to brass The building-and-loan associations are the interest tacks. behind the committee bill. Their lobbyist, Mr. Bodfish, who has been haunting these halls for years, is responsible for the amendment offered by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. Hancock]. [Applause.] The building-and-loan associations fought this housing bill a year ago when it was just prepared.

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I yield.

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. Is the gentleman against building-and-loan associations?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I am against them serving their own selfish interests.

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. May I ask the gentleman another question?

Mr. O'CONNOR. Yes; if I have time.

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. Does the gentleman know that Mr. Bodfish is not in the gallery?

Mr. O'CONNOR. Well, the gentleman knows better than I do. I do not know. [Laughter.]

I am informed that Mr. Bodfish was responsible for the appointment of the chief counsel of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation under the Hoover administration, Mr. Russell, of Georgia, who still occupies that position; and the administration is now being opposed by our own committee as it was in the housing bill last year, and this House had to take the matter in its own hands and reverse the committee for opposing the administration.

Now, this bill came in here from the administration with $50,000 for these alterations to apartment houses, and so forth. The committee, contrary to the wishes of the administration, cut the amount down to $25,000. Now, the gentleman from North Carolina, not speaking for the committee, not representing the committee, proposes to strike out this entire provision. Now, let us have it out right here. Let us see whether the building-and-loan associations of this country or of certain sections of the country are bigger than the administration, which the people have elected to control the destinies of our country and who we on this side of the aisle, at least, are supposed to represent.

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. O'CONNOR. No; not now. Now, what has the committee done? It has added $500,000,000 in loans to mortgagees, not mortgagors. As I said before, 97 percent of the loans will go to institutions, including building-and-loan associations. The building-and-loan associations are primarily interested. That increase is contrary to the wishes of the administration, and I hope that we may have a rollcall vote on whether or not this House will sustain that departure from the wishes of the administration.

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I yield.

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. Is the gentleman authorized to speak for the administration?

Mr. O'CONNOR. No; I am not. I just pick things out of the air around here. [Laughter.]

Now, let us take this section as to bringing loans for alterations to apartment houses, and so forth. What does it provide? In my district in New York, as I said before, no home owners' loan has ever been made, nor could it be made, because of the type of dwellings. We have individual homes, but because of the land value no loan could be made within the $20,000 limitation; but we do have tenements, and we have apartments which are the real homes of our people. Some of our people have lived in them for half a century. All this provision I proposed does is to permit the Housing Administration, included in this bill, to guarantee, up to 20 per cent, loans made by other people, not by the Government, for alterations and repairs, so that these slum residences, these cold-water flats, may be converted into livable places for the people in the urban and congested centers.

Now, what does it all mean? Loaning four and a half or five million dollars under the Home Owners' Loan Act does not put one man to work.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York [Mr. O'Connor] has expired.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 5 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. O'CONNOR. The fundamental principle of getting out of the depression is to put men to work. That is the only way we shall ever get out of it. It is estimated by the Housing Administration that if you grant them authority to guarantee loans made by private institutions up to $50,000. they will have applications for $1,500,000,000, 75 percent of which amount will go directly to labor. So that $1,100,-000,000 will be paid to labor. It is not Government money. Under this Housing Administration program no Government money is used at all. It is not a guaranty by our Government of four or five billion dollars, as in the Home Owners' Loan Corporation.

Mr. CONNERY. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. O'CONNOR. I yield.
Mr. CONNERY. I am in sympathy with the gentleman's purpose. The gentleman does not think that that money which would go to labor would be $50 a month, does he?

Mr. O'CONNOR. No; I hope not.
Mr. CONNERY. Because I would not be in favor of that. Mr. O'CONNOR. I know the gentleman would not favor that.

I was sympathetic with the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Thomason] yesterday to include loans on apartments under the Home Owners' Loan Corporation Act. I do not know why they should not have been included.

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I yield.

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. Does the gentleman not think that security ought to be taken for all these loans?

Mr. O'CONNOR. Why, before a loan is made, under title I of the Housing Act, the bank itself-and there are 12,700 of them which have been authorized to loan to date-determines whether or not the loan should be made, and all the Government guarantees is at most 20 percent of the loan. It is estimated the loss on that is much less than it is under the Home Owners' Loan Corporation by reason of the dipping into the Treasury of the building-and-loan associations.

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for another question?

Mr. O'CONNOR. Yes; but I want to talk about buildingand-loan associations.

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. I will ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may have additional time.

The gentleman knows, does he not, that the Administrator of the Federal Housing Act states that the larger they make these loans the greater the percentage of loss involved? Is this correct?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I do not know that; that may follow as an economic principle, but I am not sure.

This bill as introduced by the Chairman of this great Committee on Banking and Currency allowed the guarantee of loans up to $50,000; but, as in the case of the housing bill last year, the committee emasculated the bill. The committee reduced the limit to $25,000, and now one member of the committee, on his own responsibility, would wipe out the whole provision. I do not know whether we are serving building-and-loan associations or the people of this country. We are serving the people who want to remodel their homes up to a loan of $50,000. The Government guarantees that loan only to 20 percent. The gentleman knows that, but I suppose he felt it would be a strategic thing to wipe out the whole section and thereby to stop any increase whatever. I do not believe his committee will support him. I have reason to believe the committee will accept my $50,000 amendment.

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. O'CONNOR. Yes; gladly. There is no more conscientious, lovable, or intelligent Member of this House than the distinguished gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. HANCOCK 1.

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. The gentleman just referred to the fact that he led a movement last year that licked the committee.

Mr. O'CONNOR.

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. Does the gentleman intend to do it again this year?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I hope to.

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR. Yes. Mr. McFARLANE. Is it not true that the building-andloan associations have unloaded most of their undesirable paper on the Government?

Mr. O'CONNOR. Of course they have.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 5 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. O'CONNOR. The good paper was taken by the R. F. C. Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. O'CONNOR. I yield gladly to my beloved colleague from my native State.

Mr. CONNERY. I want to get this clear in my mind. The committee moved to strike out the entire section. Is the gentleman from New York going to offer an amendment to raise it to $50,000?

Mr. O'CONNOR. Of course. The committee knew I was going to do that.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. O'CONNOR. I yield gladly to the distinguished Chairman of our great Committee on Banking and Currency. No Member of this House is more painstaking or industrious than my good friend, Mr. STEAGALL.

Mr. STEAGALL. The gentleman has inadvertently made an erroneous answer to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I am sorry, if I did. Mr. STEAGALL. The committee took the middle course by adopting a compromise plan that fixed the sum at $25,000.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I understand that action was taken by a vote of 12 to 11.

Mr. STEAGALL. I do not remember the vote.

Mr. O'CONNOR. The gentleman may not remember the vote, but the gentleman might be able to refresh his memory.

Mr. STEAGALL. I am not sure I remember what it was. I do not know that I would consider it proper to divulge it or what good it would do if we stated it.

I wish to advise the gentleman that the committee is not offering the amendment he is now discussing; it is not a committee amendment.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Then in view of the chairman's statement, I retire from the floor at this moment, confident that Mr. Hancock's amendment, not sponsored by his own committee, will be voted down.

Mr. STEAGALL. I hope the gentleman will not misunderstand me now. The pending amendment is to strike out that provision of the bill.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I understand that thoroughly-that the committee does not sponsor the amendment. It should, therefore, be defeated.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I offer a perfecting amendment, which is at the desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment. The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Wolcott-

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH (interrupting the reading). Mr. Chairman, I want to be recognized on the amendment of the gentleman from North Carolina.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan has been recognized.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. I was on my feet seeking recognition

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Michigan allow the gentleman from Maryland to address the Committee on the pending amendment of the gentleman from North Carolina?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I am a member of the committee, and have already been recognized.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Mr. Chairman, it certainly is not proper to break into this particular argument at this

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I offered a perfecting amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. It is in order to offer a perfecting amendment, and that is what the gentleman has done. The gentleman from Maryland may at a later time ask recognition to discuss the amendment offered by the gentleman from North Carolina.

The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Wolcorr: Page 14, line 3, after the word "of" where it appears the second time, strike out "$25,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$50,000."

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, as the gentleman from New York has rightfully said, when this bill first came to us it provided for insurance on property improved by apartment houses, hotels, office and other commercial buildings, hospitals, manufacturing and industrial plants, including the permanent equipment and machinery in such manufacturing and industrial plants to the amount of $50,000. The committee reduced the amount to $25,000. After contemplating what will be the effect of this reduction, I believe the amount should be replaced at $50,000 in accordance with the suggestions and the recommendations made by the Federal Housing Administration.

If the Federal Housing Act does anything at all it puts men to work; and, bear in mind, that this is not a bill for the home owner, it is not a bill for the industrialist, it is not a bill for the hotel proprietor, or the apartment-house proprietor, or the office-building proprietor, it is a bill designed primarily to give impetus to the building trades and to give employment in the building trades.

When we had the housing bill before us last year we were told that it was hoped that through the operation of this act which insured loans up to $2,000 for the renovation and repair of homes that it would put 5,000,000 men back to work; but the home owners of the Nation have not responded, they have not asked for loans.

They do not want to renovize. They do not want to increase the indebtedness against their homes until they can have some assurance that the economic condition is such that their income will be stabilized and more or less permanent so that they may be able to retire this indebtedness. We hope by including hotels, apartment houses, industries, and all of these other things which come within the purview of the bill that if it is adopted business will have more courage in this respect than the private owner has had and that business will expand. More equipment will be bought. That is the thing we want them to do. We want to give impetus to the heavy industries of the United States, such as the building industry, the steel industry, the machine in-the present time.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. WOLCOTT. I yield to the gentleman from New York.
Mr. O'CONNOR. For the information of the House, the amendment which the gentleman offers is the same one that I propose to introduce to raise the amount to $50,000?

dustry, and all of those things that are lagging behind at

Mr. WOLCOTT. I understand from the gentleman's remarks that is so.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I am glad the gentleman, as a member of the committee, offered that amendment.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I introduced this amendment because I sincerely hope that industry will respond better than the home owners have responded and that impetus will be given to the building trades in the United States so that men may be put back to work.

Mr. CONNERY. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. WOLCOTT. I yield to the gentleman from Massachu-

Mr. CONNERY. Experience has shown all through the past that you cannot have real prosperity in the country until the building trades are prosperous.

Mr. WOLCOTT. That is what I have been told.

Mr. FORD of California. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I yield to the gentleman from California. Mr. FORD of California. If the philosophy that the amount $25,000 is good, to carry that logically forward, would not $50,000 be twice as good?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I would assume that to be true, because the bill specifically provides that if the loan is made for $26,000 or for any amount over $25,000 no part of the loan will be insured. Let us have that definitely in mind. Twentyfive thousand dollars on a $40,000 loan is not insured. If the loan is for $30,000 or $35,000 or for any amount over $25,000, no part of it is insured; so to play perfectly safe and to give business at least a fair margin we should put it up to at least $50,000. Then if the loan is for $26,000 or $30,000, or anything under $50,000, it will be insured.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may proceed for 5 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

refuse to grant the loans.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I yield to the gentleman from New York. Mr. FITZPATRICK. Up in my district I have received complaints that there are thousands and thousands of applications for loans in order to renovate houses, but the banks

Mr. WOLCOTT. Of course, that is a matter of local administration. I do not see how the Federal Housing Administration can control whether a local bank shall or shall not make a loan. We have to bear this fact in mind, that today there are $2,400,000,000 of excess reserves in the Federal Reserve banks lying idle. Now, idle money does not do anybody any good. It does not even do the banks any good, because idle money results in reduced interest rates being paid to the depositors, thereby decreasing the purchasing power of the Nation. If this act is worth anything at all, it is an inducement to the banks to loan out money to the industries and to put their reserves to work. This will give acceleration to the velocity of our credit currency. What we have been trying to do in every one of these instances is to give acceleration to the rapidity with which money and credit may be turned over. We increase that velocity in this bill. The Members who are in favor of increasing the velocity of money and credit currency should be in favor of increasing this amount to $50,000.

Mr. FORD of California. Even if we increase it to $50,000, the bill does not bar a man who wants to make a $2,000 loan? Mr. WOLCOTT. No. Anything under $50,000 will be

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. Will the gentleman

Mr. WOLCOTT. I yield to the gentleman from North

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. Apropos of the statement made by the gentleman from New York [Mr. O'Con-NOR], is it a fact the building-and-loan associations stated in their report to us that they were not interested at all in

Mr. WOLCOTT. Just before rising, I referred to the recommendations made by Mr. Bodfish, and my memory is he stated he was not interested in this particular section.

Mr. CONNERY. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. WOLCOTT. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. CONNERY. I have a specific instance in mind. Does this refer to apartment houses?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Yes. I may qualify that statement by saying that this bill does not insure loans made for the construction of new apartment houses on unimproved property. It does not insure loans made for the purpose of building new hotels, but it does insure loans made for the purpose of additions to units already constructed.

Mr. CONNERY. That is what I want to know. Suppose a man has an old shack of a house, practically a barn, and he changes it into an apartment house for the housing of four or five families, making it a decent place to live in and rents it for a decent rental, would he come under this bill?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Yes. If a man has a factory building worth $5,000 that needs renovating or repair, he can make the repairs and build alongside of it on the same property another unit, and if the unit costs less than $50,000, it will be insured.

Mr. SISSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I yield to the gentleman from New York. Mr. SISSON. Referring to the question asked by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr Hancock] about the attitude of Mr. Bodfish, I am sure the gentleman recalls that last year when Mr. Bodfish testified at great length before our committee, he opposed two of the features of this act, one authorizing the organization of national mortgage associations and the other giving authority to carry on low-cost housing projects; and, whether in deference to Mr. Bodfish or not, the committee took those features out of the bill. Mr. Prall and I had to bring in a minority report in reference to that matter.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Michigan be extended 3 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. MAVERICK. Who is Mr. Bodfish?

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Bodfish is the representative of a group of building-and-loan associations.

Did not the gentleman note a remarkable change this year in the position of Mr. Bodfish? Did he not come in and make a virtue out of necessity, either that or did he not find that the building-and-loan associations themselves had some benefits forced upon them even though their interest rates were brought down?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I remember one incident very well, when the gentleman from New York came in with the other gentleman from New York [Mr. O'CONNOR] and restored, I think, title 2 of the bill as it was then known, which appears now as title 3 and which had been stricken out in the committee. I cannot say from my own memory why the committee struck it out, but I do have in mind that there was some discussion at that time that they might be able to build up a home-financing octopus which would reach throughout the United States and take over the building-and-loan associations, and I presume because of this that Mr. Bodfish may have been opposed to it.

Mr. SISSON. Now, fairly, did not Mr. Bodfish come in this time and frankly say not that he changed his mind. but that he approved in general of this act?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I believe with respect to this particular provision-

Mr. SISSON. No; not with respect to this particular pro-

Mr. WOLCOTT. Which I think was section 19 of the old act, Mr. Bodfish says, "Not germane to our institutions or shareholders." This is the recommendation he made.

I hold no brief for Mr. Bodfish, I am simply answering the question of the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. In order to keep history straight, is it not a fact that the building-and-loan associations of this country, through their representative, Mr. Morton Bodfish, last year and this year, heartily approved the activities provided for in title I?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Let us understand each other. So far as I am personally concerned, I do not care what Mr. Bodfish recommended and I do not care what the various building-and-loan associations recommended. I want this bill passed so that we can give relief and provide employment. [Applause.] I am not here representing the building-andloan associations-Mr. Bodfish is. I do not hold any brief for him. I want to put men back to work and that is why I am asking that this limitation of $25,000 be increased to $50,000. [Applause.]

amendment.

Mr. Chairman, a good deal has been said here about the part the building-and-loan associations have played in this amendment. I think it might be said by me that I am the man who introduced this amendment or made the motion in the committee; and I am sure that the building-and-loan associations have had absolutely nothing to do with that part of it.

Someone stated here that this was not a home owners' bill, a bill to help the home owners of this country, and I want to ask the man who follows me to point out a single section of this bill or a single provision in the original Housing Act of which the section under discussion is an amendment which has reference to anything except the home owners of this country. No mention of or provision for industrial loans or insurance is in it anywhere from start to finish. In the first place, the title is the Housing Act. If it did not mean that, then it is a fraud on its face, and should never have been brought before the Congress. The very first title provides for the renovation and improvement, not of hotels, not of apartment houses, not of office buildings, but of homes; and the second title provides for the guarantee of mortgages on what? Not on industrial concerns, not on apartment houses, not on hotels or office buildings, but on homes of a certain value.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. WILLIAMS. I cannot yield.

The third title of that act provides for the establishment and setting up of national mortgage associations; what for? Not to act as a place for the discount of loans on industrial concerns but on the homes of the country. The fourth title of that act sets up the Federal Savings & Loan Insurance Corporation not for the purpose of bringing institutions that make loans on industrial concerns in this country into that insurance corporation but to provide insurance of the accounts of the home-building association, the home-loan association, and the saving and thrift institutions of this country and to encourage and help these home-financing institutions.

Finally, under title V of that act designated "miscellaneous" various amendments are made not for industrial loans but amendment to the Home Owners' Loan Act and the Federal Home Loan Act. So I say there is not a word in the original act, nor is there a word in the act under consideration except this particular clause which contemplates loans to industry.

Another reason why I think this ought to be stricken is that it has no place in the pending bill. If we want to legislate in the interests of these commercial and industrial concerns-and I am not opposed to that-let us carefully consider and enact such legislation. We ought to pass, and we did pass such legislation in this Congress as well as in the last, providing for loans to industry and to commerce by both the Federal Reserve banks and the R. F. C.

If we want to enact additional legislation providing loans for commerce and industry, if we want to go into that field, let us do it by separate legislation and not tack it on to legislation which is designed solely and alone for the home owners of this country. [Applause.]

Again, I do not consider it sound to grant loans to apartment houses or office buildings or industrial plants in the sum of either $25,000 or $50,000 without security. The home owner and the farmer is required to give a mortgage upon his home or his farm to secure a loan for $500 or $1,000, and why should an apartment house or any other commercial enterprise have an unsecured loan to the extent of $50,000 insured by the Government? We have already gone too far in trying to bail out some of these concerns.

In many cases the reputation of those back of the apartment and office buildings are none too savory. Their manipulations, together with the contractors, the real-estate agents, and the money sharks, have resulted in the loss of millions to the innocent investors. Their offense smells to high heaven. Their acts and conduct have already amounted to a national scandal. It became so notorious that Congress appointed a committee to investigate the matter, and a pic-

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Chairman, I rise in favor of the | ture of the situation has been presented to us by two of the members of that committee, the distinguished gentlemen from Illinois [Mr. SABATH and Mr. DIRKSEN]. In the face of what has been done by some of those financing and operating hotels, apartment houses, and office buildings, it is proposed in this home-loan bill to have the Government insure their unsecured loans to the extent of $50,000. This is not only outside the scope of this bill but is thoroughly unsound and will result in the small-needy-home owner being pushed entirely into the background and forgotten. The provision of this bill granting insurance to commercial and industrial concerns should be stricken out.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

Mr. Chairman, last year we passed an act authorizing the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to use $300,000,000 for loans to industry. Then we conferred upon the Federal Reserve banks the authority to extend an additional $280,-000,000 for the same purpose, those loans to be limited to the purchase of raw material and the payment of pay rolls.

Apparently not much of this money was disbursed, because when the report of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation came before the Banking and Currency Committee we found that after months of operation, out of a total of $300,000,000 they had only disbursed something like $6,500,000 and had made commitments of only $39,500,000. It seemed credit was frozen everywhere. So a committee, headed by Dr. Nerlove, of the Treasury Department, composed of 66 men, went into the Federal Reserve district in Chicago, which constitutes the Seventh Federal Reserve District. What did they find?

Here is what they found: Lots of industries would like to borrow money for the purposes set forth in the bill, but no provision had been made for retiring existing indebtedness. such as accrued interest on loans and accrued taxes, and since they were thinking always of the original security behind the loans the loans were not made. We are hoping by the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan authorizing the use of this money up to $50,000 that conditions will improve. Now, remember this is not for new construction. Just remember the language of the bill: "Improvements, alterations, and repairs." Not a dime of this is to be used for new construction. What do we improve? What do you alter? What do you repair? You improve, alter, or repair an existing structure. You have to find out what the fiscal situation is with respect to that structure; you have to find out about the management of the corporation or the hotel or apartment before you can determine whether they are going to get the loan.

Consequently, while these are character loans, the lending institutions making them are going to be rather careful of what is behind them; and I venture to say no banker in his right mind would loan as much as $10,000, $15,000, or $20,000 on any kind of insurance from Uncle Sam if he knew he was only going to get $5,000 of the original amount back. He is not going to be hoodwinked or deluded into any kind of a proposal where there will be any loss, if he can help it.

Now, then, think of all the apartments and commercial buildings or industries that need machinery. They would like to borrow up to $50,000. But what is behind them? Just recall that ahead of any other kind of security will come tax liens. There is no provision in this section to pay existing or accrued indebtedness against the property. No banker in his right mind is going to make a loan under this section even if you put it up to $200,000 for the purposes they have in mind. I do not think this section is worth a tinker's hoot in stimulating the durable-goods industry.

We have had a lot of experience before the special investigating committee of the House with respect to apartments, hotels, and so forth. We found the fees, taxes, and all that sort of thing had accumulated; consequently no banker or lending institution is going to lay any money on the line to help them expand when they have an existing indebtedness staring them in the face that must be liquidated first.

How did the R. F. C. get around that matter? It made a regulation down there stating that not to exceed 15 percent of the loan could be used for taxes or for existing indebtedness. Still it did not do any good, because the most eloquent evidence of whether it did any good or not is the fact that out of $300,000,000 they have only disbursed $6,500,000.

I am quite in sympathy with Mr. O'CONNOR, the gentleman from New York, in his desire to stimulate the durable-goods industry and thereby stimulate employment. But this is not the way to do it.

The proper thing to do would be to set up a loan system whereby a part of the funds so advanced could be used for the purpose of retiring existing taxes and first-mortgage liens so that loans could actually be made for purposes of expansion, alteration, repair, and improvement.

The assistant to the Federal Housing Administrator holds out great hope that some benefit will accrue from this section. I disagree with the distinguished gentleman. These modernization and expansion character loans, predicated on a single name to the paper, can only be an impetus to construction and building if some provision is made to retire existing indebtedness and taxes; and, until that is done, it will have little or no effect on the construction industry.

It occurs to me that a proper approach to this problem would be an authorization of loans to apartments, hotels, commercial and industrial structures, a substantial portion of which could be used for the retirement of existing indebtedness. When this is done, not only will we be able to do some good under the proposed amendment to this bill but we will be able to give real effect to the industrial small-loan measure which was enacted by the Seventy-third Congress.

As I see the problem, we should, instead of passing a futile section such as is now before the committee, introduce a separate bill, liberalizing the provisions of the R. F. C. and Federal Reserve Act, so that loans to needy industries can actually be made, without having to resort to the red tape that has heretofore emasculated the provisions of the previous measures. Consequently, whether the amendment of the gentleman from Michigan is adopted or not is of small import. It merely points the way to the necessity for legislating for a host of small industries, apartments, and commercial buildings which are estopped from receiving loans from the R. F. C. and the Federal Reserve and which will receive no benefit whatsoever from a repair or alteration loan.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 3 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. GRAY of Pennsylvania. I object.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, this proposition has been debated thoroughly and ably. Members of the committee understand fully what is involved. I have no doubt they can also appreciate the difficulty confronting the Committee on Banking and Currency in reaching a conclusion. The two views which have been expressed here this afternoon were also expressed in our committee and finally instead of adopting the provision for the insurance of loans up to $50,000 for repairing and improving commercial, industrial, office, and other buildings of that type we decided upon a compromise and fixed the amount of loans that may be insured for improvements to that class of property at $25,000. We left the amount of loans to be insured upon residential property at $2,000.

One motion now pending is to strike the entire provision from the bill. The other is to make the amount of such loans eligible for insurance $50,000. The members of the committee understand, I am sure, that if the motion to strike out the provision permitting insurance of loans up to $25,000 is stricken from the bill, the law will remain as it is now, with only the provision for the insuring of loans for improvement of homes up to $2,000.

Mr. Chairman, the House understands the proposition, so I move that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto do now close.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, may I ask the gentleman to withhold his motion as I desire to offer an amendment.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, I ask to withdraw the motion in deference to my associate on the committee who wishes to offer an amendment.

Mr. SISSON. Will the chairman of the committee give me an opportunity to offer a merely perfecting amendment, which I think the gentleman is familiar with, after the vote is had on the pending amendment? We can do this without any debate. It will take me just a minute to explain.

Mr. STEAGALL. I have no objection to the gentleman's offering the amendment, but I have had no opportunity to report to him privately. I undertook to consult with members of the committee, but I could not do so.

Mr. Chairman, I renew my motion that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto do now close.

The question was taken.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from New York [Mr. Sisson], just asked permission to offer another amendment to this section. The chairman of the committee had no objection; but if debate is closed on the section, the gentleman from New York will not be able to explain his amendment which is an important administration amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is correct about that.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that a vote has been had and the Chair has counted both the ayes and noes, and you cannot interrupt a vote by a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair had not announced the vote. Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, it was my purpose to withdraw the motion in order to permit the gentleman from New York to offer his amendment and to have the moment's time which he requested. When I made that suggestion the gentleman asked me a question, and I supposed that everyone understood that that was the purpose for which he wished me to withdraw the motion. I hope the Chair will let the motion be withdrawn so that the gentleman may offer his amendment and discuss it for a moment.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I object to the motion being withdrawn. It is time to take a vote on the amendments

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. O'CONNOR) there were—ayes 103, noes 92.

So the motion was agreed to.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. I demand tellers.

Tellers were refused.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days within which to extend their remarks in the Record.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks that request should be made in the House.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Alabama may request that all Members who have spoken in Committee may have 5 legislative days within which to revise their remarks.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all Members who have spoken in Committee may have 5 legislative days within which to revise and extend their remarks in the Record.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Wolcott], which the Clerk will again report.

The Clerk read the Wolcott amendment.

The question was taken; and the Chair being in doubt, the Committee divided, and there were—ayes 118, noes 89.

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise.

mines to rise, the request for tellers will be considered as pending?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is correct.

The question is on the motion of the gentleman from New York that the Committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. Celler, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 6021) to provide additional home-mortgage relief, to amend the Federal Home Loan Bank Act, the Home Owners' Loan Act of 1933, and the National Housing Act, and for other purposes, had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. BEITER. Mr. Speaker, a revolution in the homemortgage refinance is inevitable. By the prompt passage of H. R. 6021, a bill to provide additional home-mortgage relief, this revolution can be directed into channels of immeasurable benefit to the home owner, labor, business, and to the individual and cooperate investors in mortgage securities like-

The kind of revolution needed lies in immediately establishing a new viewpoint regarding the pitiful situation in which the equity owner finds himself today. Despite an extraordinary record of more than a century attesting to the soundness and stability of realty generally and owneroccupied homes, particularly, the home owner, despite an abundance of investment funds, finds it impossible to borrow even a small sum on an unencumbered property, much less replace an existing mortgage, regardless of paid-in equity.

Had the mortgage companies and banking institutions allocated to the mortgagors some of the benefits received from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, this legislation would not be necessary.

It is my opinion that if the mortgage companies do not find some way to pass on to the others the aid they are getting, they will precipitate a series of foreclosures which will demoralize both the property and the mortgage markets.

The customary valuation appraisal of real estate by seasoned appraisers is one based on intrinsic value, since it is a fact that real estate does not and cannot under present methods of dealing possess or hope to possess an immediate market at all relative to true values.

Therefore, it is manifestly unfair ever to place appraisals of realty on a market-value basis (except in rare cases), since the machinery through which it operates denies as yet the necessary channels.

Despite this well-known fact some timid mortgagees are prone in times of stress to weigh the value of their collateral on this illogical basis and too readily rush to foreclose for such technical offenses as nonpayment of taxes, amortization or principal payment on maturity, and so forth, offenses today that carry extenuating factors and call for unusual

Of course, there are some of the leading mortgage companies that are refraining from drastic action in foreclosure matters where violations are understandable, and I hope that their procedure will set an example for the shorter-sighted institutions and individuals.

In the short time that has been allotted to me I have not attempted to fully outline the action of the short-sighted and hysterical mortgagees.

If repeated and wholesale foreclosures of real estate were to be the order of the day, it would soon make its impress on public opinion, and the much-vaunted stability of real estate would be destroyed in the public mind. A distinction should be made concerning vacancies that would exist under some degree of readjusted normalcy, and emergency vacancies of improved property should be classified today.

I trust that there will be a suspension of home foreclosures until this body and the Senate has had an opportunity to pass the legislation now being considered, thereby avoiding a human tragedy on the one hand and wanton destruction of mortgage-security investments on the other. Justice and

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, if the Committee deter- mercy recommend this course. The welfare and safety of the Nation demand it.

ADDITIONAL SECRETARIAL ASSISTANCE FOR MEMBERS OF CONGRESS

Mr. WHITE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following letter from Tom L. Greer, a business man of my district, and my reply thereto explaining my views in regard to the need of additional secretarial assistance for Members of Congress:

HUMBIRD LUMBER Co.,
Sandpoint, Idaho, February 28, 1935.

The Honorable Compton I. White,
Representative from Idaho, Washington, D. C.
My Dear Compton: I am constrained to send you a couple of clippings, one from the Chronicle and the one concerning your bill to increase the number on the Government pay roll, from the Sandrout Pauletin Sandpoint Bulletin.

I cannot conceive of a man as economical as I know you to be wanting to add more people to the Government pay roll, when you cannot possibly find money enough to pay those that are there now. I thought you had realized that it is the ambitton today of everyone, both man and woman, to get on the Federal pay roll, for the wages are higher and the incidentals greater than in any rivate business, taken as a whole.

I was pleased to see that your House carried out our President's desire to have the relief appropriation unallocated. I am frank to say that it is the general opinion here among those who have given the matter any thought that if the requirement of paying "going" the matter any thought that if the requirement of paying "going" wages is attached to the bill, it will mean the fallure of the Democratic regime, for so long as anyone can work for the Government he will never quit to work for an individual. We have seen it in the past 2 years, and it will mean a continuation of this depression and perhaps the end of our form of government, which, it seems, to a great many of those in Washington, would not be undesirable. The "Merry-Go-Round" article is evidence that Messrs. Person and Allen have their fingers on the pulses of the people of the Nation, and, if I have heard the expression once I have heard it a dozen times that our President is trying to carry water on both shoulders. With the large majority of Democrats in Conon both shoulders. With the large majority of Democrats in Congress, they have decided to do the usual thing that large majorities do—scrap among themselves until they finally lose out, accomplishing nothing.

Pardon me for this effusion, but this editorial was so to the point that I felt I should congratulate you in aiding this appropriation through your branch of Congress.

With kindest regards, I remain,

Very respectfully yours,

TOM L. GREER.

Mr. T. L. GREER, Sandpoint, Idaho.

DEAR TOM: I am more than glad to receive your letter of February 28 with reference to my bill to add to the clerical assistants of the Congressmen. I deeply appreciate the spirit in which your of the Congressmen. I deeply appreciate the spirit in which your letter was written.

It was disappointing to find that there is a misunderstanding of the existing situation down here on the part of so many earnest business men like yourself. In the first place, I might state what I find, from experience, is needed in a congressional office: A good executive secretary is needed to handle the affairs of the office and the correspondence. For his and the Congressman's assistance, a the correspondence. For his and the Congressman's assistance, a good, competent stenographer is needed to take dictation from both and to handle the files in the office. In addition, you need a well-qualified assistant to make investigations, compile data, and prepare digests of facts affecting legislation under consideration and to handle special departmental matters—just such an assistant as would be required in the office of a busy attorney.

Anything short of this curtails the usefulness and value of the service that a Representative of a congressional district can render his constituents, and it is my candid opinion that if a man is sent to Congress, and for any reason does not measure up to the standard that is set here, he has no business in the House of Representatives.

In contacting the many sections and departments of the executive branches of the Government, it is appalling to find the enormous number of people on the Government pay roll who are rendering a minimum of service, and the extravagance and prodigal rendering a minimum of service, and the extravagance and prodigal spending of money by the departments. It seems so silly to adopt a penny-wise and pound-foolish policy by false economy on the part of the Congressmen themselves who are clothed with power to control the appropriations and should effect true economy instead of some petty, false curtailment of their own usefulness by failure to supply sufficient clerical assistants.

As a plain business proposition, when you assign a man to a job or task, to secure sufficient and effective work you must supply the necessary tools. You don't send a man to the woods to get timber with a dull ax or an inefficient crew. In plain woods parlance, we have been working short-handed in the congressional offices ever since the many Government activities have been added by recent recovery legislation.

Do you know there are over 100 public-works applications which have been approved out there, and presented to the Department of Public Works here, and that in considering these applications passing through the departments—applications that are most important to the people of the several communities of my district—some little technicality arises and the application is shelved. If the Congressman were properly assisted, someone representing those people could go into the departments to ascertain the difficulty, advise the applicants back home so they could meet the requirements, and thereby get the application through before the appropriation is exhausted. I say to you frankly that if these applications were properly looked after, it would take a Congressman's entire time during the period of their examination and consideration. of their examination and consideration.

Then there are the cases of people who are in trouble with their home-loan applications, and those who desire to take advantage of the Federal housing program, or the thousand-and-one people who are in trouble with their farm-loan applications and appeal to the Congressman for help; the innumerable veterans who have been unjustly dealt with by the Veterans' Administration and appeal to the Congressman to straighten out their pension and hospitalization matters, or the dozen things that will promote the veterans' welfare.

Surely a Congressman, to represent the people as I believe they should be represented, should have an opportunity to study legislation, particularly appropriations. I believe you will agree with me that a great deal of time and effort and money has been wasted by lengthy investigations which have amounted to nothing. If a Congressman were up and doing, he should be able to make some integrations on his own initiative and some persons to the Deinvestigations on his own initiative and send someone to the Departments to dig out the facts. Still, when we want to secure the authority to get some small measure of results with the assistance of an adequate clerical staff, we are confronted with misunder-standings and delusions on the part of the people who do not realize what true economy means, for the waste here is colossal. I believe some of it can be charged to the pressure of work that absorbs a Congressman's time in handling routine matters, which prevents a proper study and consideration of the Government's business in the numerous Departments where waste and extravagance is rampaut.

I stand by the action I have taken in attempting to secure needed help and believe that the House by its inferiority complex has stood in its own light, which has resulted in the failure to remedy the very thing they are trying to correct.

Sincerely yours.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Ninety-one Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

SOPHIE DE SOTO

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate the concurrent resolution coming over from the House of Representatives, which will be read.

The legislative clerk read the concurrent resolution (H. Con. Res. 16), as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the action of the Speaker of the House of Representatives and of the President of the Senate in signing the enrolled bill (H. R. 330) entitled "An act for the relief of Sophie de Sota", be rescinded, and that in the reenrollment of the said bill the Clerk of the House of Representatives be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to make the following correction, namely: Strike out the words "de Sota" wherever they appear in said bill and title and insert in lieu thereof the words "de Soto."

Mr. ROBINSON. I move that the Senate concur in the resolution.

The motion was agreed to.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution of the Legislature of the State of Kentucky, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry:

Senate Resolution 1

Concurrent resolution requesting that the Congress of the United States without further delay pass the Frazier-Lemke farm refinance bill, S. 212 and H. R. 2066

refinance bill, S. 212 and H. R. 2066

Whereas unless immediate relief is given hundreds and thousands of additional farmers will lose their farms and their homes and millions more will be forced into our cities and villages, and the army of the unemployed will necessarily increase to alarming proportions; and
Whereas there is no adequate way of refinancing existing agricultural indebtedness, and the farmers are at the mercy of their mortgagees and creditors throughout this State and Nation; and Whereas the Frazier-Lemke refinance bill, being S. 212 and H. R.

Whereas the Frazier-Lemke refinance bill, being S. 212 and H. R. 2066, in the Congress of the United States provides for the liquidating and refinancing of agricultural indebtedness at a reduced rate of interest through the Farm Credit Administration and Federal land banks; and

Whereas the Frazier-Lemke bill has the endorsement of 22 State legislatures and in addition the lower Houses of the State of New York and Delaware and of many commercial clubs, chambers of commerce, bank organizations, and of business and professional men and women, as well as the great majority of the farmers of this Nation; and

Whereas the enactment of this bill will have a vital effect not only upon agriculture but upon all classes of industry; and Whereas agriculture is the basic industry of this country, and there can be no recovery until agriculture is put upon a sound basis: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That it is the sense of your memorialists, the members of the Kentucky Legislative Assembly of the State of Kentucky (the senate and the house concurring), that the Congress of the United States should enact the Frazier-Lemke bill without further clays: he it further of the United States should enact the Frazier-Lemke bill without further delay; be it further Resolved, That a copy of this memorial, duly authenticated, be sent by the secretary of state to the President of the Senate and Speaker of the House of Representatives of the United States, and to each Senator and Representative in Congress from this State, to the President of the United States, and to United States Senator Lynn J. Frazier and Congressman William Lemke.

A. B. CHANDLER,
President of the Senate.
W. E. ROGERS,

Speaker House of Representatives.

Approved this February 27, 1935.

RUBY LAFFOON, Governor of Kentucky.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of Montana, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations:

House Joint Resolution 5

Memorializing the United States Senate to ratify at the instant session of Congress the treaty between the United States of America and the Dominion of Canada for the building of the Great Lakes-St. Lawrence seaway

Whereas there is pending before the United States Senate a treaty between the United States of America and the Dominion of Canada for the building of the Great Lakes-St. Lawrence seaway; and

Whereas this project has been under scrutiny and analysis by boards composed of the members of the Corps of United States Army Engineers, economic investigators of the Department of Commerce, the International Joint Commission, the United States-St. Lawrence Commission, and many other groups over a long period of years and has had the approval of four Presidents of the United States, of 46 Senators of the United States, and of both the Democratic and Republican Parties in convention assembled; and

Whereas the International Joint Commission found that withwhereas the international Joint Commission found that without considering the probability of new traffic created by the opening of the water route to the seaboard, there existed between the region economically tributary to the Great Lakes and oversea points, as well as between the same region and the Atlantic and Pacific seaboards, a volume of outbound and inbound trade that might reasonably be expected to seek this route sufficient to justify the expense involved in its improvement; and

the expense involved in its improvement; and

Whereas the United States Great Lakes-St. Lawrence Commission found the construction of this shipway from the Great Lakes to the sea to be imperative both for the relief and for the development of a vast area in the interior of the continent; and

Whereas the building of this seaway, by affording easy and cheap communication to and from the interior of the continent, would be the greatest farm-relief measure ever passed; and

Whereas no project now before the country in the public works or any other program for work relief begins to have the economic justification this project has, and none will do so much to break the back of the depression, as the money spent on this project would be for durable goods and labor: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives of the State of Montana (and the Senate of the State of Montana concurring). That the State of Montana memorialize the Senate of the United States now in session and by the adoption of this resolution, the State now in session and by the adoption of this resolution, the State of Montana does memorialize the Senate of the United States to ratify, at the present session of the Congress of the United States, the treaty between the United States of America and the Dominion of Canada providing for the building in accordance with the terms of said treaty a deep waterway canal connecting the Great Lakes with tidewater; and be it further *Resolved*, That the Governor of this State is hereby requested to forthwith transmit to the Senate of the United States a properly authenticated copy of this joint resolution of the House of Representatives and the Senate of the State of Montana.

Memorializing Congress to support House Joint Resolutions 15, 83, and 86, introduced in the Congress of the United States by Representative BURDICK

house of representatives concurring)—
Whereas Congressman USHER L. BURDICK has introduced in the House of Representatives of the United States Congress the follow-

House Joint Resolution 15, which has for its object the cancelation of all feed and seed loans heretofore made by the United States Government through the Farm Credit Administration to farmers living in the drought district;

House Joint Resolution 83, which has for its object the establish-living in the drought district;

House Joint Resolution 83, which has for its object the establishment of a national moratorium with respect to debts financed directly or indirectly by Government credit guaranty or authority, in order to prevent foreclosure or execute sales of homes and business establishments in the United States for a period of 2 years; and House Joint Resolution 86, which has for its object the appointment of a joint committee of 7, 3 to be selected from the Senate and 4 from the Members of the House, with full power to inquire into Federal Emergency Relief distribution, including feed for live-stock, and authorizing inquiry into the feasibility of allocating funds for Federal Emergency Relief to the various States; and Whereas we are in hearty accord with all of said several resolutions and the objects to be accomplished thereby: Therefore be it Resolved, That we do urge the Congress of the United States to take such steps as shall be necessary to carry out the purposes of said several resolutions; be it further

Resolved, That copies of this resolution be sent to the Secretary of the Senate, Speaker of the House of Representatives of the United States Congress, and to the Honorable Usher L. Burdick.

memorialized to give relief to the State of North Dakota and all other States imposing taxes based upon or measured by sales of tangible personal property by immediately providing for the regulation of interstate commerce through granting consent to taxation by the several States of certain interstate sales as provided by the measure, S. 2897, introduced by Senator Harrison during the second session of the Seventy-third Congress; and be it further Resolved, That copies of this resolution be sent to the presiding officers of the legislative bodies of all other States of the United States, with the request that they transmit similar memorials to Congress, and that copies of this resolution be transmitted to the President of the United States, to the President of the Senate and President of the United States, to the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the Congress of the United States, to each of the Members from North Dakota of the Senate and the House of Representatives of the United States, and to the Honorable Par Harrison, United States Senator from Mississippi, author of the measure which would afford the States relief in this important matter.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the annual meeting of the National Council of Schoolhouse Construction, held in Washington, D. C., favoring the making of increased appropriations for the Public Works Administration to permit more extensive construction of schoolhouses, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. BORAH presented the following joint memorial of the Legislature of the State of Idaho, which was referred to the Committee on Finance:

Senate Joint Memorial 5

o the Honorable Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled: Whereas there exists within the United States a condition of acute economic distress; and Whereas by reason of such economic distress there has been created a wide-spread condition of unemployment; and

Whereas such economic distress and unemployment have resulted in much suffering and want of the necessities of life; and Whereas it has become the public policy of the United States to take affirmative steps to relieve the conditions aforesaid; and

Whereas there is proposed for enactment by the Congress of the Whereas there is proposed for enactment by the Congress of the United States certain constructive legislation commonly known as the "Townsend old-age pension revolving fund plan", having for its purpose the creation of a National Treasury fund to be maintained by the people of the United States and used for the payment of old-age pensions; and

Whereas it appears that by the operation of such plan a substantial percentage of those persons of advanced years now holding tial percentage of those persons of advanced years now holding positions in the industries of this Nation will be relieved of the necessity of labor for their sustenance and retired from service to permit employment of younger persons now unemployed; and Whereas it appears that by the operation of such plan large sums of money will be released and required to circulate freely to the elimination of hoarding and the inestimable benefit of trade; and Whereas by the operation of such plan the aged and infirm will receive of the bounties of this Nation and be enabled to contribute substantially to its commercial prosperity without constituting a burden upon employed persons of limited means: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate of the State of Idaho (the house of representatives concurring), That we most respectfully urge upon the Congress of the United States the enactment of the said Townsend congress of the United States the enactment of the said Townsend old-age pension revolving fund plan, as now proposed; be it further Resolved, That the secretary of state of the State of Idaho be, and he is hereby, directed to forthwith forward certified copies of this memorial to the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America, and to the Senators and Representatives in Congress from this State.

Mr. METCALF presented the following resolution of the House of Representatives of the State of Rhode Island, which was referred to the Committee on Finance:

House resolution requesting the Senators and Representatives from Rhode Island in the Congress of the United States to use their best efforts to have repealed the new income-tax publicity provision

Whereas there is great delay in the filing of income-tax returns, since the publicity clause of the income-tax law is not in effect until the Commissioner of Internal Revenue defines regulations under which the tax information may be made public; and Whereas there is great agitation for the repeal of the new income-tax publicity provisions, and the House Ways and Means Committee of Congress has favorably reported a resolution for the repeal of the income-tax publicity section of the revenue act: Now, therefore, be it repeal of the income-tax publicity section of the revenue act:

Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That this house of representatives respectfully requests the Senators and Representatives from Rhode Island in the Congress of the United States to use their best efforts to have the income-tax publicity section of the revenue act repealed; and the recording clerk is hereby authorized and directed to transmit to the Senators and Representatives from Rhode Island in Congress duly certified copies of this resolution.

Mr. MURRAY presented the following joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of Montana, which was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds:

Joint resolution memorializing Congress to use granite and natural stone in construction of public buildings

To the Honorable Senate and the House of Representatives of the United States of America and the Honorable President of the United States of America:

Whereas the Federal Government is contemplating an extensive public-works program, under which many public buildings will be erected throughout the United States; and

Whereas the present status of unemployment in the granite and stone industries in the State of Montana and other granite- and stone-producing States is deplorable, it being estimated that from 80 to 85 percent of granite and stone employees are on Federal relief; and

Whereas the greater portion of the cost of finished granite and stone is incurred by labor; and

Whereas from the standpoint of economy and prudent policy it is advisable that lasting and durable materials be used in the construction of public buildings: Now, be it therefore Resolved by the House of Representatives of the State of Montana (the senate concurring), That Congress be respectfully urged and petitioned to enact legislation, or to otherwise take appropriate action to require that granite and natural stone be used in the construction of public buildings to be erected under the public-works program; and that the secretary of state be instructed to send copies of this resolution to the President, Vice President, Secretary of the Treasury of the United States, and to the Members of the Congress from the State of Montana.

Approved March 5, 1935.

F. H. COONEY, Governor,

Mr. PITTMAN presented the following joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of Nevada, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce:

Senate joint resolution memorializing Congress to not repeal long-and short-haul clause

To the Congress of the United States:

Your memorialist, the Legislature of the State of Nevada, hereby respectfully represents that

Whereas the measure before your honorable bodies for repeal of the long- and short-haul clause of the Interstate Commerce Act, if adopted and it were possible of enforcement in the spirit that it is intended, would be a public disaster, no more to the business and economic interests of the inter-Mountain States of the great West than to the railway lines themselves, which are sponsoring this illadvised legislation; and advised legislation; and

Whereas each year the manufactures of freight-carrying motor vehicles are enlarging the carrying capacities of their units and fleets and immensely broadening their range; and

Whereas the railroad managements are cognizant of these facts, or ought to be, and are striving at the same time to tighten their hold upon us by placing truck haulage under the jurisdiction of the Interstate Commerce Commission, subjecting it to rules and practices inimical to the public welfare; and

Whereas were it possible for the railroads to unite and accomplish this double purpose, it would be an absurdity to permit, expect, or require the truck operators to adopt a back-haul rate and practice in the delivery of intermountain freight similar to what the railroads propose to appropriate to themselves, or to participate in their pretensions of justification therefor; and

Whereas, on the contrary, it would have the effect of causing wide-spread retaliation, both through State legislation and business dealings with shippers, by encouraging motor haulage here and everywhere, and be the worst calamity that could happen to the railroads; and

railroads; and

railroads; and

Whereas for more than 2 years the railroads and their backers in Congress have carried on a vigorous campaign of propaganda, telling their employees and the public that collecting from the public under the name of a back haul for a service not rendered, but if rendered would be a disservice, would have the effect of stimulating railroad employment, which propaganda is false and vicious, to the great disadvantage of employees more than any other class; and

Whereas in previous times when the back-haul practice was in operation the Southern Pacific Co., alone in its latitude and area, absorbed the whole of the added revenue extracted from the public accruing from the back haul, sharing no part of it with connecting lines, which fact refutes and answers the argument of its general need by the railroads or its stimulating employment: Now, therefore, be it

fore, be it

Resolved, That the Legislature of the State of Nevada hereby respectfully requests the Congress to defeat this and all measures now or hereafter before it designed to repeal or nullify the long-and short-haul clause of the interstate commerce law, and, further, to commit itself to a permanent policy of retaining and strengthening said long- and short-haul clause against future agitation for its

Mr. PITTMAN also presented the following joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of Nevada, which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys:

Assembly joint resolution memorializing Congress and the Secretary of Agriculture of the United States for relief in the matter of grazing fees for livestock upon the national forests

Whereas the existing schedule of grazing-fee charges exacted for use by Nevada stock-raising settlers of those public ranges upon which their properties necessarily were and still are established, and which have, from time to time, been surrounded by the so-called "national forest withdrawals", are based upon range appraisals covering periods of abnormally high livestock whereas the continuance of such charge schedules, in the face of existing livestock values far below any known for many years past, can only most seriously impede and retard any reasonable opportunity for recovery and rehabilitation of Nevada's stockraising and ranching settlements, a most important factor in the social and economic structure of our State: Now, therefore, be it Resolved by the Assembly and the Senate of the State of Nevada, That we most earnestly urge upon all Federal officials concerned the extreme need for continuance, for the grazing season of 1935, of the 50-percent reduction in national forest grazing-fee charges as granted for 1932, based upon the charges in effect for 1931; and be it further and be it further

Resolved, That we urge our Nevada congressional delegation to use every effort toward securing an early and complete range reappraisal, looking to the fixing of forest grazing-fee schedules in keeping with the heavy decline in livestock values that has occurred since the present schedules were determined; and be it

Resolved, That the secretary of state of the State of Nevada be, and he is hereby, directed to immediately forward copies of this resolution to the President of the United States, to the Speaker of the House of Representatives, to each of our Senators, and to our Representative in Congress.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE presented the following joint resolutions of the Legislature of the State of Wisconsin, which were referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry:

Joint resolution relating to a code of fair dealing, and to the establishing of the cost of production to farmers and a reasonable profit on their investments

Whereas the Congress of the United States has provided certain economic protection to those engaged in commercial and industrial enterprises by means of codes of fair competition promulgated under the National Recovery Act; and
Whereas farmers constitute 40 percent of the population of the United States and an even larger share of the total buying power of the Nation; and

Whereas Congress, by means of the Agricultural Adjustment Act, has endeavored to increase the farmers' buying power, but has not faced the fundamental fact that the farmer is entitled not only to higher prices for certain of his products, but is also entitled to his cost of production for all products plus a reasonable profit on his investment if his buying power is to become permanently restored; and

. Whereas sound recovery cannot be reached in this country until the farmers' buying power is permanently restored: Therefore be it

Resolved by the senate (the assembly concurring). That the Legislature of Wisconsin respectfully memorializes the Congress of the United States to enact legislation to provide for a code of fair competition for the farmer, to establish the cost of production to farmers, and to provide for a reasonable profit on their investments; be it further

Whereas this measure, if enacted, will provide an effective method of refinancing the debt-ridden farmer and an efficient and much needed credit system for the farmer; and

Whereas the liquidation and refinancing of agricultural indebt-edness is necessary to effect rehabilitation of the agricultural industry: Now, therefore, be it

Mr. LA FOLLETTE presented the following joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of Wisconsin, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor:

Joint resolution memorializing the Congress of the United States to enact legislation providing for Federal aid to high schools

Whereas the high schools of the United States have suffered greatly from reduced budgets due to the inability of local units of government to raise the necessary money by local taxes; and

Whereas the Legislature of Wisconsin has estimated that the high schools in Wisconsin need assistance in the amount of over $6,000,000, which cannot be met by the State; and

Resolved by the senate (the assembly concurring), That the Legislature of Wisconsin respectfully memorialize the Congress of the United States to immediately enact legislation to provide for adequate financial aid to the high schools, with the provision that any moneys so received be administered and distributed by the State department of public instruction, that our property taxpayers may be protected and that our educational system shall not

Mr. LA FOLLETTE also presented the following joint resolutions of the Legislature of the State of Wisconsin, which were referred to the Committee on Finance:

Joint resolution memorializing the Congress of the United States to reduce the excise tax on intoxicating liquors and beer and other fermented malt beverages

Whereas the high excise tax on intoxicating liquor and beer and other fermented malt beverages promotes unlawful manufacture, possession and sale of such liquors and beverages upon which no taxes are paid; and

Whereas a situation which encourages and promotes bootlegging and indirectly other crimes is a public menace and should be corrected to protect the legitimate dealer, to increase the public revenues, and to prevent crime; and

Whereas the reduction of the tax on beer and other fermented malt beverages will result in an increased consumption of beer and other such beverages and lessen the demand for spirituous liquors of higher alcoholic content: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the senate (the assembly concurring), That the Legislature of Wisconsin respectfully memorializes the Congress of the United States to reduce the Federal excise tax on intoxicating liquor to $1.10 per proof gallon and to reduce the excise tax on beer and other fermented malt beverages so that such tax will not and other fermented malt beverages so the exceed $2 per barrel; be it further Resolved, That properly attested copies of this resolution be sent to the presiding officers of both Houses of the Congress of the United States and to each Wisconsin Member thereof.

Whereas the people of Wisconsin, at a referendum at the 1934 spring election voted overwhelmingly in favor of a compulsory old-age-pension law for this State; and Whereas there is a rapidly growing sentiment over the Nation for old-age pensions to give an adequate security for the aged by means of cash benefits so that they may live out their last years independently and not be compelled to seek the charity of their neighbors or the humiliation of the poor farm; and Whereas it is clearly desirable that an old-age-pension system should be national in its scope and uniform for all States in its provisions: Therefore, be it

DEBATE ON GENERAL APPROPRIATION BILLS-AMENDMENT TO RULES

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, I send to the desk a resolution, which I ask may be referred to the Committee on Rules. I may state that I have in mind no particular Senator but I have in mind all Senators. It has seemed to me perfectly ridiculous that the Senate should sit here day after | winter.

whatever to appropriation bills under consideration. If possible, I desire to put a stop to the practice. I do not entertain a strong belief that the resolution will ever come out of the committee, but I want it referred.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be read for the information of the Senate.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution (S. Res. 99), as

Resolved, That paragraph no. 1 of rule XIX of the Standing Rules of the Senate (relating to debate) be, and the same is hereby, amended by adding after the word "debate", at the end of said paragraph, the following:

": Provided, That during the consideration of any general appropriation bill, no debate, except by unanimous consent, shall be in order that is not germane or relevant to the pending bill. All questions of germaneness, relevancy, or points of order raised under this proviso, including appeals from the decision of the Chair thereon, shall be decided without debate."

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, is it the purpose of the Senator from Virginia to have the resolution referred to the Committee on Rules?

Mr. GLASS. Yes; I ask to have the resolution referred to the Committee on Rules.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be so referred.

INVESTIGATION RELATING TO FROZEN SWORDFISH

Mr. WALSH submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 100), which was referred to the Committee on Finance:

Resolved, That the United States Tariff Commission be, and hereby is, requested to complete, as soon as practicable, and report to the President upon its investigation under section 359 of the Tariff Act of 1930 with respect to frozen swordfish.

SEED AND CROP-PRODUCTION LOANS

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have inserted in the RECORD a letter from W. J. Rogan, county agent of Marathon County, Wis., together with enclosed information, which gives a very graphic picture of the pressing need for seed in the drought areas of central Wisconsin.

There being no objection, the matter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

> COOPERATIVE EXTENSION WORK IN AGRICULTURE AND HOME ECONOMICS, Wausau, Wis., March 8, 1935.

Hon. ROBERT M. LA FOLLETTE.

Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.

Dear Senator: I telegraphed you yesterday giving you the information in the telegram regarding the furnishing of seed to farmers in the drought counties of Wisconsin on a work-relief plan.

The situation in a nutshell is this: In the first place the State and county administrations of Wisconsin as a whole are just as anxious to get rid of this drought program as the Federal Emergency Relief Administration. We recognize that as soon as we can obtain a crop in the territory that has been hard hit over a period of 4 or 5 years, a big load has been removed from the Government. Secondly, that the purchasing power of the farmers is going to be very materially increased and the business conditions of the State as a whole will be revived and a greater income for all concerned will be the answer.

After a very thorough discussion of the conditions in every one of these counties by committeemen represented at this meeting, it was agreed that we have every indication in the world right now for a good crop providing we can get the seed into the ground.

Personally, I have been discussing conditions for the last 3 weeks with some of the members of the Marathon County board; weeks with some of the members of the Marathon County board; men in whose judgment I have relied for the last 15 years, whose integrity cannot be questioned, and whose only desire, in this whole drought-relief program, is to get rid of it as soon as possible. They feel as expressed in the meeting: that unless seed is provided on a work-relief program in which the farmer can pay for this seed by working it off, that farmers are going to just get along with as little as possible. They are going to skimp, because of the fact that they have not the money and because the prices are too high. Timothy seed, for example, normally sells at 7 to 10 cents a pound. It is now selling at 25 to 28 cents per pound. per pound.

Even under the very best circumstances and conditions, we are not going to have any hay crop in Wisconsin until 1936. We have not sufficient seeding left over from last year, except in a few spotted sections of the State, to produce a hay crop.

Everyone recognizes, of course, that emergency hays will have to take the place of normal hays this coming summer and next of getting seed into the hands of farmers.

At several sectional meetings held by Prof. K. L. Hatch and Arlie Mucks 2 weeks ago, a program was worked out with the members of the extension force, county drought-relief committees, directors of the extension force, county drought-relief committees, directors of relief, and agricultural committees of the county board to provide a substitute seeding program in which emergency hays could be used, and we are going out to the farmers with that story now through meetings, newspapers, articles, radio talks, and various other methods. However, we still come back to the problem that hinges on the success of the whole program; that is, the problem of getting seed into the hands of farmers.

I am sending for your information a comment report of a few of the counties that have given us information on the debt situation. This will give you a general resume of the debts existing in these counties. We recognize from these reports that debts are excessive. While we can work out a long-time program to scale down these debts and take other steps to improve the conditions of the owners of these farms, the emergency existing at the present time is most paramount. With the carrying charge of approximately $7.50 per crop-acre and with returns as shown in the last year's report in several counties, ranging from $8 to $14 per acre, there is absolutely no money left for living purposes, paying off on the principal, and buying seed for this year. Although the financial conditions are in general a little better than these reports of last year show, the drain of going through several years of depression and drought has left what were otherwise farmers with living incomes to carry on financial statements showing a bankrupt condition and not sufficient income to provide enough money for the purchase of seeds.

Seed loans in the estimation of all of the committee members will not answer the question. Farmers are not in a position to will not answer the question. Farmers are not in a position to repay.

The feeling of the groups expressed in conferences during the recess periods of the meeting was to the effect that if seed was not procured on a work-relief program, there is every indication in the world that we will have a heavy relief load next winter.

Last year the restrictions were removed on planting corn for fodder purposes. As a result of this limitation being removed a tremendous acreage of corn was planted in the drought counties. Giving figures in Marathon County with which I am thoroughly familiar, 1,536 temporary silos were erected in this county on orders through the office, in addition, at least 300 more were erected by farmers themselves to save the corn by ensiling it. It meant a feed-conservation measure in the county conservatively figured of $250,000 worth of feed based on this past winter's prices.

It also kept off from relief hundreds of farmers until the middle of January to the first of February. In fact some farmers who are not making applications for drought relief state that if it had not been for the temporary silo that they erected they would have been forced to apply before the new year started. Most of these temporary silos erected held from 40 to 50 tons of silage and many farmers erected their from 40 to 50 tons of sliage and many farmers erected two of them.

I want to suggest that this situation requires your very serious consideration and every effort should be made to obtain this seed on a work-relief program and secure the consent of Dr. A. G. Black, chief of the corn-hog section, to release restrictions according to enclosed resolutions. The men who attended at the meeting here lived with this dreather than the lived with this dreather than the second section. ing have lived with this drought program now for several years and they are in a position to know what the actual conditions are among the farmers.

Very truly yours,

W. J. ROGAN, County Agent, Chairman of the Central Wisconsin Drought Relief Committee.

DROUGHT RELIEF MEETING AT WAUSAU, WIS., MARCH 7, 1935

The purpose of this meeting is to discuss the problem of obtaining seed on a work-relief basis. The financial load of the farmers in the drought territory caused from the last 4 or 5 years of drought, depending upon the territory involved, has caused the building up of debts so that it is impossible for the farmers, especially with the high price of seed at the present time, to purchase cially with the high price of seed at the present time, to purchase seed with cash.

Our object is to assist all eligible farmers on drought relief who have exhausted their governmental and commercial credit to get back on their feet. It will be necessary for seed to be obtained on a work-relief basis instead of cash, or otherwise they will simply get along with what they possibly can, because they do not have the money to buy seeds.

Weather conditions, no frost in the ground, heavy blanket of snow, fields not having produced a crop for the past 4 or 5 years, give every indication that if seed is provided by the Government, all farmers will be better off and conditions in general will be vastly improved. vastly improved.

STATEMENTS MADE BY REPRESENTATIVES OF COUNTIES PRESENT AT THE MEETING

Marathon County: The total real-estate debts, based on 1929 figures, shows mortgages listed on farms in Marathon County $13,666,529. The figures are not available for the chattel debt for all the farms, but there has been issued in Marathon County over $1,000,000 in barnyard loans through the Regional Agricultural Credit Corporation.

In a very accurate survey that was made of 3,449 farmers on relief last year, out of a total of 3,600, based on 1933 figures, the debt charge on real estate of these farmers was $12,450,890. The debt charge on real estate of these farmers was $12,450,890. The total acres per farm run 107; the acres cleared per farm was 55, and the total cows per farm was 11; the cash income per farm was 334; the cash income per crop-acre was $8. We figured out that the total debt charge per crop-acre amounted to $7.46 amortized over 20 years at 5 percent interest. This evidence presented in this survey shows the farmers had 54 cents left last year per crop-acre for living expenses.

These figures indicated the fact that the farmers are bankrupt and that every effort must be made this year to obtain seed for them on a work-relief program, because they do not have the cash to purchase these seeds.

Shawano: About one-half of the farmers are in need of some help to get seed this spring. The western part of our county was them on a work-relief program, because they do not have the cash to purchase these seeds.

Shawano: About one-half of the farmers are in need of some help to get seed this spring. The western part of our county was more affected than the eastern part. About 1,500 will have to have help. Many farmers have fed their seed oats, and there is not to be any seed loans this spring. Therefore I suggest that we remain on the note basis and later have those who cannot pay for their loan in cash work it off. We also think that the limitation on corn should be abolished. They cannot get seed grain in many instances and so would like to put this land in corn. If this limitation is not lifted, some farmers will not sign contracts this year. Twelve hundred and eighty-four farmers are on relief. The majority of this number live in the western part of the county. Chattel mottgages average $550 per farm, and unsecured debts average $500. Real-estate mortgages, first and second, average $4,700 per farm. Forty percent of the farmers in that area were on relief. The income per farm in 1933 was $300 per year.

Waupaca: Returns from a survey of 1,500 farms showed that the total indebtedness equaled the assessed valuation, and the income on the farm was just about enough to equal the taxes and the interest. We will need considerable seed this spring. Eighty percent of our alfalfa killed out, as did most of our old seedings. We will need grass seeds in addition to emergency seeds. We will need considerable oats, too, for grain crops, and some corn. Cut out the red tape, so that we can get this seed to the farmers when they need it. We also desire this seed on a work-relief program.

Oconto: We will need seed. Oats for seed is needed. In order to take care of the fellow who is down and out.

Taylor: Clover and alfalfa is needed this spring. Corn is also needed. One-third of the farmers will have to buy grain. Green Lake: The seed situation in Green Lake County will be temporary hay, such as soybeans, corn, alfalfa, and sweetclover. The grass seed last year.

Dunn: The most serious shortage of the seed situation is the grass seed, clover, and alfalfa. All we have is what we seeded last fall and that depends upon how it comes out this spring. We will be short of oats, but will have enough barley. However, we will need seed for emergency hay crops. It would be a good idea to get seed relief on a work-agreement basis so that farmers would not have to sign notes which they can never pay back, but meet their children by working. Beturns from a survey of 1 244 not have to sign notes which they can never pay back, but meet their obligations by working. Returns from a survey of 1,244 farms represent a total of $6,082,000 in farm mortgages; $318,000 in chattels. This was an average of $4,873 per farm and $61 per cleared acre or an average of $37 on every acre on the farm. Their yearly income averaged $238.45.

Buffalo: Out of 516 farmers, 66 percent will have to buy seed oats and seed barley. New seeding is in good condition, compared to usual, but only about one-third of the usual seeding was put in. We favor the work-relief agreement.

Lincoln: Our needs will be very much like the other counties. We will need grass seeds and emergency hay seeds. I do not believe that over one-half of the farmers threshed last year. Government help in seeds would mean more than feed loans. Government help in seeds would mean more than feed loans. We also believe that there should be some method of financing the dealers so that we can keep our own grain that we do have on hand in the county, and not have the dealers ship it out to get ready cash. The indebtedness in Lincoln County is similar to Marathon; that is, about $100 per crop-acre; in lesser-developed parts it is somewhat less, and vice versa. The income is generally less than Marathon County. The average income per farm on the lesser-developed farms is about $100.

Marinette: The situation is a little better than last year. A pretty fair grain crop was threshed, but it was far from normal. Some has been fed up. We believe that seed relief now will be better than feed relief next fall.

Price: Very little corn matured in Price County, due to the early frost. We have none on hand now. Our situation is worse than last year. Our allotment will have to be doubled and it will be necessary to go on a work-relief basis. Average indebtedness is be necessary to go on a work-relief basis. Average indebtedness is $46 per crop-acre.

Vilas: Seed situation same as in other counties. Vilas: Seed situation same as in other counties. The farmers will have to purchase all of their seed this spring, with no money to do so. We favor strongly a work program upon which these farmers can get seed. The indebtedness in Vilas County would be more per crop-acre, because so little of the land is under cultivation. However, in proportion debts would run about the same. Polk: Northwest part of the county was hit hardest. We will need $100,000 for grass seed alone. The grain situation is a little better than Barron.

Monroe: Grain and grass seed is needed. Work program is better than note system.

Eau Claire: Only 20 percent of our seeding is in good condition.

We have no oats or barley.

Clark: The area of two townships was particularly hit by army Clark: The area of two townships was particularly hit by army worms and hail. We are entirely out of grain. We may have enough seed in one part of the county (grain seed) to furnish enough to the other townships, but we will have to have money to hold this. We have no seed corn and no grass seed. The chattel mortgages are greater than the stock is worth. The only reason that the chattel holder did not take the cattle was because he figured prices would come back eventually and he would receive his original investment. A real help would be to get seed to farmers in time. The total mortgage is $9,744,303, which is a total of about $14 per crop-acre.

of about $14 per crop-acre.

Chippewa: We are short of grain and grass seed. We are encouraging the use of grain for hay crops. With the amount of moisture received so far we have a pretty good growth to start with. One thousand seven hundred and thirty farms on survey show farmers are broke, and most of them do not know it.

St. Croix: Eight hundred and eighty-two loans last year out of 1,000 applications, averaging $73.43 per loan. Seedings about 15 percent of what they should be. We are in bad shape. New seedings are impossible if work-out loans cannot be had.

Portage: Seed-grain situation not as serious as last year; our own surplus in one section will take care of the needs in others if financial side received.

surplus in one section will take care of the needs in others if financial aid is received. An increase in legumes is necessary. There is no hay seedings, except farmers who could afford to buy it. We have 25,000 to 30,000 acres limed, or 18 percent of the crop land in the county. In a survey of 1,500 farmers on feed relief we found that out of 1,000 farms there were $3.500,000 of debts. There was only $500 difference between the total indebtedness and the assessed valuation. Farmers are not in a position to buy seeds. If emergency seeds are available here, it will help the situation a great deal, so that they can grow roughage to take care of the feed problem next year.

Langlade: We will have increased corn acreage for fodder purposes and have to buy all seed. About one-third of the farmers

Langlade: We will have increased corn acreage for fodder purposes and have to buy all seed. About one-third of the farmers will have to be supplied with seed on loans of some kind.

Jackson: We will have to ship in all grass seed. We have plenty of grain if properly distributed. Last fall we shipped in 100 tons of lime. Alfalfa seed is now in demand; about 300 bushels will be needed; also 200 bushels of clover seed, along with soybeans and other emergency crops.

RESOLUTIONS

Be it resolved by these representatives from Wisconsin drought-stricken counties, said representatives being county relief directors, county agricultural agents, and county drought-relief committees,

Whereas the F. E. R. A. liming program conducted this past year was one of the most worth-while long-time rehabilitation efforts, in that it will stimulate the growing of more legumes, so valuable to our livestock raisers and dairy farmers, and at the same time was a splendid project for the worthy employment of both F. E. R. A. and drought-relief labor.

Therefore we respectfully petition and urge the W. E. R. A. and

F. E. R. A.

1. To continue this liming program until October 31, 1935, in all its phases.

2. To set up a commercial limestone project again to furnish lime to those sections of counties that have no local sources of limestone, marl, or sludge.

3. That some consideration be given to the size of farm in determining individual farm allotments.

4. That a sufficiently larger tonnage of lime sludge and marl than at present be allowed, raising the sludge tonnage to 50 and marl to 60 on the basis of 30 of limestone, so that the same acreage can be covered by each, because sludge and marl contain from 35 to 70 percent of water and limestone only 5 to 10 percent.

That in the event rehabilitation work projects are set up, farmers eligible for rehabilitation be allowed to work off the lime material provided them under the lime program.

We, your committee, submit the following resolutions for your consideration and recommend their adoption, and that a copy of these resolutions be forwarded to Washington officials by the State director of rural rehabilitation.

Whereas the spring planting season is upon us; and

Whereas in addition to date no provision has been made for providing farmers with cash seed loans through the F. C. A.; and Whereas the needs for seeds on Wisconsin farms is more acute than ever before due to successive years of drought:

Resolved, By representatives of drought counties assembled at Wausau, Wis., this 6th day of March 1935, that a fund of at least $2,000,000 be immediately made available for Wisconsin farmers for the purchase of seeds and that these funds be administered by the county drought-relief officials under the supervision of the State director of rural rehabilitation; and further be it

Resolved, That these funds be made available on a work-relief program. It is the belief of this body that the immediate granting of these funds will make available seeds for early planting thus to take advantage of our favorable spring moisture conditions so that Wisconsin farmers will be able to grow sufficient feed crops in 1935 to avoid necessity for future relief.

UNION CENTRAL LIFE INSURANCE CO.—ADDRESS BY SENATOR BULKLEY

Mr. GUFFEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD the address delivered by the senior Senator from Ohio [Mr. Bulkley] at the celebration of the opening of the Philadelphia office of the Union Central Life Insurance Co. of Cincinnati, on March 4, 1935.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

printed in the Record, as follows:

The Union Central Life Insurance Co. of Cincinnati is the largest financial institution in the State of Ohio. It is one of the great insurance companies of this country, and, indeed, one of the great insurance companies of the world. Ohioans are genuinely and rightly proud of it. It is officered and managed by people who have grown up with the business.

Philadelphia is the home office of life insurance companies which enjoy a national reputation and unquestioned confidence in their soundness and stability. It is clearly in the interest of insurance companies to have their risks diversified geographically, and it is to the interest of the insured to have available companies which are national in their scope. And so, just as many of us in Ohio are policyholders in life insurance companies having their head-quarters in Philadelphia, it is gratifying to find that our Ohio company is enjoying a splendid business in Philadelphia and finds it necessary to establish regular offices here. No doubt the new office now opening will be of a type in keeping with the dignity of the Union Central Life Insurance Co. and with the importance of its business in this community, and I am sure that all of us here present are glad to have the opportunity to join in this celebration and to extend best wishes for the success of the enterprise now inaugurated here.

Today marks the second anniversary of the inauguration of the Roosevelt administration. In view of this circumstance it seems proper to refer to the progress of the Government's program for economic recovery.

It is not my purpose in this reference to attempt an appraisal of the general recovery program. Nor is it my intention to enter upon any detailed discussion of the various measures and policies which together constitute the new deal.

It is to be hoped, however, that whatever recognition might be given at this time to the fact of the second anniversary of the Roosevelt inauguration will not be given undue partisan or political significance. If there is any one thing necessary at this moment it is that national policies affecting the general public welfare should be viewed objectively and dispassionately.

Two years ago today when President Roosevelt took office he faced an unprecedented business crisis. Banks were unable to meet the demands of their depositors; business was paralyzed; meet the demands of their depositors; business was paralyzed; public morale had broken down and drastic mass action, motivated by fear, was imminent. It was imperative that the President must act in the most courageous manner if the financial structure of the country was to be preserved.

There could be no doubt of the seriousness of the emergency, of the necessity for immediate and far-reaching action. The urgent necessity left no time for the careful consideration of measures, and the circumstances justified the Congress, during the extraordinary session which convened in March 1933, in following the President's recommendations without hesitation. It was well known that important steps were being taken without full consideration, but it was recognized that delays and unnecessary wrangling would be more damaging than the risk of error resulting from rapid action.

Whatever may be said now in praise or criticism of the various recovery policies of the Government, there is fairly general agreement that the courageous action of the President during the crisis and since has resulted in the restoration of public confidence in the and since has resulted in the restoration of public confidence in the basic integrity of our economic system.

There has likewise been reestablished in the public mind a wholesome faith in the capacity of the Government to function during a national emergency. Wide-spread confidence in the fundamental integrity and stability of our institutions has been the foundation upon which the improved economic structure has been erected during the past 2 years by the Roosevelt administration.

We are to be congratulated that we have passed through the period of panicky fear and that we may again deliberate concerning what ought to be done. It is no sign of weakness in our national administration that a Congress, still friendly to the President and still respecting his leadership, is reassuming its former deliberation in the discussion and shaping of legislative policies. It is rather a sign that the President has actually accomplished his purpose in restoring the public confidence which had been so hadly upset.

had been so badly upset.

The great economic disorder from which we have been attempting to extricate ourselves has resulted in uncounted losses of fortunes and savings, and in losses of homes and jobs. In our very efforts to restore order we have been obliged to curtail liberties which we had taken for granted, and to interfere drastically with what had come to be considered legitimate business practices. We succeeded in averting the complete ruin of our economic system, but in doing so we gave up many of our theories and illusions, we accepted a considerable change in our conception of the duties and functions of the Federal Government, and we incurred a considerable increase in our national debt. we incurred a considerable increase in our national debt.
We still have far to go to accomplish the restoration of social we still have far to go to accomplish the restoration of social order, and it is still too soon to attempt an appraisal of final results, but it may well turn out that we can face the future better by reason of the new ideas which have been forced upon us, and it may well be that the Government's financial cost in promoting recovery will not prove so disastrous as some are disposed to fear.

As some misgiving now exists concerning the national debt, and concerning the fact that it is today greater than ever before in our history, I want to give that subject some direct attention. It would be most unfortunate if, after so much progress has in our history, I want to give that subject some direct attention. It would be most unfortunate if, after so much progress has been made in restoring public confidence, there should be any diminution of that confidence caused by fear about the public debt. The amount of debt which a nation can safely carry is quite as much a question of psychology as of arithmetic. The faith of the public and of the world in governmental financial stability must depend not only upon the actual amount of the public debt in its relation to the ability of the government to pay, but also upon the simple question of whether the national budbut also upon the simple question of whether the national budget is likely in the future to be balanced so that the debt will be fixed and controlled, or whether the government is under such pressure that no reasonable limit can be fixed to the increase of the public debt.

In amount our national debt is larger than it has ever been and perhaps unusual alarm has attached to this fact because for several years there have been substantial deficits in the National Budget, and it still seems necessary for the Government to put out, in one way or another, sums that are considerably in excess of the

Since the very substance of national credit is confidence, is of vital importance that confidence should not be unjustly withdrawn from the administration in power, and if I speak now of the soundness of our finances under the present administration it is not with any purpose to disparage the performance of the pre-ceding administration, which of course had very serious difficulties to contend with.

Let us consider the gross amount of the national debt. We can draw definite encouragement from a comparison between the amount of our own national debt and that of the British Government, because British Government securities are unquestionably in good standing and command the faith of financial markets throughout the world. The British national debt, as of the beginning of the year 1935, was £8,144,000,000, or more than $39,000,000,000, and as of the same time our own gross national debt was $28,479,000,000. Those who are critical of our own Government's financial position contend that the British public debt is more comprehensive than our own, and that for a fair compariis more comprehensive than our own, and that for a fair comparison we must add to our national debt our State debts and part of our local indebtedness, because these have been incurred for purposes which in England would have been served by the National Government. In order to give full weight to that argument let us add to our national debt the total amount of all of our State, county, and municipal debt, which is reported by the National Industrial Conference Board to be $20,173,000,000. This gives a total United States public debt of $48,652,000,000. There is, however, in England some county indebtedness, though the local debt there is not as great as it is in this country. To be fair, however, £301,000,000 of local debt should be added to the British national debt for the purpose of comparison. Computing the pound at $4.80, the total British public debt, national and local, is $45,536,000,000 as compared with our own public debt of forty-eight billion six hundred and fifty-two millions. The British debt is being carried by a nation whose population is about 40 percent of our own. of our own.

A comparison of the national income of the two countries is important in determining ability to carry the debt. The national income of the United States for 1933 was $42,665,000,000 and the British national income for the same year has been estimated at £4,000,000,000 or about $19,200,000,000. It appears, therefore, that our national annual income even in a depression year was about seven-eighths of our total public debt, including not only the national debt but that of all the States, counties, and municipalities, while the British national income for the same year was substantially less than one-half of the British national year was substantially less than one-half of the British national debt.

If we turn to a comparison during a year of prosperity, say 1928, it appears that our national debt, which in this case does not include the debts of States, counties, and municipalities, is about one-half as much in proportion to national wealth as the debt of France or Italy, and less than one-fourth that of Great Britain. If the comparison be made in terms of national income for the year 1928, when our national income was more than double the amount stated for 1933, our debt is proportionately less than one-third that of Italy, less than one-fourth that of France and about one-seventh that of Great Britain; and these figures for Italy, France, and Great Britain are exclusive of war debts owed abroad.

It must be obvious from these comparisons that the total amount of our national indebtedness is not such as to cause alarm. It is urged, however, that British credit is good because the British budget is balanced, and as long as we continue to pay out large sums in excess of our revenues there is danger to our national credit. This brings us back to the other primary question of national credit—keeping expenditures within income.

The impact of the business depression commencing in 1929 was such as to disturb Government finances very seriously. The reduction of our national debt from the peak of its war level in 1919 had proceeded steadily for more than 11 years until the low point was reached on December 31, 1930, a little over 4 years ago. Since that time the net debt of the Government, as shown by Treasury statements, has increased by about $10,700,000,000. low point was reached on December 31, 1930, a little over 4 years ago. Since that time the net debt of the Government, as shown by Treasury statements, has increased by about $10,700,000,000. However, nearly half of this increase, or about five billion, took place during the last 2 years of the Hoover administration. Let me make clear again that it is not my purpose here to find fault with that administration, which, under distressful business conditions, suffered a drastic and unexpected shrinkage in public revenue. I am not here discussing whether that administration was in any way at fault. But in determining how far we may have faith in our present administration it is important to recognize that during the past 2 years, during which we have made the most extraordinary public outlays in the history of the Government, the net debt has been increased by five billion seven hundred million as compared with an increase of five billion from the low point of the national debt on December 31, 1930, to the beginning of the present administration, 2 years and 2 months later.

The conditions which caused the deficits and the increase of national debt during 1931 and 1932 made necessary the so-called "Economy Act", one of the first policies of the Roosevelt administration. Partly as a result of this act and partly through substantial increase in governmental revenues, the ordinary recurring expenditures of the Government were brought within the governmental income, and, during the 2 years of this administration, the Government has lived within its income so far as the ordinary expenses of Government are concerned.

nary expenses of Government are concerned.

Of course, a debt is a debt just the same whether it was incurred to pay a deficiency in ordinary operating expenses or whether it was incurred to make possible some extraordinary outlay; and it is unquestionably a fact that our national debt has been greatly increased and now stands at the highest point in history. But since we understand that the actual amount of our national indebtedness is not excessive in proportion to our national wealth and ability to pay, then if there be any cause for alarm, it must lie in the fact that our indebtedness is being rapidly increased. But surely an increase of debt incurred for extraordinary and non-recurring items is not so alarming as an increase of debt incurred for ordinary operating expenses.

If an individual during a period of 2 years failed to readingt

If an individual during a period of 2 years failed to readjust his expenditures to a drastic reduction in his income, and consequently greatly increased his indebtedness, he would begin to have trouble with his personal credit. If, during the following 2 years, he should increase his income and cut his personal expenses to an amount within that income, and yet continue to increase his indebtedness because of improvements to his home, and because of gifts and loans to distressed relatives he would, notwith-standing his increase in indebtedness, be able to make a statement which would inspire more confidence on the part of his creditors. That is the same distinction which must be made between the last 2 years of Government finances and the 2 years which preceded them.

We have already seen that during the early years of our business depression our national indebtedness was substantially increased by merely paying ordinary operating expenses of the Government, but in the last 2 years the increase in indebtedness has been due to quite different causes.

The Treasury reports for the last fiscal year, ending June 30, 1934, show that the excess of expenditures for all purposes over receipts amounted to $3,989,500,000 and that the gross public debt increased by $4,514,500,000. Yet it is doubtful whether during that fiscal year there would have been any deficit at all if Government bookkeeping were on the same basis as that represented by the practice of sound business concerns.

During that fiscal year the Government realized a profit, resulting from the reduction in the weight of the gold dollar, of more than $2,811,000,000. I am conscious, of course, of the many arguing from the reduction in the weight of the gold dollar, of more than $2,811,000,000. I am conscious, of course, of the many arguments as to whether this may properly be considered a profit, and whether it is possible to find a practicable way to use it to reduce the national debt. The fact, however, remains that that sum was actually acquired by the Treasury and is held in gold, and in every real sense is an asset of the United States Government. Two billion dollars of it has been segregated as a stabilization fund, and so put outside of the balances shown on the daily Treasury statements. The remaining $811,000,000 is treated as an increase in the balance of the general fund in Treasury and so is counted as a deduction from the gross debt in Treasury, and so is counted as a deduction from the gross debt in computing the net debt of the Government.

During the fiscal year ending June 30, 1934, the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, wholly owned by the United States Government, invested in preferred stock and capital notes of banks the sum of $720,000,000. During the same year the Public Works Administration, an arm of the Government, loaned over $70,000,000 to sum of $720,000,000. During the same year the Fublic Works Administration, an arm of the Government, loaned over $70,000,000 to railroads and seventy-eight and one-half millions to States and municipalities. All of these loans are reported to be well secured, and it is the intent that all should be repaid. After deducting investments made from repayments of funds invested by Government agencies in prior fiscal years, the net increase in assets acquired by these Government agencies, the new investment, was $638,000,000 for the fiscal year 1934.

In addition to these investments, such governmental agencies as Federal land banks, Federal intermediate credit banks, the Federal Farm Mortgage Corporation and banks for cooperatives, in which the Government has a substantial financial interest though not complete ownership, made very large advances to borrowers which were partly financed by the Government and partly by private funds. The Government's investment in these agencies was increased by $701,000,000 during the last fiscal year.

If we take the sum of $2,811,000,000 profit on gold devaluation, which was not considered in the Treasury statement of receipts and expenditures for the year 1934, and add to it the increase of $638,000,000 of net increase in loans made by wholly owned Government agencies and $701,000,000 increase in the Government's share in Government-supported agencies and $360,000,000 of public developed the contents of the country the country that retirements (over the country that retirements and $701,000,000 increase in the Government's share in Government-supported agencies and $360,000,000 of public developed the country that retirements are constituted to the country that t ernment agencies and $701,000,000 increase in the Government's share in Government-supported agencies and $360,000,000 of public-debt retirements (and this is fair, because this reduction of the public debt and these additional investments of public funds are all treated on the Treasury statement as expenditures), we have a total of $4,510,000,000 which, by any recognized system of business bookkeeping, would more than offset the reported excess of expenditures over receipts amounting to $3,989,000,000. If it be suggested that the advancements made by the R. F. C., P. W. A., and other Government agencies should, for the purpose of a proper balance sheet, be partially offset by a reserve for losses on these items, this might well be conceded. But there still remains a substantial margin over the reported deficit, without taking into consideration any value added to the Government's investment in public buildings and various kinds of public works.

into consideration any value added to the Government's investment in public buildings and various kinds of public works.

Obviously during the present fiscal year there will be no recurrence of profit on gold devaluation, but the net increase in the public debt is by no means all attributable to expense items, as there are still large sums being invested in repayable advances.

To sum up what has happened so far, the Federal Government, by unprecedented measures, has extricated the business of the country from a condition which threatened the general collapse of banks, financial institutions, railroads, and business in general, and which threatened the loss through foreclosure of an alarming proportion of all the farms and homes in the country. Large proportion of all the farms and homes in the country. Large numbers of foreclosures and of banking and business failures occurred, but it was possible to prevent a complete collapse of

Now, in round figures, the Government, through agencies which it has wholly or partially financed, has provided for the making of various kinds of loans to the amount of about seven and a half billion dollars. In the assets of these governmental lending agencies the United States has a proprietary interest with an actual investment value of nearly four and a half billion dollars. This amount, subject to such losses as may be incurred in the final liquidation of these accounts, plus $2,000,000,000 in gold, which has been transferred to the stabilization fund, or a total of some $6,500,000,000 of assets, subject, of course, to possible losses is has been transferred to the stabilization fund, or a total of some $6,500,000,000 of assets, subject, of course, to possible losses, is held by the Government as a partial offset against the $10,700,-000,000 increase in net debt during the past 4 years.

In all probability, the major part of the work has been done so far as the restoration of credit is concerned, and a relatively less amount of government help will hereafter be required for that

The unemployment problem has not been solved. Various forms of public works, set in motion for the primary purpose of providing employment, have cost large sums, as has the necessary direct relief of destitution. The end is not yet. Further large sums will have to be used for these purposes, with such wisdom as we can summon to the task. We may still differ as to whether large Government spending will aid or retard recovery, and many questions must be fought out concerning the methods and purposes of such spending

as may be determined upon.

But these problems can be faced with the confidence that our national debt is not now excessive in proportion to our ability to pay, and that up to this time the burden of it has not been unreasonably increased. Let us hope that the remaining problems of the depression will be faced, not only with confidence in our financial stability but also with thankful appreciation of the important accomplishments of the 2 years just passed, with patriotic disregard of political partisanship, and with a united purpose for the future.

AMERICA STILL LIVES-ADDRESS BY SENATOR SCHALL

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an address delivered by the junior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. Schall] before the Philadelphia Board of Trade on March 7, 1935, the address being entitled "America Still Lives."

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

The trip from the National Capital at Washington over to Philadelphia is like a trip "back home." The Government of the Constitution, or, rather, that part of the Government that is still American had in Philadelphia its cradle and its first homestead. In Philadelphia, July 4, 1776, the Declaration of Independence was drafted and adopted. Here sat the Continental Congress of the original Thirteen States.

In Philadelphia from May 12 to September 17, 1787, Washington presided over the Convention which drafted the Constitution in which the Government itself originated and derived its powers.

which the Government itself originated and derived its powers.

Had it not been for the unfortunate incident that a band of mutinous soldiers invaded the Hall of Congress while in session, demanding arrearages in pay—which was construed by southern Members as an insult to dignified statesmen—the Nation's capital seat would doubtless have remained in Philadelphia.

That gave South Carolina and other slave-holding States, who today have returned to power, the desired opportunity to oppose Philadelphia as the capital seat on the ground that the Quakers favored emancipation.

Philadelphia as the capital seat on the ground that the quarter favored emancipation.

So the capital seat was moved down to the Potomac, on the boundary of slave-holding territory, to the rural settlement called Conococheaque. Havre de Grace, famed today for its race track frequented by General Farley, was not so much in favor with the Virginians. So today I come from Conococheaque to visit the old homestead where America was born, the old birthplace and hearthstone from which was proclaimed to the world, on the first Wednesday in March 146 years ago, that immortal document which began with the words: "We, the people of the United States."

When I choose as the text of my remarks the slogan, "America with the words: "We, the people of the United States."

When I choose as the text of my remarks the slogan, "America still lives", I mean that the so-called "new deal", invented by the play-boy imitators of Hitler, Mussolini, and Stalin, is already, after only 2 years of bold experiment, beginning to crack, and soon will be numbered with jazz music, nudism, cholera epidemic, earthquake tremor, grasshopper plague, and passing fads, as one of those irrational experiences to which good countries are subject and in their march of progress are glad to forget.

Historians find that the world march of progress has gone forward in cycles interrupted by brief periods of relapse to a less civilized stage. The present dictatorship fad, which seems to afflict two-thirds of the countries of the world, is one of the oldest. Fortunately, it is one of the shortest lived. No attempted dictatorship in world history has yet stuck. The history of dictatorship is a history of universal failure. No man yet has been able to convince his subjects that he is God, or that his mercenaries are angels. His tenure in office lasts no longer than the subsidy with which he buys support. And the dictator and his subsidy are soon parted.

The astounding feature of the new deal is the outstanding fallow, upon which it is besed.

The astounding feature of the new deal is the outstanding fallacy upon which it is based.

Both the N. R. A. and the A. A. A. are based on the theory that the less there is produced, the more there is to share.

They limit production and tell you there is more to divide. When they reduce production, they reduce the need of workers in the fields of production, and thereby increase unemployment. When they cut down the mill output, the mine output, and the farm output, they cut down the volume of goods in domestic commerce, they cut down the supply of necessaries for the homes, they cut down the work available to wage earners in all productive enterprises, and they employ the public funds raised by taxative enterprises, and they employ the public funds raised by taxation of productive industry in order to destroy the source of income for productive industry.

The combined effect of the subsidized A. A. A. and drought last year was to cut down the country's food supply 40 percent. And the "brain trust" tells you that by food destruction the country is better fed.

President Wannamaker, of the Southern Cotton Growers' Association, tells us that the effect of the A. A. A. in cutting down cotton acreage has been to place 40 percent of the cotton workers on public charity.

Yet Secretary Wallace persists in the policy of squandering $200,000,000 of public funds to further keep down the production of American cotton, and thereby stimulate the cotton production of Egypt, India, China, Brazil, and the Indies, which have increased their cotton production to take the place of lost production in the United States United States

Lost production means lost income and increased debt and taxes. Thus the foundation of the new-deal structure is: (1) Reduce production and income; (2) increase the debt and taxes.

In other words, the poorer we are, the more wealth we have and the more we have to divide. The less business there is, the busier we are in singing hallelujahs to the "brainless trust." The net results of this irrational and irresponsible raw deal to date are:

1. An increase of 1,000,000 in the number of unemployed since July 1933, when the N. R. A. and the A. A. A. were first imposed upon the country.

2. An increase of the public debt from $16,000,000,000 in 1932 to $35,000,000,000 in 1935.

An increase of the interest burden on the public debt until the yearly interest payment exceeds total collections of income-tax

The withdrawal of $3,000,000,000 of member-bank loans from industry since 1932, and its transfer to investment in Government tax-exempt bonds. 5. Reduction in volume of sales of industrial, railway,

5. Reduction in volume of sales of industrial, railway, and utility shares in 1934 to one-half the volume in 1933, and a reduction of 100,000,000 shares from the stock exchange sales of 1932. In Tuesday morning's papers I noted that Senator Bulkley, of Ohio, told a Philadelphia gathering of business men that our present mountain of public debt was "nothing to worry about"—that it was not "beyond our ability to pay", and that it was a "sign of public confidence" in President Roosevelt.

But, aside from politics, what would Senator Bulkley as a business man think of a corporation whose annual interest bill alone exceeded its principal source of income? Both last year and the year before, and again in the current fiscal year 1935 to date, the interest on that public debt was greater than our total revenue collections from income taxes, both corporate and individual. Is that nothing to worry about?

What would the Senator say about the financial ability of a railroad company, if total receipts from freight revenue were not enough to meet the interest on bonds and mortgages? I am afraid he would say that the road needed a receiver.

afraid he would say that the road needed a receiver.

This mounting public debt and monthly increasing deficit have reached the stature of a leaning tower of Pisa—checking business expansion, paralyzing industrial activity, destroying investment in railway, utility, and industrial securities, and driving that investment abroad to build up British and Canadian industries, employment, and balanced public budgets.

This new "baby bond" campaign initiated by the President is an admission in itself that he has reached the limit of unloading Government bonds on the banks and large investors, and now depends upon hullabaloo to sell a $25 bond to any small savings depositor who has $18.75 to spare.

depends upon hullabaloo to sell a $25 bond to any small savings depositor who has $18.75 to spare.

That is a public admission—that in time of peace, after 2 years of "bold experiments", the new-deal monkey business in flat currency and flat-bond inflation has already destroyed public confidence to the point that the Federal Government, even after buying $1,000,000,000 worth of preferred shares in 6,700 member banks, can no longer club the banks into buying its flat bonds, and so is driven to the desperate expedient of trying to unload "baby bonds" on the "lambs" by a knock-down bargain-sale price of $25 worth for $18.75

It is time we had an N. R. A. code to restrain the Government from cutthroat competition in bond-price cutting, undermining the whole bond structure, and threatening an ultimate bond-market panic of the lambs. It is an admission that public confidence in Government finance is at a discount of $25 to $18.75, or at 25-per-

Government finance is at a discount of $25 to $18.75, or at 25-percent discount below par. Does not that campaign make Canadian or British bonds a safer investment? At least, they are redeemable in gold, which ours are not.

Even a brainless trust should have sense enough to see that the first test of the value of a government bond is the ability of that government to balance its budget. American investors in foreign government bonds in late years have learned that much at an expenditure of $15,000,000,000.

A government that has produced an accumulation of Treasury deficits amounting to $11,000,000,000 in 2 years of bold experiments at throwing monkey wrenches, and is now peddling baby bonds at a marked-down sale of 25 percent, may inspire emotion—but not the emotion of public confidence.

Fear and uncertainty, doubt as to what "bold experiment" may break loose overnight, the growing public conviction that no rational or responsible plan can emanate from a new-deal brain are not the cornerstones of the greatness that the world knows as "America."

The most sinister of the new-deal bold experiments is

The most sinister of the new-deal bold experiments is the assault upon article I of the Constitution—the chief power of Congress, the foremost legislative power of every parliamentary body in history, the tax power, the tariff-making power, the control of appropriations, and the guardianship of the public treasury from the exactions of the executive—be he president, king, or dictator.

This is the foremost power of government. It is the principal power for which the legislative branch of government was created. It is the main power which distinguishes a republic, on the one hand, from an absolute monarchy or dictatorship on the other.

That was the crowning issue of Magna Carta back in the thirteenth century—there at Runnymede Marsh on the Thames, June 15, 1215. The farmer barons were tired of the debts and taxes imposed by the charming and irresponsible King John, and took him out to that island in the Thames and made him sign that great charter, providing that—"No scutage or aid shall be imposed in our realm save by the common council of the realm."

That was the issue, again, of 1776 when George III undertook to levy stamp taxes and tea taxes upon the Thirteen Colonies without the consent of the colonial assemblies.

But all of you here tonight who are interested in a protective tariff for your industries—the protective tariff which originated in the Pennsylvania Legislature in the year 1785, or 4 years before the Constitution was proclaimed—know full well that the tariff-making power, one of the chief factors of the Government revenue power, has been severed from Congress and seized by the White House and is now handled in a star chamber.

You also know that in that star chamber you have no voice through your elected representatives, although your foreign competitors not only have a voice but have a seat and a vote in that star chamber. Ministers of foreign governments sit in that star chamber and join the President and his Cabinet in making tariffs against the interests of your industries—and you are not even against the interests of your industries—and you are not even given a hearing.

That provision of Magna Carta has been changed by the new deal to read:

"No scutage or aid shall be imposed in our realm save by the star chamber of the President and foreign emissaries."

Then they sign a treaty fixing your tariff duties, and that treaty, unlike other treaties, is not even submitted to the Senate for ratification under the treaty-making power of the Government which makes the Senate the coequal of the President in treaty

In this new Belgian tariff treaty the place of the United States Senate seems to have been taken by the Belgian Minister of Leopold III, and they decided that what you needed for the relief of your unemployed was a reduction of duties in about 40 industries and 76 articles.

You get a reduction of 50 percent in duties against Belgian imports of shotguns, prayer books, chalk, sand, motion-picture films, photographic plates, naphthalene, and cobalt sulphate. You get a reduction of 33 percent in duties on plate glass, sodium phosphate, flax, certain woven cloths, and laces. You get reductions of 25 to 30 percent on steel products, cement, woven fabrics, asbestos shingles, flavo industries. flavoring extracts, and a dozen more products of your gles, flavoring extracts, and a dozen more products of your industries.

You get 42 percent reduction of duty on certain rugs and 46 percent reduction on imports of aluminum sulphate and sundry knocked-down protection on 75 specified articles.

And in return Belgium agrees to take from the United States a large amount of lard and pork products. Since Mr. Roosevelt and Mr. Wallace destroyed 6,000,000 of our hogs we are now importing pork and pork products from foreign countries.

The country's unemployed, as estimated by the American Federation of Labor, stood at over 11,000,000 last month, or 1,000,000 more than when the new deal swung into full action in July 1933. The new deal found that you were suffering from "cuthroat competition" at home, and now invokes as a remedy 76 doses of cutthroat competition from Belgium, and Dr. Leopold III in consultation with Dr. Roosevelt II have left you your prescription for unemployment. All you needed was competition from Belgium to insure your industrial recovery.

To forestall a relapse in 1936 the President has asked that "$4,000,000,000 in one sum, subject to the allocation of the Executive", be appropriated to him to guard against the contingency which he forecasts as the "emergency of 1936." That means that Congress shall abdicate its constitutional duty of allocating the appropriations and shall surrender that power to him as both the allocator and the candidate for reelection in 1936.

There are estimated to be 40,000,000 voters in the United States. So the lump sum of $4,000,000,000 would amount to an average of $100 per voter, which he estimates would tide him over his "emergency."

One of the most astounding developments of the new deal emergency.

One of the most astounding developments of the new deal is that movement, begun by Cabinet officials and bureau chiefs in the fall of 1933, of incorporating themselves under Delaware Moding-company charters, pursuant to Executive orders from the White House, with the apparent purpose of making their temporary "emergency" powers permanent.

Under the so-called "emergency" acts of Congress the dictatorial powers usually terminate in 2 years. The Delaware charters torial powers usually terminate in 2 years. The Delaware charters read:

"This Corporation shall have perpetual existence."

Then these Federal officials proceed to expand and multiply their powers until they give themselves unlimited powers of Government ownership and operation of every known and unknown branch of industrial, utility, transportation, trade, and financial enterprise—including manufactures, telephone, electric power, building, all branches of transportation, and acquisition of real and personal property, borrowing and loaning money "without restriction or limit as to amount", dealing in stocks and bonds, and locating offices not only in all parts of the United States, but in our colonies and in any and all foreign lands.

In short, they affect to give themselves, over articles of incorporation signed by Cabinet officials before District of Columbia notaries, all the powers exercised or dreamed of by the Soviet notaries, all the powers exercised or dreamed of by the Soviet Executive Council in Moscow.

They provide for acquisition by purchase or "otherwise." There being no money in the Treasury, and somewhat strained credit in face of growing deficits, our new Soviets perchance may acquire by methods described as "otherwise", after the style of Russia.

Therefore, if there are any railway presidents here tonight, or directors and officers of telephone, gas, and electric companies, permit me to introduce to you as chairman of the Federal Board of such utilities, the Honorable Harold L. Ickes, who, while incidentally Secretary of Interior, a Washington Federal portfolio, has a corporate office at 100 West Tenth Street, city of Wilmington, county of Newcastle, Del., where he is permanently engaged in every branch not only of the transportation and utility industries, but also in all branches of finance and most branches of manufacture—as chairman of the Board of the Public Works Emergency Housing Corporation which since November 1933 has had a charter Housing Corporation, which since November 1933 has had a charter reading: "This Corporation has perpetual existence."

Among the branches of manufacture in which this Federal Corporation is chartered to engage are several industries that particularly interest Pennsylvania and the city of Philadelphia, such as:

"Building materials and other products of every kind, nature, or description, including without limitation iron, steel, granite, stone, brick cement, wood, paper, and plaster."

description, including without limitation from, steel, grainte, stone, brick, cement, wood, paper, and plaster."

I understand that all of these are substantial industries of the Keystone State. So, besides your new competition from Belgium through lowered tariff duties, you have in prospect a still greater competition from Federal corporations, backed by all the resources and all the executive powers of the Federal Government—right screes the river in Delaware.

across the river in Delaware.

Six of these Delaware Federal charters have now been incorporated by Government Cabinet members and bureau chiefs, and they embrace every branch of American economic enterprises—the full economic armament of Soviet Russia. If they should by any desperate venture become established—in clear violation of the Constitution—they would virtually convert the United States of America of the fathers into the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics of European communism.

These charters filed in Wilmington bear across their face the notation, "Do not publish." But I have secured photostatic copies of them, published them in the Congressional Record of February of them, published them in the Congressional Record of February 6, 1935, and shall gladly cooperate with you in the exposure of this, the most amazing flasco of the present new-deal era that afflicts much of the civilized world. Undoubtedly the fact that I had placed these charters in the Record and proposed an amendment that would eliminate them had its effect in the administration's move to recommit the bill, for they well knew that in the discussion of the amendment that they would be unable to explain the four of the amendment that they would be unable to explain the four billion lump.

The 5th of March the committee returned the relief bill, designating the allotments as follows: $800,000,000 for rural rehabilition, $450,000,000 for housing for factories, $300,000,000 for professional and clerical projects—totaling $1,550,000,000—all of which can be made to fit in nicely with the theory of the Delaware corporations. The total amount of appropriation is still $4,000,000,000. Subtracting the above $1,550,000,000 leaves $2,450,000,000, of which 200 percent is to be allotted without hindrance or let as the Presi-20 percent is to be allotted without hindrance or let as the President sees fit, and which, if you add to the above $1,550,000,000 is $2,040,000,000 that the President will have to promote his Delaware corporations through which he hopes to transform the United States of America into a U. S. S. of Russia.

States of America into a U. S. S. of Russia.

Complete communism of the United States and destruction of all private industry will come with the passage of the $5,000,-000,000 relief bill now before Congress, if passed, giving the lump sum of $2,040,000,000 to the President to be used at his own sweet will. This money, to be used to finance six Delaware corporations organized by Mr. Roosevelt's bureaucrats, will put in operation the new-deal scheme to control the United States. Congress will be powerless to act because it has no jurisdiction over Delaware corporations. This is the reason these corporations have been organized. been organized.

The six Roosevelt Delaware corporations are authorized to oper ate every line of industry from growing oysters to operating rail-roads, telephone and telegraph lines, packing meat, and manufac-turing every article of merchandise at present used in our com-merce. And the lives of these corporations have been made perpetual."

Acting on legislation granted him for use during the emergency, Arting on legislation granted him for use during the emergency, Mr. Roosevelt is deliberately attempting to seize control of all industry in the United States and set himself up as our dictator. Confronted by the existence of these corporations which were secretly organized and marked "do not publish", Mr. Roosevelt hastily withdrew the bill from the Senate. This was the answer to a demand made on the administration to explain what it meant by this externate to recommend the temperature of the secretary of the secretary that the secretary is the secretary that the secretary is the secretary that the secretary is the secretary of the secretary that the secretary is the secretary of the secretary in the secretary is the secretary of the secretary of the secretary is the secretary of the secretary to a demand made on the administration to explain what it meant by this attempt to usurp the temporary power granted it. There has been no answer to this question and there will be no reply because the Roosevelt administration has been caught with the goods. Its attempt to turn this Government into a communistic state while it pretends to stand for individual capital and individual liberty has been exposed. The people now know the truth concerning Mr. Roosevelt's schemes and if he is permitted to carry them out then they have no one but themselves to blame.

These corporations are to operate all industries not destroyed by his reciprocal tariff treaties, which are now in the course of negotiation. At the present moment Mr. Roosevelt has made an alleged tariff deal with Belgium to turn the cement market of already he has turned our former cotton-raising industry over to Brazil. Other industries of the United States are to be destroyed by his communistic new deal, and what industry is permitted to function in this country will be taken over by these six Delaware corporations. ware corporations.

Here is the Roosevelt program in a nutshell. This is what we gave ourselves at the last election. Our only hope to rescue the United States lies in an enlightenment of the people which will force their Members in Congress to protect this Nation despite the coercion and threats hurled at them by the Roosevelt admin-

The issue of the hour is "America."
Shall it rise and go forward in the march of liberty and justice, of progress and prosperity, as in the past 144 years up to March 4, 1933?

Shall America remain the land of the free? Or shall it recoil under a wave of dictatorship and debt, of wild financial orgy and under a wave of dictatorship and debt, of wild financial orgy and tax burdens, and relapse into that semibarbaric state which we see here and there abroad?

America still lives after 2 years of disastrous administration, wellnigh approaching the boundaries of a crime wave in depressing industry and mounting debt and unemployment.

Lincoln at Gettysburg, 72 years ago, raised the problem whether government of the people, by the people, and for the people shall perish from the earth. We solved that problem in the good old American way. And that way—the way of liberty and union—is before us still in the contest of 1936. The American way is to do by ballots what Hitler and Stalin would do by bullets. America by ballots what Hitler and Stalin would do by bullets. America still lives.

WORK OR DOLES-WISCONSIN'S ANSWER

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President, last Friday night the able Governor of Wisconsin, Hon. Philip F. La Follette, speaking by radio from the executive office at the State Capitol, in Madison, Wis., on the subject of "Work or Doles", delivered an unusually forceful and constructive address. I ask unanimous consent to have his remarks printed in the Con-GRESSIONAL RECORD

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Tonight I shall talk with you about Wisconsin, its problems and its future.

The Legislature of Wisconsin has provided the State's share for ne cost of relief for 1935. We have thus provided for the immediate problem of distress.

We are now in a position to take stock and decide on the course we shall pursue in the future. Shall we continue the same general policies, or has the time come for a fundamental

During the past 5 years we have adopted many humane and desirable proposals. But the fact remains that we have all been following one basic policy. We have been waiting for the depression to end and for prosperity to return. As we have waited, we have supported an increasing part of our human and natural resources in idleness. We have done so in the hope that something would restore these recourses to useful work.

But if we do not work, we do not produce. Unemployment—unemployment of men, of factories, of machines, of land, of money—has drastically reduced our total income. We have produced less, and we have less to go around.

We have been humane about it. We have paid doles to these unemployed people, factories, machines, land, and money. Our income has been reduced, but we have had to pay more and more out of that reduced income to support all this unemployment. At the end of each year, the citizen, as well as his Government, has had to reduce his expenses in order to provide the cost of doles. doles.

Billions of dollars have been spent, but of these billions practically nothing has been spent to create more wealth. The money has been spent to enable those in distress to exist until better times might come. But better times have not come. It is true that some individuals and corporations had larger incomes last year than the year before. But the total of all our incomes, both in this State and in the Nation, is scarcely half of what it was in

This is an inevitable result. We have not spent money to create new wealth. We have spent billions to support human and material unemployment.

Unless something unforeseen happens, a continuation of this course will produce the same result next year, only in a more aggravated form. If we go on reducing wealth, we shall be sharing poverty and not wealth in America.

The time has come for a fundamental change. From now on our objective must be the production of wealth and not its reduction. The principal business of government must be seeking ways and means of increasing the total income of all of us, and securing a fair distribution of that income among all of us.

I propose that we in Wisconsin, so far as it lies within our power, shall begin and begin now to build new and greater wealth for all our people.

How are we to do it? It must come through the leadership of How are we to do it? It must come through the leadership of government. It is a big task, this, of intelligently organizing and using these vast human and material resources. We cannot do it as a disorganized mob. We cannot follow the reactionary policy of "everybody for himself and the devil take the hindmost." We must have intelligent leadership and united action.

When the Legislature of Wisconsin has passed the State budget bill, I shall submit in detail two plans: One to balance the State budget by following this policy of destructive reduction; the other, which I shall favor and fight for, to balance our State budget and balance your budget out of the increased wealth we must and can create if we all go back to work.

I propose, first, that for the old, the young, and the sick we shall provide as generously as our circumstances will permit. Secondly, for all the rest of us, that we shall go back to work—back to earning our own livings—back to work, increasing our own individual incomes, and thereby increasing the income of the whole community.

We in Wisconsin not only believe, we know, there is plenty of work for the people of this State. We have completed a survey of Wisconsin that reaches into the problems of every community in the State and is the result of 5 years of detailed study. This survey is, no doubt, typical not only of Wisconsin but of every other community and State. It does not include all the work that could be done, but it does answer once and for all those reactionaries who claim we have no work for the unemployed.

Here are some of the kinds of work that are waiting to be done: First. Conserving our national resources; preventing our top-soil from running off into the Mississippi River through soil erosion; improving the fertility of our good farm lands and the quality of our livestock to increase the farmer's net income; restocking our forests and streams and lakes with fish and game and building We in Wisconsin not only believe, we know, there is plenty of forests and streams and lakes with fish and game and building back our timber resources. If we were to do all of this work at once, it would keep 100,000 men busy for 2 years.

Second. Repairing our farm and city homes—not building new homes, but simply putting them in a decent state of repair—putting shingles on the roof where the roof leaks, planks in the barn floor where they have rotted, stone and cement into crumbling foundations, paint on bare walls. This kind of work is not waste. Instead, it prevents wastage. This task alone of repairing our homes, if it were done all at once, would keep 100,000 men at work till time for 2 years.

Third. Bringing the basic modern conveniences to the homes on the farm and in the city; not luxuries, but giving our people the minimum conveniences needed for healthy, decent homes in which to rear our families

The work of modernizing and repairing our city homes alone, if done at one time, would require the services for a solid year at full time of 15,000 bricklayers, 30,000 carpenters, 8,000 plasterers, 12,000 sheet-metal workers, 25,000 painters, 15,000 plumbers, 3,000 electricians, 15,000 roofers, 40,000 semiskilled laborers, and 14,000 common laborers

Fourth, work in repairing and constructing our streets and highways, worn-out water, sewage, and other utility systems in our cities; work in electrifying the farm and the city; work in building better education. These are some of the kinds of work to be ing better education. These are some of the kinds of work to be done in Wisconsin.

This program will cost money. But it can be financed through the joint efforts of the Federal, State, and local governments. Finance is a complicated subject. I do not have the time to present the details tonight. The detailed plan will be presented to our legislature. The first year it will take more money than to keep people on the dole. But here is the essential difference: When we support people in idleness, we get nothing back. When we pay people for work—either for the Government or in private employment—we get something in return for our money. What we get in return will be large or small, depending on whether the work is wise or foolish. It is like planting crops: If we plant good seed, in fertile soil, and have a good season, the harvest gives us back far more than we plant. If we do no planting, we get no crop. "As we sow, so shall we reap."

Such a program will produce results not only for those directly

Such a program will produce results not only for those directly

Such a program will produce results not only for those directly employed but will produce orders for lumber, paint, shingles, glass, iron, steel, copper, cement. It will put money into the pockets of men and women who need the goods that the store-keeper has on his shelf, but which he cannot sell.

Such a program will cost money, but if the money is wisely spent it will, like seed grain, increase our total wealth. It will be done with the united support of the Federal, State, and local governments. This is why Wisconsin, like every other State, is deeply interested in the President's work program now before Congress. That program is a real step in the right direction—toward restoring the self-respect and the confidence of men and women in themselves. themselves

One hundred and fifty years ago America was the land of opportunity. Every boy and girl grew to maturity under the inspiring assurance of a real chance in life. America did not pamper people, but did give them a real opportunity to run the race of life on their own feet. This is what we must have again. That is what we shall own feet. This is what we must have again. That is what we shall have again when we go back to work.

A work program must be large enough to enable the Government to supply work for every able-bodied person that wants it. We must wipe out this distinction between those on relief and those off relief. Everybody who is capable and willing must have a chance to work. In this way alone can we restore self-respect and our own confidence in our ability to earn our own living.

A just criticism of the pending program is not that it is too large, but that it is too small. I do not dispute that $4,000,000,000 is a lot of money. But let us not forget what has been spent and, above all, what we have lost. In the past 5 years this country has lost $200,000,000,000,000 in income. We have lost enough through idleness to buy the whole of the United States lock, stock, and barrel. Any program that will enable us to stop that waste will be cheap at any price.

This program will take time. We cannot build back in a moment the loss and the destruction of years. I do not underestimate its difficulties. I know that in carrying it out we shall run head-on into powerful vested interests. But it is either a continued program of destruction or a new program of construction. So far as I am concerned, whatever influence, energy, and vitality I have will be given to this constructive program. I cannot do it alone. I want and need your help. Working together we must and will carry this program into action.

WORK-RELIEF PROGRAM

The Senate resumed the consideration of the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 117) making appropriations for relief purposes.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, when the Senate adjourned on Friday last, I was engaged in explaining as best I could the various allocations of funds and the purposes for which they were to be used. I think in the course of my explanation I had reached the amendment in the last line on page 3 proposing to strike out the words:

The specific powers hereinafter vested in the President shall not e construed as limiting the general powers and discretion vested in him by this section.

The committee unanimously agreed to strike out those words, as they might be misinterpreted to mean that the President could do things that were not authorized by the act.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President-

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Virginia yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. GLASS. I yield.

Mr. McNARY. I am always deeply interested in what the Senator from Virginia has to say. I am just wondering what amendment he is now discussing?

Mr. GLASS. On last Friday I had reached the amendment, beginning with the last line on page 3, striking out all the words after the word "resolution" to the end of the sentence on page 4, in line 2, and I was stating to the Senate that the committee unanimously agreed on striking out those words because of the suggestion that they might be misinterpreted into authorizing the President to do something which he was not authorized by the joint resolution to do.

The next amendment is on page 4, in the italicized words, reading as follows:

Funds made available by this joint resolution may be used, in the discretion of the President, for the purpose of making loans to finance, in whole or in part, the purchase of farm lands and necessary equipment by farmers, farm tenants, croppers, or farm laborers. Such loans shall be made on such terms as the President shall prescribe and shall be repaid in equal annual installments, or in such other manner as the President may determine.

It will be recalled that that amendment to the joint resolution was adopted by the Senate when the measure was previously under consideration.

The next amendment is in line 12, on page 4, inserting the word "only", so as to confine the expenditures under the joint resolution only to the United States, its Territories, and possessions. That also was agreed to by the Senate

The next amendment is on page 6, lines 2 and 3, striking out the words " and, without regard to the Classification Act of 1923, as amended" and inserting the word "and."

That amendment also was previously agreed to by the

All of sections 4 and 5 in the original joint resolution were stricken out, beginning on line 5, page 6, and continuing to line 12, on page 7. That amendment likewise was previously agreed to by the Senate.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield, or does he prefer to speak uninterruptedly?

Mr. GLASS. Oh, no; I yield if the Senator desires to ask a question.

Mr. COSTIGAN. May I ask the Chairman of the Appropriations Committee what the committee's purposes were in striking out sections 4 and 5 of the House text?

Mr. GLASS. The committee thought those sections contained authorizations which were untenable and unwise, such as making grants and loans to individuals in needy circumstances. In fact, the committee was utterly opposed to all the provisions in section 4.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Referring to the word which the Senator has himself mentioned, the word "loans", apparently stricken out of subdivision (b) of section 5, on page 7, may I ask whether the effect of such a deletion would be to prevent the President continuing loans made by the Public Works Administrator in the event the Public Works Administration should terminate, as originally contemplated, perhaps, by Congress, 2 or 3 months hence?

Mr. GLASS. The committee did not think so, and evidently the Senate did not think so, because the Senate on a previous occasion agreed to the committee's alteration of the joint resolution in that respect.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Was any legal opinion obtained as to the significance of the omission of the word "loans"?

Mr. GLASS. No; there was not, because no member of the committee apparently had any doubt about the advisability of striking it out and no member of the committee entertained the idea that it would interfere with publicworks loans.

Mr. COSTIGAN. I do not wish to detain the Senator longer than a moment, but with the modification of the opening clause so as to limit appropriations to "relief and work relief". and with the omission of the word "loans" in the clause last mentioned, after conference with some Government attorneys closely associated with the interpretation of this measure and similar acts, I have been led to believe that one effect of the omission, coupled with the termination of the P. W. A., would be to prevent the continuation of loans for self-liquidating projects already started by the Public Works Administration; for example, for the further construction or any construction, in conjunction with States or municipalities, of such public works as municipal electric light and power plants. I merely use one illustration of possible effects and wish to discuss it later if the Senator prefers to continue his discussion now.

Mr. GLASS. I am simply explaining the joint resolution. Mr. COSTIGAN. Very well.

Mr. GLASS. The next amendment is the insertion of a new section 4 incorporating the words of subsection (c) of section 5, which were stricken out, with the omission of the single word "maintain." I explained to the Senate on a previous occasion that the paragraph was reinserted as section 4 upon the motion of the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. Frazier].

The next change is to reduce the fine penalty from $5,000 to $1,000 for the willful violation of any rule or regulation the President may issue.

The next provision is the particularly controverted provision involving what is known as the "McCarran amendment", and is the substitute adopted by the committee, on motion of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. Russell], as a substitute for the so-called "McCarran amendment."

Section 7 explains itself, I think, as well as I or anybody else can explain it. It reads:

Wherever practicable in the carrying out of the provisions of this joint resolution, full advantage shall be taken of the facilities of private enterprise.

Section 8 is an entirely new provision which was not at first passed upon by the Committee on Appropriations and has not previously been considered by the Senate. It was embodied in the joint resolution upon its recommittal, because of the very earnest presentation of the matter by the master plumbers of the country. It reads:

On all building construction work or projects undertaken under and by virtue of the authority-granted in this joint resolution, all mechanical sanitary work, which in the interest of public health is ordinarily regulated or controlled by law, shall be let separately and by contract, and awarded to the lowest qualified bidder.

Section 9, heretofore passed upon by the Senate and adopted, relates to the penalty of fine and imprisonment for the willful violation of any provisions of the law.

Section 10 is the section offered by the Senator from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN] and approved by the committee. It reads:

Federal public roads projects, rivers and harbors projects, reclamation projects, and public buildings projects undertaken pursuant to the provisions of this joint resolution shall be carried out under the direction of the respective permanent Government departments or agencies having jurisdiction of such projects, and the performance of all contracts in connection with such projects shall be subject to the supervision and control of such departments or agencies.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Virginia yield at that point?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Virginia yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. GLASS. I yield.

Mr. COUZENS. I wonder if by any implication there can be gotten from that language the understanding that the work is to be done under the contract system, or is it to be done by the day-labor system?

Mr. GLASS. My information is that work let by the departments is required to be done under contract provisions and let to the lowest responsible bidder.

Mr. COUZENS. That is the Senator's interpretation of this particular provision?

Mr. GLASS. That is my interpretation of it. If the Senator from Arizona [Mr. Hayden] were here he could more exactly describe the purposes of the provision. However, he is not present at the moment. That is my interpretation of the provision.

The other two amendments are mere changes of the numbers of sections.

I ask unanimous consent that the committee amendments may be first considered.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

The clerk will read the joint resolution.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to read the joint resolution. The first amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was in section 1, page 1, line 3, after the words "that in order to", to strike out "protect and to promote the general welfare, by (1) providing relief from the hardships attributable to wide-spread unemployment and conditions resulting therefrom, (2) relieving economic maladjustments, (3) alleviating distress, and/or (4) improving living and working conditions", and insert "provide relief and work relief", so as to read:

That in order to provide relief and work relief, there is hereby appropriated—

And so forth.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I intend to support this amendment; and in order to save the time of the Senator I wish to have my remarks considered as supporting also the amendment which begins in line 5 on page 3 of the joint resolution and continues to and includes line 25. That is to say, the two amendments involve, first, the striking out of the broad clauses which originally appeared under the general term "promote the general welfare", and, second, the division of uses from general into specific uses.

Mr. President, as I conceive the situation, when the joint resolution originally came from the committee, the Senate was called upon to do something which it had never done before in the history of America. It was called upon to make two unconditional grants to the President of the United States.

First was the grant of a large sum of money. As the joint resolution then stood, there was no condition whatever attached to the grant. There was no specification of any use to be made of the grant. In other words, it was the first time in our history that America had gone back through 5 or 6 centuries and undertaken to give to the President of the United States a kingly power which had been wrested from the Kings of England at the sacrifice of blood of subjects and of Kings.

Second. So far as I have been able to discover by quite diligent study, it was the first time in our history that Congress undertook to give to the President the power of legislation under the general-welfare clause of the Constitution.

Therefore, the situation presented a crisis because of which every honorable effort should be made to stop, if possible, the progress of the joint resolution as it then stood. A great principle was at stake—the great principle of a dominant duty by Congress to the people of the United States. Congress then was face to face with a choice—whether it would obey the command of the people of the United States, made to it, that it should itself perform, and should not delegate, primary powers which raised dominant duties; or whether it would depart entirely from its obligations to the people of this country, and turn over outright an unconditional grant of a huge sum of money and an unconditional grant of the power of making laws. To be sure, that was attempted to be covered by the welfare clause.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?
The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Vermont yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. AUSTIN. Certainly.

Mr. ADAMS. During the discussion of that matter before the committee, the question was asked of the draftsman of the joint resolution whether or not he was relying upon the general-welfare clause for the authority, and the statement was rather specifically made that he was not. The question was asked whether or not Mr. Hester, the attorney who really drafted the joint resolution, was familiar with the decisions which, while they did not actually so hold, left a rather clear legal implication that the two general-welfare clauses in the Constitution were limitations rather than grants. Mr. Hester, the attorney, said that the generalwelfare phrase in the joint resolution had to be construed in connection with the limitations under subsections 1, 2, 3, and 4, which followed. That is, I did not understand from those who appeared before the committee that they were relying upon the general-welfare clause; and I may say to the Senator that pages 41 and 42 of the hearings of the committee point that out.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from Colorado for that information, and I am very glad to find that that position was taken. I have felt that the matter did not need a lengthy debate; but I did wish to have the Record show that by three well-considered cases the general-welfare clause in the preamble of the Constitution has been held not to give any authority or power for legislation, and by three other and different well-considered cases the general-welfare clause found in article I, section 8, clause 1, of the Constitution has also been held not to give substantive power but, on the contrary, to be a limiting clause applying directly to the power of taxation.

Therefore, at the time when previously we considered the joint resolution and it was recommitted to the committee, I felt that the welfare clause, which had all the appearance of being the justification for the proposed legislation, really gave no authority and lent no force to it; and that it ought to be eliminated from the joint resolution, because of the danger that was inherent in the use of the welfare clause as a basis of legislation, as a justification for the Senate, for example, turning over to any person or any bureau or any department of Government the lawmaking power under the claim that a policy had been declared—namely, the policy of the general welfare.

I do not care to say anything more about that phase of the matter. That was one of the conditions which confronted the Senate just before the joint resolution was recommitted to the Committee on Appropriations.

.The other phase I have alluded to briefly, and that is that there was a grant of a huge sum of money without any specification of uses to be made of it.

What I have to say at this time in support of the amendment now brought in by the committee, after recommitment of the joint resolution to the committee, may well be considered under three general phases, namely:

First, what is the duty which we have to perform today and which we had to perform when the joint resolution came over from the House? Briefly stated, it is lawmaking; for providing an appropriation is lawmaking. Second, can that duty be delegated? I hope to demonstrate that it cannot be delegated, because it is the exercise of a primary power and imposes upon us a dominant duty.

Third, will the two amendments now before us transform the joint resolution from a violation of the Constitution, and therefore a void act, into a valid one, a real act of lawmaking? My answer to that, I hope to be able to show, is correctly made in the affirmative.

So I wish to discuss first the first proposition, namely, what the duty is which confronts us today.

We are not appropriating money that now exists anywhere within our reach. We cannot find $5,000,000,000 in the Treasury of the United States today. Therefore, when we set out to appropriate that money, what do we set in motion? What do we actually perform here? We do what they did centuries ago under the title of the "forced loan." We compel the Government of the United States to borrow money, and therefore we exercise that primary power of borrowing money in passing this joint resolution.

Mr. President, is that the end of the act which we perform? Oh, no; not at all. By making these appropriations, by causing the borrowing of this huge sum of money, we make it irresistible that additional taxation must be levied. There is no escape from that conclusion under the sun; by these acts which we perform today, we effectually and instantly lay upon the people of this country a burden of taxation which some future Congress will put into definite form. We may ourselves put into definite form some part of that specific taxation. So are we not setting forth now upon the performance of the greatest power ever vested in any department of government whatever. It was so regarded by those who drafted our form of government and set it forth on parchment, and looked to us to give it flesh and blood and nerves.

I will not ask the Senate to listen to all of the very valuable extracts from the statements of the great statesmen, our forefathers, who put together on paper this contract between the Government and the people. I will content myself with reference to only two of them.

I refer to James Madison, in his essay on The Meaning of the Maxim Which Requires Separation of the Departments of Power, Examined and Ascertained. I quote:

The conclusion which I am warranted in drawing from these observations is, that a mere demarcation on parchment of the constitutional limits of the several departments, is not a sufficient guard against those encroachments which lead to a tyrannical concentration of all the powers of Government in the same hands.

The other is from Alexander Hamilton:

In framing a government which is to be administered by men over men, the great difficulty lies in this: You must first enable the government to control the governed; and in the next place, oblige it to control itself.

So, confronted as we were when this joint resolution came over from the other House and when it was first reported by the committee, with the high obligation of doing the law-making ourselves, the greatest question which confronted us was that fundamental question of whether we, bound in morality and conscience and by that bond of the Constitution to the people of this country, should run contrary to it, or whether we would give vitality and force to that great bond, whether we would clothe it in flesh and blood and nerves, and make of every Senator a living constitution.

Mr. President, that was the real question which confronted us just before the joint resolution was returned to the committee; and what did we do? By a very narrow margin we determined that we, as a Senate, would not merely govern the people, but that we would govern ourselves, that we would discipline ourselves to the extent of preventing, by every honorable means, one of the greatest transgressions of the Constitution to which we have ever been tempted.

The power with which we are dealing, the duty which it is now our part to perform, probably had been the cause of more conflicts between people and rulers, between parliaments and kings, than any other single power. When we undertook to create a republic here we thought so much of the control of the purse, we thought this power was so much a prerogative of the people, that we invested that House of the Congress which was closest to the people, that House which was subject to reelection every 2 years, with the power, and we insisted that all fiscal legislation should originate in the House of Representatives. That was not a novel idea. We took it over as an element of our inheritance from our great British forefathers.

Mr. President, I owe a debt of gratitude to a learned doctor of letters, a statesman, a former Senator from Ohio, Simeon D. Fess, who concentrated upon this particular element in the development of the British constitution, and afforded me an article which traces the history of this particular power and this particular duty from their origin to the present time, going back through the assassinations, the dethronements, the beheadings, and the revolutions, which represent a part of the cost of saving to the people of a country, this power, to be exercised by their representatives in a parliamentary and lawmaking body.

I ask unanimous consent, Mr. President, to have this article printed as an exhibit to my remarks. I may say that it has been submitted by the leader of the minority, the Senator from Oregon [Mr. McNary], to the Committee on Printing, the rule with reference to it has been complied with, and, so far as the Committee on Printing is concerned, consent to its printing has been given.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Vermont? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

(See exhibit A.)

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I wish to call to the attention of the Senate some brief extracts from that remarkably able article, because I realize that we should have them to consider while we are debating the amendments to which I have referred, which, I think, transform the joint resolution from the novel and strange thing it was, namely, an unconditional grant of money to a person and an unconditional grant of power to a person, into what it was intended to be, an appropriation measure which makes a conditional grant to a specific use or uses, and not to a person.

These extracts are taken from subject matter which we will have to imagine, because the Senate does not have time and I will not impose upon the Senate to state what surrounds each item, but the Senate can picture here a scene in June of 1215, a contest between the King and the people over the question of taxation. I read:

The church stood arm in arm with the barons. The London citizenry, with enthusiasm, stood back of both of the resistants. The people from every part of the country threw their lot with the contenders against the extertions of King John, who was presented with their demands in the historic document known as the "Magna Carta" which John was forced to sign on the 15th day of June 1215. This famous document specifies what and how taxes are to be levied. It declares that hereafter specifically named taxes are leviable only "by common counsel" of the Kingdom. Chapter 14 indicates and declares taxes to be levied by the body known as the "common council." London, where much of the wealth of the country was found, was not entirely proof the wealth of the country was found, was not entirely protected by the great charter, and the King continued to exact arbitrary tallages until 1340 under the reign of Edward III, when Parliament took that privilege away from the King once and for all time.

Henceforth, scutages, extraordinary aids, and tallaging the city of London can be levied only by the council. Beyond those three classes of taxes the King was still supreme. The council was called by writs issued to archbishops, bishops, abbots, earls, and the greater barons, and through the sheriffs to the lesser barons, 40 days' notice being allowed as to time and place. This great charter is the first real step to lead to the control by Parliament of the question of taxation.

It should be understood that this council was not the same thing as Parliament. It was the King's council, but it was a step in the progress to the position which we occupy in the United States Senate at this instant.

I now refer to the year 1320. Edward III was out of the country when the Parliament of 1320 met. They agreed to abolish maletolt and all other taxes. I read:

It was declared and by act of this Parliament conceded that the consent of Parliament is necessary to levy a tax on wool, a practice thus far without that consent. It will here be noted that by 1340 Parliament was recognized as the sole authority to tax. From this time on the loophole kept open by the great Edward I touching ancient aids and prises was closed up, and Parliament stood a complete bar against its revival.

Here is another element and development of that time relating to spending:

By the time of Edward III the custom of request through the By the time of Edward III the custom of request through the form of parliamentary petition for legislation believed to be desirable was practiced. When once the parliamentary right to disapprove the grant of taxes was conceded, it would soon follow that the parliamentary right to inquire into royal expenses and also a right to supervise the expenditure would be demanded. This contest ran through the years. It was attempted under the great Edward in 1277, but could make no headway under a reign of that character of statesmanship. Under less capable leaders such as his grandson, it was not difficult for Parliament to make it a condition. it a condition

Observe this. This is a condition. Here we have the beginning of this type of action to which I refer, namely, a complete abolition of unconditional grants and the attaching to every single grant of money to the Executive the condition that the money shall be used for a specific pur-

To make it a condition of voting the grant to be given a voice in their expenditure; to say how and where and for what purpose the tax was to be expended.

I care to refer to only a few more of these items. I will take the Senate forward to the petition of rights and the Bill of Rights which came in the seventeenth century, very near the beginning of our own Government. It will be understood that the English monarch at that time was Charles I, the King who lost his head under the ax because he insisted upon the control of the purse, and because the people of Great Britain insisted upon control of it through their representatives in Parliament. Here is a quotation from the declaration of this tyrannical King:

If you should not do your duty in contributing what the state needs, I must, in the discharge of my conscience, use those other means which God has put into my hands, to save that which the follies of some particular men may otherwise hazard to lose.

The intensity aroused by this Royal threat was not relieved by the follow-up of his chief spokesman who supplemented the King's statement with an additional threat ending: "Remember his Majesty's admonition. I say remember it."

Senators are all familiar with what followed. A revolution occurred in which Charles I paid the penalty for insisting upon this right, this duty, which had cost our forefathers effort, comfort, property, life, to gain.

I am still reading from the article by Dr. Fess:

Tain stain reading from the article by bit. Pess.

To prevent the serious possibility involved now obvious to the King, he signed the famous "Petition of Rights." It will here be noted that Charles I, the greatest exponent of the "Divine Right" of the King, and the greatest opponent of Parliamentary meddling with the Royal Prerogative, signed a statute presented to him by his greatly despised Parliament, thereby extending parliamentary control over taxation as no measure ever before presented had contemplated; and by this act denying to the King powers, some of which in some form or another had been exercised by all the kings before him. This famous statute declared:

"That no person hereafter be committed to make or yield any

"That no person hereafter be committed to make or yield any gift, loan, benevolence, tax, or such like charge, without common consent by act of Parliament, and that none be called to make answer, or take such oath, or to give attendance, or be confined, or otherwise molested or disquieted concerning same or for refusal thereof."

Because of the matter of time, what I have read must be sufficient for our present purposes, but I trust the defect of time, which prevents my reading further, may not interfere with Senators reading more of this article, because the events of history so vividly brought together by Dr. Fess will give us the kind of appreciation of our responsibilities that we need in these days of emotion and of hasty action, resulting in the transformation of our Government by the abdication by Congress of primary duties which they cannot abdicate, or rather which they are forbidden to abdicate, and which if they do abdicate, they abdicate against the will and the binding obligation they have entered into with the people.

That is the kind of a duty which we have to perform here: and, believe me, when I say that in my brief experience in the United States Senate I never was so stirred to the depths as when I read House Joint Resolution 117, as it came over from the other House and as it was originally reported by the committee to the Senate. The audacity, the boldness of the declarations contained in that joint resolution should have caused us unanimously to raise up against it, and they did cause me to exercise every honorable means possible to prevent its further progress.

Can that power be delegated which is closest to the rights of the citizen? Can that power which determines life for the Nation or death to it be delegated? Can a power which the people have cherished to their bosom so closely that they would not permit even the Senate to have it, and would permit only that part of the Congress which was closest to them to have it, be lawfully abdicated? Mr. President, it cannot be done, and yet the joint resolution originally undertook to turn over this primary power and the performance of this dominant duty to the President of the United States.

Now, let us consider briefly whether the amendments correct the joint resolution in this fatal defect. Mr. President, the division of the appropriations into categories is not fully and completely satisfactory. We are dealing, however, with controversial legislation. The main objective we have is that we shall preserve our Nation, and that we shall not destroy it in our efforts at work relief and relief. We realize all the time, as set forth by the Supreme Court in the Petroleum Code case, that we have our duty to perform, and that the President, under his act, will have his duty to perform. Therefore we examine this amendment to see whether it changes the joint resolution from a mere allocation of funds to a person without condition into a joint resolution that appropriates funds to specific uses, payments to be made for those uses by a person.

We realize that in the decision of the Supreme Court in the Petroleum Code case the Court said this:

When the President is invested with legislative authority as the delegate of Congress in carrying out a declared policy, he necessarily acts under the constitutional restriction applicable to such a delegation.

And if there are phrases contained in this amendment which leave to discretion the determination of what particular project within a category shall be adopted, we have the assurance so recently given by the Supreme Court that it is the duty of the President to save the people's rights and to make that allocation according to his constitutional obligation. So when we have such a phrase as that which has been inquired about heretofore, namely, "miscellaneous projects", to consider, I must say that, although I would prefer not to have the ambiguity raised by the inclusion of those words in this amendment, the danger of them is not sufficient to cause me to oppose the amendment, because I believe that, under the Constitution, the President must interpret those words according to the generic terms, work relief and relief; and that he must also adhere to the specific terms that are the setting for the words, "miscellaneous projects." "Miscellaneous", according to the Standard Century Dictionary, means "consisting of a mixture, diversified, promiscuous." Those are the primary meanings of that word, and this phrase I interpret to mean—and I had some part in its drafting—miscellaneous projects within the classifications", sanitation, prevention of soil erosion, reforestation, forestation, flood control, and miscellaneous projects." For example, take "prevention of soil erosion." What projects could be comprehended under that term? There could be wind erosion, river erosion, coastal erosion, avulsion, accretion, and all the other phases and aspects of soil erosion, the prevention of which would be comprehended within the term "miscellaneous projects."

There is not much law relating to this subject of appropriation. One cannot easily turn to jurisprudence either in text or in cases and satisfy himself regarding the power of appropriation alone. The lexicographers give us the meaning:

Appropriation is a setting apart for a particular use; especially, money set apart by formal action to a specific use.

And the same idea is voiced by the courts. While, therefore, language actually stating that the money is "hereby appropriated" must in any event be considered technically an appropriation, it still remains a proper subject of inquiry whether this is the only requirement or whether the object in view is not also an essential element in the "appropriation" authorized by the Constitution.

Now, I propose to put in the Record, for what they may be worth, such cases as I have been able to find, with the assistance of others, upon the subject of "appropriation", for, so far as I know, it has never been traced out. I was unable to find any collection of authorities upon this subject. In the Collins case (15 C. Cls. 22–35) it is stated:

That provision of the Constitution is exclusively a direction to the officers of the Treasury, who are entrusted with the safe-keeping and payment out of the public money, and not to the courts of law.

That is a quotation from the Collins case, and it was held that it constituted no obstacle to the court's finding Collins legally entitled to certain back pay, though no appropriation for the payment had been made.

In the case of Mitchell v. United States (18 C. Cls. 281-286) I find this:

The constitutional provision is a mere limitation and restriction upon the executive officers of the Treasury Department and does not prevent Congress, the law-making power, from involving the Government in contracts to pay money to any extent. When such contracts are made the parties who acquire rights to compensation thereunder must wait until an appropriation is made before they can receive their money, but the right on their part and the obligation on the part of the United States remain unchanged.

Here again, however, the question was of the effect of an admitted appropriation, which happened to be for a less amount than required by the basic law fixing the compensation of the officer involved.

In the case of Campagna v. The United States (26 C. Cls. 316) there is a general statement as follows:

An appropriation is per se nothing more than the legislative authorization prescribed by the Constitution that money may be paid out at the Treasury.

Of course, that is not very helpful in determining the characteristics of the constitutional appropriation.

Expressions of the Supreme Court are not much more in point. In Knote v. The United States (95 U. S. 149) it is stated:

However large, therefore, may be the power of pardon possessed by the President, there is this limit to it, as there is to all his powers.

It cannot touch moneys in the Treasury of the United States except expressly—

That is the point, "expressly"— except expressly authorized by act of Congress.

I invite attention to Reeside v. Walker (11 How. 272, 290), in which occurs the following:

However much money may be in the Treasury at any one time, not a dollar of it can be used in the payment of anything not thus previously sanctioned.

Of course, what constitutes "sanction" is left to the good sense of a legislative body such as the United States Senate.

In the case of U. S. v. Realty Company (163 U. S. 427) the court comes closer to the point at issue. The case involved an appropriation of 1895—Twenty-eighth Statutes, pages 910 and 933—for payment of bounty to producers of sugar who had complied with the provisions of the Bounty Act of 1890 previous to its repeal in August of 1894. It was argued that the bounty act was unconstitutional, and therefore payment of bounty was not a proper object of appropriation. But the Supreme Court held that the validity of the bounty act was not involved, and that under the circumstances shown, producers who in good faith had complied with the terms of the act—which was currently assumed by them and by the Government to be valid—might properly be paid the bounty. Congress might constitutionally recognize claims "of an equitable, moral, or honorary nature."

The question of "appropriation or no appropriation" was definitely raised in U. S. v. Hanson (167 Fed. 881), where it was argued that the Reclamation Act was unconstitutional as authorizing an expenditure of public money without an appropriation by Congress. But the court held that the act itself constituted an appropriation when it provided that the proceeds of the sale of public lands "are hereby reserved, set aside, and appropriated as a special fund in the Treasury, to be known as the 'reclamation fund.'"

A further interesting point is raised in connection with the source of the fund thus appropriated. The court intimates that only funds derived from taxation are subject to the constitutional restriction, to expenditure only for payment of debts, for the common defense and general welfare. Just what limits there might be to the spending of funds arising from other sources—as here, from sale of public lands—is not indicated, as the court finds that, even assuming such moneys are subject to the restrictions mentioned, reclamation can easily be classed as promotive of the "general welfare."

One case of an appropriation for a rather indefinite object has been construed by the Attorney General. In Eighth Opinions of the Attorney General, 137, Mr. Cushing had under consideration the following language in Eleventh Statutes, 114:

Territory of Kansas—for contingent expenses of said Territory, $1,500.

He concluded that it was-

Not confirmed by Congress to any precise object and may be applied by the Governor to any lawful purpose approved by the President.

To be sure, the purpose proposed by the Attorney General was the expenses of the legislative assembly of the Territory, and such an object was fairly obviously within the meaning of "contingent expenses."

It is worth noting that appropriations with a more or less indefinite objective have been made almost from the beginning of the Government. I invite attention to some examples, such as "the President's traveling allowance", now extended to include "official entertainment expenses" and the provision carried for years in the diplomatic appropriation act—

To enable the President to meet unforeseen emergencies arising in the Diplomatic and Consular Services and to extend the commercial and other interests of the United States.

A casual inspection of volume 1 of the Statutes at Large shows that the Congress (1 Stat. 54, ch. 10) appropriated—

A sum not exceeding $20,000 * * to defraying the expenses of negotiating and treating with the Indian tribes.

Prescribing only that any commissioners who might be appointed should receive $8 a day, but leaving all details and even the person to direct the expenditure unspecified.

A few years later, Second Statutes, 206, appears the following:

That the sum of $2,500 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated for the purpose of extending the external commerce of the United States.

Mr. President, these are small sums of money, trifles relatively, but at the time the appropriations were made they were relatively substantial sums. They appealed to the obligations of Congress in the same character, if not the same degree, as the attempts here made to make a lump-sum grant, without conditions attached, to an administrative officer of the United States.

The grants which have been used by me for examples show that, in order that an appropriation be truly an allocation to a specific use, it need not be so closely defined or so specifically applied as to enable a determination exactly of the object for which the money is to be spent, but that if it is in such general terms confined or limited to a category, an activity of the Government, an essential function of sovereignty, it is truly an appropriation within the meaning of the Constitution.

Mr. President, I believe that the amendment dividing the sum into categories, as it does, and modifying, as it does, relief and work relief, as provided in line 8, page 1, of the joint resolution, transforms the measure from an unlawful attempt to grant power and money to a person into an appropriation measure which conforms to the Constitution.

Personally there are many things about the allocation which I should choose to have different, but when men get together in any legislative body to improve a joint resolution, as this joint resolution did need improving, they cannot be arbitrary, tyrannical, mentally obstinate, and unyielding. In order that 96 men, who think for themselves and who have character, may get together there must be some concession, and so I am prepared with respect to the phrase "miscellaneous projects" to make a concession in behalf of the greater interests.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President-

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Vermont yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. AUSTIN. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. ADAMS. The Senator from Vermont used the phrase that the amendment "divided up the fund." I have read the amendment in a different sense. Perhaps I have not followed the Senator closely, but it seemed to me that there was no division of the fund in that sense by the amendment.

The amendment, as I read it, provides that the President may use all the money, if he sees fit, for relief purposes, as in the original joint resolution which came from the House; but it also provides a set, hardly of specifications, but of generalizations, for the fund is not divided among them, but the President may not expend more than a certain amount in each of the generalized classes.

What I desire is to ascertain whether or not I have correctly interpreted the provision as a limitation and not as an allocation. I am fearful that the phrasing of the joint resolution will be construed as an appropriation, as an allocation, and that those who are interested in a particular form of appropriation—for instance, projects for professional and clerical persons—may say, "Under the joint resolution we are entitled to have $350,000,000 expended for those particular purposes."

The joint resolution as it would read with the amendment merely provides that not more than a certain amount may be expended for the projects enumerated, and then gives to the President unqualified and unlimited authority to add 20 percent of the total appropriation to any one of them; and in order to get the 20 percent, which would amount to $800,-000,000, it must be taken from the other projects. In other words, as I see it, the joint resolution leaves the same discretion that existed without the amendment.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President-

Mr. ADAMS. I desire to ask one additional question of the Senator from Vermont for my own information. Where the joint resolution provides that these appropriations shall be available "for the following classes of projects", would the Senator read it as meaning that it shall be available only "for the following classes of projects"?

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, I thought the chairman of the committee very clearly stated that the revised joint resolution was intended to afford a break-down of the purposes of the administration in the expenditure of the money. It was not intended to contain specific allocations. It was not intended definitely to state that the sums named would be expended on the particular projects, but it was intended to be as near a break-down as those having the matter in charge could possibly reach as to what the purposes of the administration were regarding the expenditure of the money. I also particularly call attention to the fact that $800,000,000 of it was left to the President to expend as he might see fit.

Mr. ADAMS. Is the Senator from Virginia correct about that? May not the President add $800,000,000 not only to one particular project but to several projects, so long as the money lasts?

Mr. GLASS. No; I do not think so.

Mr. ADAMS. The proviso beginning on line 21 reads:

That not to exceed 20 percent of the amount herein appropriated may be used by the President to increase any one or more of the foregoing limitations.

Mr. GLASS. Yes; but I think he is limited to $800,000,- | miles long and 100 miles wide, in the main which constitutes 000, 20 percent, in using that fund.

Mr. ADAMS. My inquiry was caused by the use by the Senator from Vermont of the term that the fund was to be "divided" in this way; and it seemed to me a rather more definite statement than the joint resolution justified.

Mr. GLASS. The purpose of the administration is so to divide the fund; but circumstances may arise which would necessitate a change in the purpose of the administration, and the language would seem to authorize the President to use as much as 20 percent of the total, or less if he pleased, for any one of the so-called "allocations."

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, my answer would agree with the answer given by the honorable Senator from Virginia, who is in charge of the joint resolution. I understand it in the same way. That is to say, the language on line 6, page 2, tells the story-"to be immediately available and to remain available until June 30, 1937." During that period of 2 years this fund, in the aggregate $4,000,000,000, will be available, for what purposes? For any use of the type or kind specified in the amended joint resolution when that use is made in work relief and relief.

There is no command to spend the money. There is no obligation to use it. If recovery shall start up by virtue of this activity, as I understand, there will be a cessation of its use, if the spirit of the joint resolution is carried out; and the whole amount of the fund may not be used, although I believe that is rather an exaggerated idea.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President-

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Vermont yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. AUSTIN. I yield.

Mr. LEWIS. May I ask the Senator from Vermont if he does not mean to convey the idea that the words "miscellaneous projects" must be construed to mean projects which are miscellaneous of the nature of those previously de-

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, that is what I do understand. The matter is so well stated by the Senator from Illinois, much better than I could state it, that I adopt his statement.

Mr. LEWIS. I cannot adopt that compliment as quite deserved, but may I add another suggestion? As I understand the Senator, knowing him to be a scholar on the Constitution, he now concedes that the qualifications or corrections brought in by the able chairman of the committee, the Senator from Virginia [Mr. Glass], make constitutional what otherwise the Senator from Vermont would have thought, as it previously stood, to be an unconstitutional measure?

Mr. AUSTIN. I assent to that.

Mr. President, before taking my seat I wish to refer to another amendment included in the joint resolution as reported by the committee. It is found on page 7, section 4,

In carrying out the provisions of this joint resolution the Presi-ent is authorized (within the limits of the appropriation made in section 1) to acquire, by purchase or by the power of eminent domain, any real property or any interest therein, and improve, develop, grant, sell, lease (with or without the privilege of purchasing), or otherwise dispose of any such property or interest

I was concerned about that section when we were considering the joint resolution as it came over from the House, and I have given it serious consideration since the joint resolution was recommitted to the committee, as a result of which I wish to say that I have satisfied myself that, in the main, the amendment is a mere declaration of a power that existed anyway. The power of eminent domain is an incident of sovereignty. It is an absolutely essential characteristic of the vigor of sovereignty that it should be able to take the citizen's property from him upon due process of law and the giving of proper compensation.

The other question, however, was whether under this power the Federal Government could come into the Green Mountains and preempt a large part of that garden, 200 the State of Vermont, and thus reduce that sovereignty to a mere speck on the landscape. Such fears, of course, might cause any legislator to resist by whatever means were honorable a measure which contained such a power, to defeat it, to kill it; for if there is anything that animates me it is love of my State and a determination to maintain her dignity, her sovereignty, and the extent of her jurisdiction, although it is only a small garden in the northeastern part of the United States.

I have satisfied myself by study that this inherent right of sovereignty to take private property can never be used to the extent of depriving a State of its domain, depriving a State of its sovereignty over its own land. To be sure, there are cases where States may so assent to the type of taking by the Federal Government that the Federal Government will obtain jurisdiction to all extent save the right of entering the property for the purpose of serving process and maintaining the peace of the State. That may be done, but that is always a matter of agreement. The sovereign power cannot come into a State and take land, and thereby acquire jurisdiction against the State, without its consent.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President-

Mr. AUSTIN. I yield to the Senator from Viriginia. Mr. GLASS. The Federal Government cannot even take property in a State for a Federal building without the consent of the State.

Mr. AUSTIN. I believe that is a debatable question.

Mr. GLASS. It has been so decided over and over again. Mr. AUSTIN. I am inclined to think that if there were a conflict of interest between the Federal Government and a State over the exercise of the Federal power, the Federal Government might preempt land which it desired for strictly Federal uses.

Mr. GLASS. I venture to say that if the distinguished Senator will give his attention to the matter he will find that the State of Vermont has a general enactment authorizing the Federal Government to acquire land within the limits of that State for public-building purposes. I know Virginia has such a law.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, the Senator from Virginia is accurate about that; we have a rather extraordinary statute in Vermont, passed in 1925 I believe, in connection with the forestry activities of the Government, making general cession to the United States of such lands as it might wish to take. But the people of Vermont are in great distress over it just at the present time, and it is quite probable that that statute will be amended during the pending session of the legislature so as to narrow the grant which the State makes the Federal Government, because the people of the State have had some fear of the extent and scope of the possible acquisitions by the Federal Government within that little State.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I might suggest one thing in this clause which I think the Senator will recognize is probably impossible in relation to his State. It says that if they take land they shall improve it, and develop it, and I assume it would be impossible to improve the State of Vermont. [Laughter.]
Mr. AUSTIN. I thank the Senator from Colorado.

think he took some chances in making that kind remark. for if I ever commence talking about the State of Vermont we will not be able to act upon the joint resolution for some time. When we are asked where we are from, we always say, "Vermont, thank God!" I assure the Senator the people of Vermont would appreciate his sugar-coated compliment.

Mr. President, I conclude with this observation: I am satisfied that the power expressed in section 4, on page 7 of the joint resolution, contains no dangerous element; so, taking the situation as it confronts us at this instant, I favor these amendments, and if the measure shall not be changed in the process of parliamentary procedure, I believe I shall favor the enactment of the joint resolution.

Under What Authority are Taxes in England Levied and Expended—Past and Present?

By Simeon D. Fess

By Simeon D. Fess

In these times when in our country we hear so much about the necessity of emergency legislation, and so little about the importance of constitutional limitations, when so large a proportion of our officials, impatient with the restraints of the constitution, argue and plead for that broader view of our organic law with such mutations as in their view will permit their solution of the problems, economic and governmental, as displayed not alone among the new-deal experts, but on the floor of the Houses of legislation where it is powerfully urged that Congress, the authorizing department must play "hands off" in the application of the $4.880,000,000, leaving it to the Executive, the spending department of the Government, a complete reversal of a policy pursued since the birth of the Republic—it may not be amiss to examine the birth of the Republic—it may not be amiss to examine the authorizing and spending of taxes as it has developed in Great Britain, universally admitted to be the leader among the nations on the growth and maintenance of a sound financial system.

It has been truly stated that the "bed rock on which the English for a state of the leader among the maintenance by the first property of the property of the property of the leader among the state of the leader among the state of the leader among the lea lish financial system is built is the principle of maintenance by Parliament of the control over the grants which it makes." Today the absolute control of taxation by the House of Commons is the result of struggles stretching over the centuries.

A principle of the famous Justinian Code, "That which touches all must be approved by all", was adopted first by Edward I, at the opening of the fourteenth century, and has continued as a constitutional principle upon which is based England's financial

After centuries of contest, first with the Crown, then the Lords, the House of Commons took supreme control, and regarded this its After centuries of contest, first with the Crown, then the Lords, the House of Commons took supreme control, and regarded this its most important as well as ancient prerogative. This control includes the power to direct the expenditure of revenue, since the long-fought right of parliamentary control of grant would be totally nullified if the revenue could be expended at the will of the Crown. This authority to direct expenditure is not coexistant with the control of appropriation, but came in a later day as one contribution of the Revolution of 1688. The right is expressed in the Bill of Rights of the following year, "the grant of supply, and the control of public expenditure, belongs inalienably to Parliament, and preeminently to the House of Commons", which became a maxim of the British system. The history of the House of Commons discloses the fact that its supreme power lies in the control of the purse of the nation.

This position grew out of the fact that appropriation without provision for securing compliance with its terms is of no consequence. It is the very essence of the British system that the right of appropriation must be accompanied by the right of Parliament to see that the expenditure is made in accordance with the specific purposes for which it was made. To this power was later given the right to examine the expenditures as fundamental in the system; to inquire into the wisdom, faithfulness, and economy of the expenditure, with the right to control that expenditure.

The agg-old conflict never extended to the right of the King

Iture.

The age-old conflict never extended to the right of the King to the grant. It was readily conceded that money was essential to government. Without it there would be no government, much less an efficient government. The maxim, "Without sound finance, no sound government is possible; without sound government no sound finance is possible", was never denied. The question was not money, but upon whose authority levied, and for what purpose, and how expended.

In England the parliamentary control of expenditures has in the last 60 years been regarded of no less importance than the parliamentary control of the grant, hence the emphasis placed upon the machinery of expenditure to insure accuracy and economy. During the immediate hundred years preceding the present upon the machinery of expenditure to insure accuracy and economy. During the immediate hundred years preceding the present time, complete control over the machinery of the treasury by Parliament has taken place. In 1848 it was declared: "This house cannot be the effectual guardian of the revenues of the states unless the whole amount of taxes and of various other sources of income received for the public account be either paid in or accounted for to the exchequer." This was repeated in 1857: "It is essential to a complete parliamentary control of the public money that no portion of it should be arrested in its progress to the consolidated fund from which alone it can be issued and applied with parliamentary sanction." This practice of complete parliamentary control, not alone over grants, but how the grants must be applied, was made a matter of law as well as custom by the Statute of 1866. Henceforth moneys were put in a consolidated fund from which all grants were to be applied in accordance with the direction of Parliament. For example, if drafts are made upon the consolidated fund for one kind of service it cannot be diverted to another kind of service. One of the elements most sharply scrutinized is accuracy, that no confusion may arise.

In the British system there would be no possibility of the head of a division such as that of Public Works notifying a mayor of a city, who decided to build a public-utility plant, that the public-works division will furnish the needed funds without specific authority from Parliament first to go into such business, and secondly, an appropriation specifically named by Parliament for that of business, such as has been done here in the United States in at least a dozen different cases. The air-tight control by Parliament over the treasury, so far as collection and expenditure of public funds go, is the most outstanding fact in British history. How it reached the present status is worth examining.

Taxation in England may be traced to its Germanic origin. Tacitus mentions the contributions of individuals to the chief—gifts of cattle, grain, fruits, etc., which, while accepted as a compliment or gift, served to supply his wants. There was no direct exaction of any form of tax upon the tribe by the chief. When the Anglo-Saxon ruled England there was developed the relation of lord of the land and the people, in which the former was supplied with his needs by voluntary action of the latter.

With the passing of time this support grew into a custom and showed two sources of revenue—the folkland, which could not be alienated without consent of Witenagemote. The proceeds from such community lands came to the King—such as tolls, duties, customs, etc. Also demands of national defense required military, police, and judicial power. This relation gave the King certain power over citizens called to serve under the colors, to work on highways, bridges, harbors, etc.; service in various ranks of the militia. The right of heriot passed to the King the property of the vassal upon the death of the vassal. Through the operation of forfeiture by the judicial arm of the King, large revenues reverted to the King. The King found lucrative sources of revenue through police power, extending to business transactions with the substantial aid of purveyance where the King could demand for public use private property as well as personal service, or a money payment in lieu thereof. public use private property as well as personal service, or a money payment in lieu thereof.

Before the Norman Conquest in 991, the principle of Danegeld, a form of bribe, was adopted and continued until its abolition by Edward the Confessor, in the beginning of the eleventh century. Danegeld was in the form of a tax to supply tribute to the Danes, and while it was on the authority of the council of wisemen with the King, the Witenagemote, it in reality was by the King himself, with the assent of the Witenagemote. The latter was primarily under the King. It was composed of: (1) The King and his family; (2) bishops, abbots, eldermen; (3) ministri-administrative officers; and (4) appointees by the King. While the Witenagemote was not representative, but rather selective and aristocratic, it was the nearest expression of a national will in existence.

Taxation under Saxon regime can be said in form at least to require the assent of the Witenagemote. That was not so much the assent of the people as the assent of a group of people at the head of which was the King.

When William the Conqueror took the helm it was but natural for a character of his will emerging from the Normans, who represented kingly prerogatives, to at once introduce methods which did for a character of his will emerging from the Normans, who represented kingly prerogatives, to at once introduce methods which did not look to approval by the people. This Saxon right was lost.

From 1066 to 1215 taxation was a kingly prerogative in which the King's needs were the only criteria of the burdens of taxation, which was exacted with little if any regard for the wishes of those who paid. Any question on their part would be interpreted an interference with a matter in which they had no say. The continuation of such regime required a powerful personality such as that of the great Conqueror. A king of lesser power of will would find difficulty.

The Witenagemote under him lost its character of a legislative

The Witenagemote under him lost its character of a legislative and executive council. Consultation with the council was merely formal, and ceased to have significance. Meetings were purely formal, and few in attendance. This held true even in matters of taxation—whatever power might have lodged with the Saxon Witenagemote deteriorated into a mere passive assent under William.

The revival of the Danegeld in 1084 caused a rumbling among the council and was called an extortion by a prominent member. It was a land tax to the amount of 20,000 pounds. Two years later William caused a general survey of all the land known as "Domesday Survey"—this for the purpose of taxation upon what he called a fair basis. The information desired by the King came through a fair basis. The information desired by the King came through representatives from every shire.

William Rufus, wanting the personality of his father, did not have as great success in securing taxes, which was his chief need and determination. He aroused the church and feudatories, who were the main sources of revenue. He also extended the Danegeld system. While strained relations existed there was no way that influence would register.

system. While strained relations existed there was no way that influence would register.

Under Henry I, the youngest son of the Conqueror, there is evidence that the council did give assent on occasions. In the Charter of Liberties, Henry granted to "knights who hold their lands by the culrass by my own gift I grant the lands of their demesne plows free from all payments and all labor." This appears to touch taxation and speaks of the consent of the vassals. Henry is reported to have declared, "I will cause these courts to be summoned when I will, for my own proper necessities at my pleasure."

pleasure."

It is a question whether these courts were not used in further extortion. During the reign of Henry I the chief item of record to the various and burdensome taxes. In extortion. During the reign of Henry I the chief item of record of the chroniclers refers to the various and burdensome taxes. In 1110 the chronicler sets down: "This was a year of much distress from taxes which the King raised for his daughter's dowry."

During the next regime, extending from 1135 to 1154, that of Stephen, grandson of the Conqueror by Adela, his fourth daughter, the arbitrary tax exactions were carried on a high scale, abandoning any or all limitations agreed upon under Henry. Stephen created contention with the nobles, who in dire need exacted taxes from the people to carry on against the King. The chronicler recorded: "Those whom the nobles suspected of having any goods they took by day and by night, seizing both men and women, and they put them in prison for their gold and silver and tortured them with pains unspeakable, for never were martyrs tormented as these were."

These exactions all but ruined both the towns and counties which were laid water to the country of the

These exactions all but ruined both the towns and counties which were laid waste to insure against resistance. The accession of Henry II, in 1154, gave some hope for relief, because of his character, for administration, and his desire to be helpful to the people. But this period presents a continuation of the contest over taxation and supplies the episode of the martyrdom of Thomas à Becket, one of the most dramatic incidents in English history, and a real contest over taxation.

The incident arises out of a demand of the King to transfer a custom tax of 2 shillings from each hide (portion of land) from the sheriffs to the treasury. Becket refused to have it done—"not as revenue, my Lord, will we give it, but to the sheriffs we stand ready to comply", asserted the Chancellor, who later became archbishop. Henry replied: "By the eyes of God, it shall be given as revenue, and it shall be entered in the King's account; and you have no right to contradict." To this Becket replied: "My Lord King, by the reverence of the eyes by which you have sworn, it shall not be given from my land, and from the right of the church not one penny." This was more than a personal dispute. It was the beginning of the contest which ended, as between King and archbishop, with the execution of the latter. In this case the King had denied to the chief member of his council any say in matters of towarters. had denied to the chief member of his council any say in matters of taxation. Here are the seeds of a great issue.

It was under Henry II, 5 years after his accession, that the form of tax known as "scutage" was inaugurated. This was pay in lieu of personal service or military service and became an important source of revenue. It came as a feudal charge, common under a feudal system which had been employed in earlier times. With such funds the King could secure serviles who would obey orders. The popularity of the profession of war, and the high rank placed upon a successful and aggressive warrior, made such funds of great need, and when employed in foreign wars it had the tendency to make scutage more popular, even though it was a burdensome tax.

It thus became a tax purely for and by the King.

In time opposition to this tax was heard, first from the church but not until later did it reach an open break between King and baron. Toward the end of the 35-year period of Henry II the Danegeld was abandoned, but in its stead personal taxation was greatly expanded. In the twenty-seventh year of Henry's reign an order was made that every holder of chattels of 16 marks' value in revenue was to have a coat of mail and helmet and shield and a lance, and each who had 10 marks was to have a hawbert and a barder was made that every holder of chattels of 16 marks' value in revenue was to have a coat of mail and helmet and shield and a lance, and each who had 10 marks was to have a hawbert and a headpiece of iron and a lance. This was an early basis for taxing personal property and will serve in supporting the crusade movement. This tax was first laid in 1188 by a conference of archbishops, bishops, and barons. This conference laid a tax of one-tenth of his revenue and movables—the first of its kind so far as is

The assessment of these taxes was made by juries of inquest, and attempted to determine the amount each was to pay by the payers themselves. During this reign the King's right to tax was fairly well established, notwithstanding some protest fairly well established, notwithstanding some protest and vocal opposition from some of the barons—however, the opposition did not reach beyond the complaint stage heard now and then in the

The next 10 years, 1189 to 1199, covers the reign of Richard, who succeeded his father on the throne. The new King had but little interest in his subjects in England, and less regard for their rights. He taxed them in every way known, and openly sold, whenever he could, bishoprics, ministries, and privileges of all sorts. He was abroad from England most of his reign, and was taken as a hostage on his way back from the Crusades. One hundred thousand pounds was finally the price English people must pay for his release.

This involved new and burdensome taxes for purposes not entirely popular. Taxes not known before were employed; 20 shillings from every knight's fee; one-fourth of all the income of the laity, all the chalices of the churches as well as other treasures. Some of the bishops took as much as one-fourth of church revenue for the ransom. Taxes were levied upon all land of tenants in socage, and personal property to the amount of one-fourth of its value, as well as subsidy on wool. These forms, used to ransom a King, held by the orders of another King, while temporary, proved so fruitful that efforts were set in motion to continue them as permanent. These new taxes were not authorized by, nor even approved, save by the order of the King. The demand was made by the King in prison, and his mother, as well as her justiciar, expressed their judgment that "all the clergy as well as laity should give for the ransom of our Lord the King." There is no record of assent being required and none of any serious objection further than mere complaint of the burden bearers. Upon Rich-This involved new and burdensome taxes for purposes not enfurther than mere complaint of the burden bearers. Upon Richard's release, he returned to England, called his great council in 1194, with but few in attendance.

He at once created vacancies by removals and permitted filling them by sale to the highest bidder. He demanded the third part of service of the knights, subsidy on wool, and a carucage of shillings. All this on his own authority and upon the third day of his return. He emphasized his theory that his voice was supreme in and out of the council on matters of taxation, and is the result, not of consideration in council, but by edict. In 1198 he levied a second carucage covering all land in England. This without assent or even consultation with his council, but upon his own authority. When the men of religious orders demurred they were at once declared outlaws by order of King Richard. The episode of the Bishop of Lincoln in the last year of Richard's episode of the Bishop of Lincoln in the last year of Richard's reign is pointed out by the historian as an important landmark in the struggle between the King and the people. The King had demanded 300 knights, or 1 year's service, or in lieu thereof 3 shillings per day for a year for each knight. While the council submitted, Hugh, the Bishop of Lincoln, declared his refusal to comply. Whether the refusal was against the tax on the ground that assent was necessary or whether it was a wrong upon the church does not appear. church does not appear.

It seems that the royal prerogative in the initiation of taxes was not greatly weakened under the 10 years of the reign of Richard, but the manner of assessing them was generally by juries inaugurated by Henry II.

For 150 years since the Norman conquest there had been an increasing burden of taxes exacted by the King without more than a semblance of approval by the taxpayer. The theory that the King was source of all power and government left the people silent save now and then a fugitive refusal of some courageous person, or a complaint over the increasing weight of taxes from such sections. This unrest finally reached a climax under John, the youngest son of Henry II, the grandson of William the Conqueror. His general attitude was not designed to mollify, but rather to increase the unrest. Like his brother Richard, whose 10 years of reign found him in England not over 6 months, John's absence from the country to whose throne he was heir did not increase the people's regard for his person.

His first act was war against Philip II. On behalf of its prosecuincrease the people's regard for his person.

His first act was war against Philip II. On behalf of its prosecution he exacted scutage for his campaign in Normandy. He demanded 30,000 marks to pay for a truce with Philip. Impositions of various burdens for whatever purpose were laid upon sole authority of John, with the promulgation that any person who refuses is to be entered and published in London by name. Scutages and imposts heretofore reserved for emergent times were now levied by John as regular aids. These scutages were not only levied each year but, beginning with unheard-of-rates, they were increased each year above the year before. In addition, King John found new sources of revenue by taxing the property of the church. His inquest of services was another source of revenue to be levied upon demesne tenants, or vassals of the King. He found still another source through fines upon those barons delinquent in payment of the ransom taxes on behalf of his brother Richard. He also ignored or completely nullified the rule that the payment He also ignored or completely nullified the rule that the payment of scutage relieved the vassal from further obligation to the King upon that occasion. He fined those who did not go with him to Normandy in 1199. He took money in lieu or as a substitute for services 2 years later; 4 years later he dismissed tenants in chivalry and afterward levied upon them a fine. He headed on toward a break which threatened open rebellion with the baronage of the land. He also had his contests with the clergy in which he saw new sources of revenue.

In the great council of 1207 in the eighth year of his reign, he asked the bishops and abbots to permit the clergy to present to the King a portion of their revenues. Not having succeeded, he presented it a second time in another great council, which the King sented it a second time in another great council, which the King addressed in person. The bishops unanimously refused a demand unheard of in all the ages before. The King ordained that every man throughout the Kingdom must give one-thirteenth part of his revenue and movables to the King. Geoffrey of York refused and had to flee the country. The moment of action was not far distant. Normandy had been lost. The effect upon the people was not favorable to the King. The fight over taxation with the baronage also had its effect. The contest over the church with the Pope, combined, made the scene on Runnymede soon to take place a certainty. certainty.

John, realizing his rather precarious situation, took the usual course to rebuild himself among his people and the clergy, by a foreign war on behalf of the honor of the homeland. He decided to reconquer Normandy. He summoned the barons to follow him to Poicton. Refusal was based upon failure to make his full peace with the church. After this objection was satisfied, they again faily declined on the ground that no duty or law compelled them to go beyond the borders of England. Then came the first assembly in which the lesser rank was admitted as members to a national council. The reeves and representatives from each township were there. A second council was called at Oxford, including members below the rank of nobles, requested by John in the hope of winning the small landholder. Here is the first step or the beginning of what later is known as the "Third Estate", or today, as the "House of Commons."

of Commons."

Events were moving rapidly. In his extremity and his determination to be a real King, John, in May 1214, ordained the collection of unusually high scutage, three marks on the knights' fee, without leave or say. To this the barons demurred and refused to pay, analysis those in the minority. In November he repeated his especially those in the minority. In November he repeated his demand, and it was again refused. The King had set the stage where he found himself resisted from sources unexpected. It was too late to avoid the crisis of Runnymede. To every proposal to the church and to the baron it was a matter of principle, not money, for which they contended.

The church stood arm in arm with the barons. The London citizenry with enthusiasm stood back of both of the resistants. The people from every part of the country threw their lot with the contenders against the extortions of King John, who was presented with their demands in the historic document known as "Magna Carta", which John was forced to sign on the 15th day of June 1215. This famous document specifies what and how taxes are to be levied. It declares that hereafter specifically named taxes are leviable only by common counsel of the Kingdom. Chapter 14 indicates and declares taxes to be levied by the body known as the "common council." London, where much of the wealth of the country was found, was not entirely protected by the great charter, and the King continued to exact arbitrary tal-the great charter, and the King continued to exact arbitrary tallages until 1340 under the reign of Edward III, when Parliament took that privilege away from the King once and for all time.

Henceforth, scutages, extraordinary aids, and tallaging the city of London can be levied only by the council. Beyond those three classes of taxes the King was still supreme. The council was called by writs issued to archbishops, bishops, abbots, earls, and the greater barons, and through the sheriffs to the lesser barons, 40 days' notice being allowed as to time and place. This great charter is the first real step to lead to the control by Parliament of the question of taxation.

do days' notice being allowed as to time and place. This great charter is the first real step to lead to the control by Parliament of the question of taxation.

The extreme limits to which John had gone in the exercise of the tax power, on the one hand, and his low estate as a weak arbitrary ruler of foreign sympathies, on the other, hastened the conflict between King and people over the question of taxes which had been for many years inevitable. John's death the year after Runnymede found his support all gone, with the heir to the French throne in England at the request of the barons. The young son of John was crowned King, with the Earl of Pembroke as the rector. This boy of 9 years of age is known in English history as Henry II, who was King from 1216 to 1272, or 56 years. One of the earliest acts of this reign was a reissue of the great charter—a practice to be generally followed for many years. In subsequent years scutages and carucages were levied, but never by the King, except by the advice and consent of the council.

In 1224 the war with Philip II called for one-fifteenth of all movables. This was denied until the King committed himself and reissued the great charter to which Henry had to promise to adhere. Here is the beginning of the conditional grant which came into practice to demand redress of grievances as a condition of grant, which was tantamount to the right of refusal to pay.

In 1232 the barons refused a request for money to carry on war with France on the ground that they had served in person. In 1237 Henry again requested money with the concession that the "money raised to be expended for necessary uses of the Kingdom at the discretion of any of you elected for the purpose." Henry's task was to convince his council of his needs and thus win their support. The methods employed proved him quite an actor. The chief agency employed was resort to the usual pretension of patrictism to defend the country in foreign war. On occasions Henry would appear in person to address the baronage. In 1244, a

Henry was denied his request, he announced to the people of London that he intended to spend the Christmas with them so that he might freely accept their New Year's presents. This relationship between the King and the national council must not be construed as between the King and the taxpayers. The council did not as such represent the people as against the King. It was but a personal relation, such as the vassal to his lord, and while the council contended that no tax was to be levied upon the baron except by his consent, he thus spoke for all taxpayers, big and little, but not as a chosen representative. That stage had not yet been reached. Not until the middle of the thirteenth century was the step taken to speak for all taxpayers where the relation of representative of the people and the King was marked as the authorizing of taxes and the spending of the same.

In the early part of the thirteenth century, John in his extreme needs ordained the selection of two knights from each shire to assemble at Westminster to arrange the aids they were willing to pay. These knights were elected by the people of the shires in accordance with writs of election, instructing the people its purpose to give the knights time that they may answer the requests for aid from each of the counties. This national council declined to vote the aid, but dwelt upon complaint against the policy of the royal house. For a quarter of a century there was little except differences between King and council, which found its climax in the work of Simon Montfort, the brother-in-law of King Henry, who in 1265 succeeded in the establishment of what today is known as the "House of Commons." This famous assembly was the result of the King's struggle with the national council known as the "war with the barons." It was the contest over the questional tent of the contest over the questional tent o

Throughout the history of England the one all important need of the Crown was money. Domestic jealousies, dynastic rivalries, insurrection and rebellion at home, and war with foreign nations made the needs for revenue imminent. To meet these needs every conceivable device to provide funds was resorted to by the King. Some of these devices were the most fantastic. The weight of the tax burden became too heavy to bear in numerous cases. At first, in the levying of taxes, the King consulted no one. It was his order. Then later he softened the hurt by agreeing to consult with council of his own choosing. Still later he permitted the tax-payer to be heard on his own behalf by his own choosing of members of the council; still later the council was given power of disapproval; still later by the provisions of Oxford in 1258 a plan of reform was set up by which a committee of 24 was appointed by the whole of Parliament on behalf of the community to treat of the aid or tax demanded by the King to carry on war. The main purpose of these provisions was to insure the right to demand redress of grievances, an advance step even before the famous Parliament of Montfort in 1285.

King Henry, realizing his weakness at home, sought the aid of the Pope, Alexander IV, permitting him to ignore the Oxford provisions and to employ the weapon of excommunication upon all who resisted his claims. The King also sought foreign aid from the King of France to heal these sharp differences between him and adherents to the Oxford provision. The compromise proposed was not satisfactory to Montfort, and civil war took place, resulting in the defeat of the King, who was made prisoner and who afterward was released upon the pledge that he would seek the advice of his counselors in matters of justice and administration, to live moderately, and to observe the requirements of the tion, to live moderately, and to observe the requirements of the four knights to be elected by the people of the county (snire) to act for all the people.

The chief act of this council was a plan of government to create a permanent council representing the people, to be the authority back of royal action; accordingly, further writs were issued in the Kingdom for the election of 2 knights from each shire and 2 citizens from each of 21 towns. This meeting was called for June 1265, at London, attended by representatives of the clergy, in addition to knights and citizens, and is known as the first meeting of the House of Commons in Parliament.

While there were some assemblies in which the taxpayer, small while there were some assemblies in which the taxpayer, small as well as large, had appeared, such as the St. Albans Council in 1213, yet this Parliament of 1265 was the first Parliament where the burgher appeared in his own right, as the third estate of the realm in the Parliament of the nation. This was the creation of the famous Simon de Montfort. It will thus be seen that the House of Commons, arising largely out of a dispute with the King on taxing the people, began in 1265, recognized even then as the authority and in due time to become the sole authority for taxing the people to carry on the government. Montfort had built so authority and in due time to become the sole authority for taxing the people to carry on the government. Montfort had built so wisely that, although it was in the face of the opposition of Henry III, his death at Evesham did not undo his work, as the new King was too wise to resist it and proceeded in accordance with the findings of Parliament. By such a policy the King had greater assurance that his needs would be supplied by Parliament when made known to the body of the rightful authority to vote the supplies.

assurance that his needs would be supplied by Parliament when made known to the body of the rightful authority to vote the supplies.

Seven years after the meeting of the first real Parliament, and on the death of King Henry, 1272, Edward I became King, and was crowned in 1274, he being away on the Crusades at the time of the death of his father. For 35 years he reigned over the people of England, quite generally regarded as the greatest ruler, before or since, in the history of the English nation. During his 2-year absence, before his return from the Holy Land, a great Parliament had assembled to take the oath of allegiance to the new King, an act which indicates the growing importance of the people called in assembly. Upon his return the King made it clear that there were two distinct functions to be observed; one, a King should be strong and forceful in his own sphere, and secondly, Parliament should be equally strong within its field.

King Edward indicated that these two functions may clash and come into differences, but they must solve the differences by a strict adherence to principle in a spirit of the public interest, Edward's first Parliament enacted what is known as the "Statute of Westminster." It authorized taxation; and specified items such as, first, feudal aids upon Knighting the lord's son or upon the marriage of his daughter, naming the maximum rate of each. This Parliament permitted a custom or duty on wool, wool fells, and leather. The last was at the request of merchants. That act conceded that a tax heretofore in the domain of the King is now passed over to Parliament. The practice of maletolt under Henry III was made illegal under Edward I. Parliament was summoned by writs which stated the purpose "to treat with us and with the above-mentioned prelates and magnates about the above-stated business." The King's frankness backed by his powerful personality usually won him the vote not only of the magnates but of the smaller and lesser landholders. The constantly increasing demands for more f clergy, and released it later at a small rate. He likewise as a war measure seized all the coin in the country and placed it in his treasury. He then as a war measure demanded half of the spiritual revenues of the clergy which he had summoned, a demand which under pain of outlawry was fulfilled. He then summoned to meet at Westminister, knights of the shire to speak for their community, who voted one-tenth of all moveables. These rather arbitrary efforts could not suffice in the face of wars in Wales and arbitrary efforts could not suffice in the face of wars in Wales and Scotland as well as Gascogny.

This general situation, an empty treasury, outbreaks among neighbors, and obvious unrest at home in both laity and clergy, did not present a bright picture. Edward's creative mind operated upon the theory which he announced: "What touches all by all should be approved." To carry out this principle, he summoned what is widely known in the constitutional history of England as the "Model Parliament of England." He addressed writs to the clergy, the barons, and the sheriffs. In these writs he expanded the famous Justinian maxim: "As a mete just law what affects all, by all should be approved; so also very evidently should common danger be met by means provided in common."

They provided for the attendance of prelates and also the town should common danger be met by means provided in common."

They provided for the attendance of prelates and also the town clergy with "full and sufficient power to consider, ordain, and provide." The writs were sent to the barons of the same character, and also to the sheriffs; a demand to send to Westminster of those capable of acting, two knights from the county, two citizens from each city in the same county, two burgesses from each borough—all to have full power for themselves as representatives to do what shall be ordained according to the common council in the premises, so that the business shall not fail for want of power. This Parliament met in November 1295, 30 years after Montfort's Parliament. It is the first instance of the meeting of an official body of the three estates—the clergy, the barons, and the knights, presided over by the King. Here we have the Crown as the head of Parliament; the clergy and barons as the House of Lords (spiritual and temporal), and the knights, burgesses, and citizens as the House of Commons. This is why it is stated that the House of Lords was established in 1295 under Edward I, the great statesman of England. This Parliament gave answer as to citizens as the House of Commons. This is why it is stated that the House of Lords was established in 1295 under Edward I, the great statesman of England. This Parliament gave answer as to how the King's need of funds is to be met and by what authority the tax is to be laid, but there will be many instances where royal prerogative will assert itself in the interest of the public weal as judged by the King.

In the Parliament of the next year, conflict arose between King and clergy, eventuating in the clergy's refusing to pay the tax requested, whereupon King Edward decreed the clergy in outlawry. The Scots having been tamed in the same year, the King was impatient to proceed against France. He called upon the barons to accompany him to Gascogny. In spite of the King's threat to forfeit their lands, such outstanding figures as the Earl of Norfolk refused to follow the King beyond the borders of England. The earl declared, "With you, O King, I will gladly go." The King replied, "But without me you will go with the rest." The earl rejoined, "Without you, O King, I am neither bound to go nor will I." Whereupon the King swore, "By God, Earl, you shall either go or hang." To which the earl broke out, "By the same oath, O King, I will neither go nor hang."

oath, O King, I will neither go nor hang."

The King summoned the entire military force to meet him in London. His procedure in seizing the wool of the country and his demand for wheat, oats, beef, and pork stimulated further resistance to his wishes. The barons had surrounded themselves with 1,500 knights, and the King's order to the marshal and constable to perform their duty was ignored. The King then decided upon individual contributions, as once before, but as before, without success. He personally appealed to the people of London, to no financial avail. He realized that resistance among the clergy and antagonism among the barons as well as complaints among the knights in both Houses of Parliament were ominous.

Upon the promise to confirm the great charter, the barons and knights made a grant of one-eighth, and the burghers of one-fifth, whereupon Edward embarked for Flanders after having arranged for his son to be regent during his absence. To the young prince in time there were presented specific grievances which he was informed must be redressed before grants could be made, conditions which Edward finally was compelled to agree to. He also after some resistance signed the famous confirmation of the charter, known in history as "Confirmatio Cartarum", thus establishing another important relation between King and Parliament, namely, "grants must await redress of grievances." Under ment, namely, "grants must await redress of grievances." Under John, Magna Carta was first announced as a code of governmental principles. Henry III was first to establish, and Edward I, confirmed and completed the machinery for carrying into operation that code of procedure.

Parliament, the three estates, proved the best channel for govranament action. Edward comprehended the problem, and set up the machinery of government in a body quite representative—the magnates, chosen knights of the shire, parish priests, citizens and burgesses, a real Parliament to counsel together, and make decisions on behalf of the people, and for the common interest.

Edward I, hard pressed for funds, due to trouble in Scotland, Edward 1, hard pressed for funds, due to trouble in Scotland, and to his absence from England in war with France, felt compelled to sign the famous "Confirmatio Cartarum" previously signed by his son, thereby conceding the principle as early as the close of the thirteenth century that consent of Parliament to taxation before a levy is made was a right inherent in the people to be affected. It was a concession by England's great King, that without such consent taxes could not be legally collected, and could not, therefore, be legally demanded. There was only one item in the "Cartarum" that left a semblance of legal right to the King to lay taxes without the consent of Parliament. The saving clause was in the end of the "Cartarum", in the language: "Saving the ancient aids and prices due and accustomed." This clause kept open the right of royal taxation in a degree that it denied the contention that the power had completely passed over into the hands of Parliament in 1297 by the "Confirmatio Cartarum." The proviso covered taxes of ancient aids and prices employed by his ancestors—unqualified control over wool tax of a fixed rate and perhaps the right of tallage in demesne lands, and fixed rate and perhaps the right of tallage in demesne lands, and property in London.

In 1301 the King not only signed under the pressure of the Parliament of Lincoln the "Cartarum" but further made pledges he would seek reforms as a consideration for grants. Even then his various efforts to secure funds failed him through opposition of the barons and the clergy. It was at this time that he conceived the plan of tunnage and poundage, collected from foreign merchants by agreements with merchants, without the necessity of the consent of Parliament on the ground that "Confirmatio Cartarum" covered only English citizens, and did not apply to foreign merchants; hence the statute "Carta Mercatorio", a source of much needed funds. of much needed funds.

In 1307 England's great King died, and the scepter of power was handed to the spineless son, whose career as King lasted 20 years, much too long for a ruler of his character. History gives Edward I a high place. He had learned valuable lessons from his father's much too long for a ruler of his character. History gives Edward I a high place. He had learned valuable lessons from his father's reign; he had inherited his father's strong qualities without his weaknesses. The historian Stubbs declares him "to possess in the greatest degree the highest qualities and manifold accomplishments of his race * * * truthful, honorable, temperate, and chaste; frugal, cautious, resolute; great in counsel, ingenious in contrivance, rapid in execution; he had all the powers of Henry II (his great-grandfather) without his vices, and he had, too, that sympathy with the people he ruled, the want of which alone would have robbed the character of Henry II of the title of greatness."

In contrast with this characterization of the father, we may note the opinion of the same author of the son, Edward II: "He has no the opinion of the same author of the son, Edward II: "He has no kingly pride or sense of duty, no industry, or shame or pity " * he makes amusement the employment of his life; vulgar pomp, extravagance, lavish improvidences, selfish indolence, make him a fit center of an intriguing court " * he bestows his favors in such a way as to bring his favorite to destruction and sows enmittee broadcast by insult or imprudent neglect. His reign is a tragedy."

With a ruler of such character, possessed with an exalted view of his Kingly prerogative, and his habitual extravagances growing out of bestowal of favors, one has not far to look to discover the symptoms of coming conflicts between King and Parliament. His reign soon reveals the upperhand in Parliament in the contest, especially over taxes, where even in great extremity he was refused money over the loudest protest as to his needs. He was finally dethroned 20 years after his accession, it must be admitted more because of his loose methods of administration than questions of taxation. In 1327 his son, Edward III, succeeded to the finally dethroned 20 years after his accession, it must be admitted more because of his loose methods of administration than questions of taxation. In 1327 his son, Edward III, succeeded to the throne, and while he but a boy of 14 did not become real king until 1330, 3 years after the death of his father, his reign covers the 50-year period from 1327 to 1377. Edward III was an improvement over his improvident father in every way; but he was not a statesman, and possessed too few of the qualities of his grandfather. As a warrior, he had some successes which worked in his favor with Parliament, which exercised its own judgment on the grant of funds. Tunnage and poundage, a tax on the foreign merchants, introduced by his grandfather, came into common practice at this time. This practice was extended to royal control, to the export of wool, which at times was forbidden. The policy was urged as an alleged method to help the wool industry of the country, to build up a domestic trade. On this basis the tax on wool was not confined to foreigners, but was extended to the merchant class, and became a great source of revenue, by which the merchant class was lifted into prominence almost to the rank of a fourth estate. Naturally this new tax burden in time would become a source of unrest. When added to it, the claim was made that it was in the interest of foreign labor, as against the domestic worker, resentment broke out, and by 1339 Parliament acted upon the demand of the knights and burgesses for a redress of grievances growing out of levying taxes without the consent of Parliament. levying taxes without the consent of Parliament

Edward III was out of the country when the Parliament of 1340 met. They agreed to abolish maletolt, and all unauthorized taxes. It was declared and by act of this Parliament conceded that the consent of Parliament is necessary to levy a tax on wool, a practice thus far without that consent. It will here be noted that by 1340 Parliament was recognized as the sole authority to tax. From this time on the loophole kept open by the great Edward I touching ancient aids and prizes was closed up, and Parliament stood a complete bar against its revival.

This does not mean that the tax was to be abandoned, but simply that it could not be employed until approved by Parliasimply that it could not be employed until approved by Parliament, which showed a willingness to confer with the King on his needs, but to be its own judge on the merits of the case. Henceforth will be heard a new line of discussion on who pays the tax when assessed upon goods of trade. Is it paid by the foreigner or by the domestic citizen? If by the foreigner, and the merchant would agree to the tax, it was asked what right had Parliament to interfere? The British theory is the Crown is the source of all government, both administrative and legislative, including raising taxes, all of which is initiated by the Crown. The contest over who shall levy taxes grew out of the claim that those who must pay should be consulted. Later it was demanded that their consent must be had. By the time of Edward III the custom of request through the form of parliamentary petition for legislation believed to be desirable was practiced. When once the parliamentary right to disapprove the grant of taxes was conceded, it would soon follow that the parliamentary right to inquire into royal expenses and also a right to supervise the expenditure would be demanded. This contest ran through the years. It was attempted under the great Edward in 1277, but could make no headway under a reign of that character of statesmanship. Under less capable leaders, such as his grandson, it was not difficult for Parliament to make it a condition of voting the grant to be given a voice in their expenditure, to say how and where and for what purpose the tax was to be expended. In the thirteenth year of the reign of Edward III a committee of Lords and Commons was appointed to examine the accounts of the Crown's collectors, to ascertain how the last subsidy had been expended. The same demand was made in the following year. To this the King assented on grounds that certain-named officials be included in the examining body. Henceforth accounts were examined or audited, but by appointees largely of the Crown. In the 50 years of the reign of Edward III, parliamentary consent was extended far beyond that recognized by his grandfather; it extended over wool, and applied to tonnage and poundage, thus officially conceding the sole power of taxation to be a parliamentary function instead of that of the King. To this concession was added the right of a voice in expenditure, including the power of determining what the grants asked for shall be and for what they shall be expended. To this was added the right to examine and audit the accounts by a commission which at the time was virtually selected either by or upon penditure, including the power of determining what the grants asked for shall be and for what they shall be expended. To this was added the right to examine and audit the accounts by a commission which at the time was virtually selected either by or upon the approval of the King. These were long steps toward complete parliamentary control over taxes, and later that control to be lodged in the House of Commons, which from year to year steadily grew in power, especially over tax matters.

With the growth of power and influence of Parliament made up of the three estates representing widely different interests, divisions of opinion growing out of different interests involved in various ranks, such as clergy, barons, knights, citizens, burgesses, etc., were inevitable. Questions came up of vital interest to the clerics but not to the barons, or vice versa; or of interest to both of these ranks, but not to the knights or citizens or burgesses. As early as the reign of the great Edward, there were frequently sessions of but one group of representatives without the other. Under Edward II and also Edward III separate sessions were frequently held of the Lords, on the one hand, and of knights, citizens, and burgesses (later to be known as Commons) on the other. By the time of the next reign, that of Richard II, Parliament met separately as two Houses—the House of Lords and the House of Commons.

The Black Prince, the heir to the throne, died before the death of his father, leaving a son 11 years of age, when King Edward, his grandfather, died. He was crowned with his uncle, John of Gaunt, as the regent. He was deposed in the twenty-second year of his reign; during his minority the Parliament, especially the Commons, made rapid advances against royal prerogatives. To the power to control taxes already recognized was added the power to levy taxes.

One of the most difficult situations for an American to understand is the powerful hold upon the English people the fealty and allegiance to the King represent. To the average American there is not a single reason, convincing at least, for the continuance of the English King. He is merely an exotic institution of no reason whatever for existence. But, to the Englishman, today as it has ever been throughout the centuries, the King is all important. Whatever may be said, the King, his office, and especially his person, is held sacred for the preservation of which the average Englishman will fight at the drop of the hat. Under Richard II, ill-advised and likely of unsound mind, though violently ambitious, the advantage taken of his youth (11 when his grandfather died, and but 33 when he was deposed) was not approved by the people at large. The examination and audit of his accounts, and the withholding of consent to grants, demanding the right to do the taxing, even though on behalf of economy of the taxpayer, were not popular if they crippled the nation in its war with the French and the Scots. The House of Commons had demanded the right and had exercised it to the nation in its war with the French and the Scots. The House of Commons had demanded the right and had exercised it to have an audit of the King's expenses and have it reported back to the House. The Commons also petitioned for the discharge of the treasurer, appointed for special purpose, a practice that had grown up, and all money to be paid to the treasurer of England so that it will be under officers of the exchequer. Upon the report of the serious fiscal situation of the Crown, and believing it due to unnecessary extravagance, Parliament asked the King to permit it to name the offices of the royal household. By 1382, in the fifth year of the reign of Richard II, the special treasurers were again employed, and the old system resumed.

Parliament, especially the Commons, found themselves demanding and exercising control of taxation, with a war on their hands, a rather popular war, and strongly supported by the general public. This situation was an advantage to Richard II at the expense of Parliament. Money was necessary to avoid defeat. The Parliament had to vote large funds to be used by the King or suffer the consequences of defeat by a foreign foe. The Commons did not see the way to secure the funds. The Lords were willing to the consequences of defeat by a foreign foe. The Commons did not see the way to secure the funds. The Lords were willing to try a new tax in the form of a poll tax, which played havoc to its authors, and offered the occasion for an uprising of the villeins. The Commons displayed a ready willingness to pass over to the King the responsibility. When he presented the situation they did not only renew the tunnage and poundage for 3 years, but they granted for life subsidies on wool, wool fells, and leather. In Richard's absence in Ireland, his enemies conspired and drove him from the throne by enforced resignation upon the allegation of over 30 charges including a half-dozen counts on the question of taxation. All the charges revealed the exercise arbitrarily of unlawful powers. This movement was directed by Henry, who had been disinherited, and who, in the absence of the King, unlawful powers. This movement was directed by Henry, who had been disinherited, and who, in the absence of the King, landed at Yorkshire and won the powerful supporters of the throne away from Richard—hence the resignation of Richard and its acceptance by Parliament, to be followed by the accession of Henry IV, son of John of Gaunt, the brother of Richard's father. The deposed King had sat on the throne from 1377 to 1400. His reign was marked by the growing power of the House of Commons. The supreme control of Parliament over voting taxes and auditing expenditures had already been established and will be continued. expenditures had already been established and will be continued throughout the reigns of the House of Lancaster, including Henry IV, V, and VI, covering the period 1399 to 1461. Early in Henry's reign, the Commons took a most advanced position, far beyond the "redress of grievances as a condition precedent to the grant of levice." It was demanded that the Virgie angular to their part of levies." It was demanded that the King's answer to their peti-tion be given to Parliament before the grant. To this demand the King made a specific refusal. The Commons delayed the grant, which was the beginning of that practice henceforth to be followed. By 1413, the close of the reign of Henry IV, the practice of lowed. By 1413, the close of the reign of Henry IV, the practice of initiation of tax levies by the House of Commons was also established. This was not until a contest was made. It was not favored by the King because of his belief and assurance that the Lords could be appealed to with greater effect than the Commons. The King in the eighth year of his reign went in person before the Lords. The Lords favorably determined the needs, whereupon the King requested the Commons to send to the Lords a committee to be interred of their decirious estawhat substities were necessarily King requested the Commons to send to the Lords a committee to be informed of their decision as to what subsidies were necessary. The Commons sent the committee and waited their report. The King informed the committee "they should see to it that they conform most nearly to the purpose of the Lords." This report aroused opposition and resentment in the Commons, who considered it as interfering with the conceded right of the Commons to initiate taxes. The King more concerned in securing needed money than the concession of parliamentary principle, and realizing the necessity of the Commons' approval, referred in his answer to the right of the two houses to meet separately, which necessitated the approval of both tated the approval of both, tated the approval of both.

He satisfied the Commons by the language he employed, in which he recognized their contention to the right of originating revenue bills when he used the clause: "any grant by Commons granted and by the Lords assented to." It will now be noted that by 1413, the beginning of the reign of Henry V, the complete control of taxation had been definitely lodged in Parliament, the two Houses meeting separately, and, while both Houses must approve, the measure must originate in the Commons. The request of Henry V in his last year to lay temporary taxes without frequent calling together of Parliament to be ratified upon assembling was made. Henry V gave promise of a more brilliant career, but was cut short with but nine years as King. His reign was marked by wars, which he himself directed, with such success that taxes, though heavy, were readily voted with little opposition. The unfortunate passing of Henry V after so brief and somewhat brilliant a career left the crown to his infant son, but a year old, a situation always fraught with grave possible consequences. His life, stretching over the period from 1422 to 1471, covered the time of the unfortunate War of the Roses, the bloody feud between the two royal houses of Lancaster and York, ending with deposition and death of Henry, with his last 10 years as prisoner in the tower. True, he was released, and for a very brief time was again on the throne, only to be murdered in 1471. to be murdered in 1471.

The reign was marked by the official shedding of the blood of the noblest elements of England, first, those of the house of York, then of Lancaster, and vice versa. It was also stigmatized by what is known as "Cade's Rebellion." The ruling powers in Parliament, first of the one House, and then of the other, were too evenly divided to permit royal interference with parliamentary control of taxation. From the time of the great Edward's "Model Parliament", in 1295, to the coming of the house of Tudor, 1485, a period of about two centuries, the principle of parliamentary control over ment", in 1295, to the coming of the house of Tudor, 1485, a period of about two centuries, the principle of parliamentary control over taxation, which had been declared again and again, had been permanently established. The two Houses of Parliament adopted the practice of separate meetings. While the Lords claimed the right of approval, and even of origination of those taxes applied to themselves, the principle of the Commons originating all taxes became an acknowledged fact. With the coming of the house of York, 1461, which at first displayed some promise of efficient administration, the needs of the King were more sympathetically treated by Parliament by generous grants.

Under Edward IV a new form of revenue was discovered, known as "benevolences"—a gift to the King in the form of charity but later by force—a sort of forced loan. Another form under this Yorkist King was the collection of fines for the violation of old statutes long regarded as dead, statutes such as America's ancient statutes long regarded as dead, statutes such as America's ancient blue laws, never repealed, but not regarded. One of the oldest forms of tax in this reign referred to the selling of kisses, as told by the chronicler, Hall. The death of Edward IV in his forty-first year, and the twenty-second year of his reign, left the throne to his young son, Edward V, who was not permitted to occupy the high position. He was murdered in the tower and the throne was seized by his uncle, his father's brother, Richard III, known as "crookback", who was later slain on the field of Bosworth, in 1485, the third year of his reign. At this time an important statute was enacted by Parliament against the recent new tax of benevolences, denounced as "extortions against the laws of God and man, and in jeopardy of life."

and man, and in jeopardy of life."

Before leaving Henry IV, mention should be made of his methods used too frequently in modern times, where, through forced loans to secure needs, steps are taken, the retracing of which cannot be safely resorted to, without dishonor to the nation, or at least great confusion to the country. Not unlike the experience in the United States, much in the public mind today, where the administration takes steps, and enacts legislation, not within constitutional authority, and then sets up the defense and claim that the Supreme Court cannot and must not hand down a decision adverse because of the confusion such judgment would involve verse, because of the confusion such judgment would involve, Henry, back in the fifteenth century, upon his own authority, made what were termed "forced loans", upon the pledge that they made what were termed "forced loans", upon the pledge that they would be paid by a subsequent Parliament, which caused the chronicler of the day to note: "They had to be paid as they had no remedy." The necessity for finding new sources of revenue, and the age-long conflict between the spenders and the burden-bearers, supply the chief events of constitutional history of any country. In England the contention grows out of the poverty of the King, on the one hand, and his needs, due to heavy expense, on the other.

The King's expenses as detailed by the historian were of two sorts: ordinary and extraordinary. In the first category would be found his household and wardrobe, wages of public functionaries, the keeping of the marches, and of Callais, and the maintenance of public works. The navy is provided for out of tonnage and poundage, not considered the King's expenses necessarily. The expenses listed as extraordinary were those connected with the embassies, rewarding of old servants, provisions for royal buildings, for the stock of jewels and plates, for special commissions of judges, royal burdens for peace and justice, and especially ready resistance of invasions which were usually sudden and often unsuspected. It was a principle quite generally conceded that the pected. It was a principle quite generally conceded that the nation is bound to support the King in all things and in every way necessary to his estate and the dignity of the royal position not only as an individual but as a public servant and head of the people. The paramount question was, How to secure the money. In the main, the source of English revenue was in the lands, one-fifth of which was at one time owned by the In the main, the source of English revenue was in the lands, one-fifth of which was at one time owned by the King. But through gifts, restoration of lands forfeited, alienation, and gifts to servants of the Crown, grants to important suitors, and provisions for royal sons, greatly reduced the amount held by the King. Those who were called upon to pay for the King's needs claimed a right not only to know what and why those needs but also what and why the depletion of the King's profits, and to have some voice in both.

During the regime of the Houses of Lancaster, 1389 to 1461 (Henry IV, V, and VI), and of York, 1461 to 1485 (Edward IV, V, and Richard III), covering the unfortunate period of warring beand Richard III), covering the unfortunate period of warring between great families, there was adopted the plan of consulting with leaders, then termed "council", later to be known as the "cabinet", the basis of the modern English system of responsible ministry. The first council under Henry IV consisted of 12 spiritual and 12 temporal members, sworn to observe specified rules and to form a permanent council, removable only upon the vote of the majority. To these were to be added for a term of 1 year's service 4 spiritual and 4 temporal lords. The meeting of the council was to be attended by the chancellor and the judges, if desired.

This council considered questions.

This council considered questions of national policy, the control of bullion, fixing of prices, support of the navy, amendments to existing law, etc. Its power extended to the King's holdings and revenue needs. In time the council exercised sometimes great and sometimes small power, determined by the personality of the King whose appointees they were. If a powerful King like the Lancasterian, Henry IV, or the Yorkist, Edward IV, the influence of the council was small because overshadowed by the King. If, on the other hand, the King was weak, like the Lancasterian, Henry VI, or the Yorkist, Richard III, the council was the power in the kingdom. It will be recalled that in the time of Henry III, during his minority, he being 11 years old when he became King, a council was created as regents for the young King with a title, Rector Regis et Regni. It was composed of officials of the state—bishops, barons, and other counsellors. This was prior to 1295, the time of the "Model Parliament" of Edward I. The difference in status between the council of Henry III and that of Henry IV is the former became the basis of the modern Parliament, while the latter was the step to the modern cabinet or ministry. While the immediate question of commanding attention of the council was taxation, the jurisdiction soon grew to cover all questions of administration as a This council considered questions of national policy, the control jurisdiction soon grew to cover all questions of administration as a ministerial function responsive to the people rather than to the

Not infrequently great reforms are due to the repressive character of the ruler, such as Edward IV, declared by the historian, Stubbs, to be "the most vicious man England had seen since John, * * more cruel and bloodthirsty than any King England had ever known. There had been deeds of bloodshed under Edward II and Henry IV. The hand of Henry V had been heavy against his conspirators * * but Edward IV far outdid all that his forefathers and enemies put together had ever done." Yet out of this reign came what today is known as the most substantial government of history.

The ending of the reign of the house of York introduced the era of the powerful royal house of the Tudors, covering the period from 1485 to 1603. During this period of nearly 120 years there reigned Henry VII, Henry VIII, Edward VI, Mary I, and Elizabeth. It is the golden era of England from the point of view of mental activity, best expressed in the literature of that age. It showed great progress in the growth of commerce, enhanced by the discovery of new lands to be settled and developed. It was a time for new and more enlightened views in religion and spiritual values, of new thought in various realms of activity, all designed to lessen the conflict between King and people over Government policies and especially that of taxation. This ending of the conflict was also due to certain personal characteristics of English leadership under this famous house of the Tudors. Under Henry VII, whose reign extended from 1485 to 1509, there were called together seven Parliaments, mainly to supply grants for the King's needs at home and abroad. He revived the benevolences and also resumed the practice of collecting fines upon the breach of ancient statutes. He expanded the tax on trade to include a levy upon articles used in trade and even merchants' stocks, called the "new-found subsidy." The Parliament offered no resistance. Henry VIII, the far-famed king of many wives, employed new methods of procedure with Parliament. His early popularity with the people's representatives is indicated by Parliament's voting him for life, not to be taken as a precedent, tonnage and poundage and also the revival of the poll tax, so unpopular when first introduced. Henry VIII, in the language of the modern candidate, kept his ear close to the ground. To make sure of necessary funds and still hold the favor of the Parliament was his problem, which he quickly sensed. His plan included naming a strong personnel in his council, a good example of which was the first Woolsey, who was the vehicle of communication with Parliament and without emb was the vehicle of communication with Parlament and without embarrassment to the King. The practice approved by the Crown of separate meetings of the two houses and their agreement to be reached before the King was to be informed, so as to assure against royal influence or intimidation, was brutally violated by the appearance in person before the House of Commons of Woolsey, the pearance in person before the House of Commons of Woolsey, the King's representative with all the paraphernalia of royalty, including his maces, the great seal, his pole axes, his pillars, and cross, to demand £800,000 in 4-year payments—to the amount of one-fifth of all property, goods, and lands.

This intrusion upon the rights and privileges of the Commons was first met by ominous silence to the obvious disgust of the King's minister. Later the matter was discussed, resulting in but one decision, resentment against the arrogance of the intrusion. The cardinal later told the Commons he desired to reason with one decision, resentment against the arrogance of the intrusion. The cardinal later told the Commons he desired to reason with them, whereupon he was curtly informed that "it was the order of the House of Commons to hear and not to reason but among themselves." The next step was then taken to issue commissions to insure "benevolences", and to collect one-sixth from the lalty and one-fourth from the clergy. To this demand it was urged by Parliament that it was in violation of law, as Parliament had not consented. This was followed by outbreaks in many parts of the kingdom, which became so ominous that Henry, the politician he was, assumed to disapprove of the course that had been taken and placed the blame upon his minister, Woolsey. Upon his declaration that he "would not receive money save as an amiable grant" such as "benevolences", the Commons cited the statute of Richard II pronouncing such collections as unlawful. The King's court or judiciary, the arm of the sovereign, declared this statute without force as an enactment under a usurper. Here is an event in early English history showing the lack of independence in the British judiciary under Henry VIII. The King then resorted to the forcedloan channel, made under the obligation to have it repaid under funds supplied by a future Parliament. This act took place in the thirteenth year of his reign, and repeated in the thirty-fifth year, or 3 years before his death. This type of obligation gave the Commons their most serious problem. It made a debt created by the King's borrowings dependent upon a future Parliament to satisfy. It did not reach the question of the taxing power. When the loan matured the question would be asked, Can Parliament refuse to pay it? The chronicler of the times states "there was no remedy."

It was under or during the reign of Henry VIII that the clergy

It was under or during the reign of Henry VIII that the clergy was partially relieved of burdens which had been gradually fastened upon them. This relief is one of the direct results of the Reformation. There had grown up the exactions upon the clergy of the payment of first fruits demanded from members of certain ranks amounting to as much as a year's income from the beneficies. This was abolished by the act of 1532. Later certain collections made by order of the Pope for Rome's benefit were declared invalid, and in the Parliament of 1533 and 1534 parliamentary authority over clerical grants was confirmed. It was provided that the clergy should not enact ordinances without the consent of the King, including taxes. By the time of the Stuarts clerical taxes were treated the same as lay taxes, and could not, therefore, be confirmed except through act of Parliament. During the 38 years of the reign of Henry VIII, although frequent conflicts between King and Parliament arose, the status was not greatly changed, especially on the troublesome question of taxation. The historian notes that during the reign of the Tudors the tion. The historian notes that during the reign of the rudors the King usually had his way, and at times at the expense of Parliament, due to the general popularity of the ruler rather than the Henry's admitted shortcomings as a man were partly recom-pensed by his success in arms, in addition to the growing trade, which made up partly for the burdensome tax levy. At his death in 1547, at the age of 56, and in the thirty-eighth year of his reign, his son by Jane Seymour, Edward VI, became King at the age of 10. He reigned 6 years, and upon his death at 16 he was succeeded by his sister, Mary I, the daughter of Henry VIII by Catherine of Aragon. Mary reigned 5 years and was succeeded by her sister, Elizabeth, daughter of Henry VIII by Anne Boleyn. The chroniclers do not record anything of value in the reign of Edward VI or Mary I on the question of taxation. Both reigns were too brief to impress any personality upon their times. However, this is not the case of Elizabeth, who was crowned in 1558 and continued to reign 45 years, until 1603, when she died at the age of 70. Her reign is greatly colored by a strong personality and atlent for administration. She was charged as guilty of illegal actions from time to time, but her successes on behalf of her country were sufficient to avoid serious contention. On the question of taxation she added one new form, that of granting patents, securing monopoly, in many lines of invention, discovery, maufacturing, and commerce. The number of items enumerated as covered by such monopoly included articles of manufacture such as powder, glassware, iron products, and cards; articles of common use such as salt, vinegar, currants, starch, etc., articles of the mine, such as oil, lead, coal, etc. In time the question of monopoly came to the attention of the public and was openly discussed in Parliament on various occasions which induced the Queen to take notice, whereupon she notified Parliament of her intention of discontinuing some of the monopolies, modifying others, and none to be increased until by trial were proved for the good of the people.

Toward the close of her reign a conflict arose between the two the good of the people.

Toward the close of her reign a conflict arose between the two houses upon the question of where a tax measure is initiated. The Commons had long insisted that such bills must originate the Commons had long insisted that such bills must originate with them; the Lords saw nothing against their origination in the upper house, especially those which applied to the upper members. The Queen's reign and her popularity were highly augmented by the great victories over the Spanish Armada, which while it called for heavy taxation, revenue was not wanting, and did not wait upon a mere matter of where the tax should originate. Naturally the Lords would be more sympathetic and enthusiastic in response to her needs then the Commons. In due time the heavy burdens. to her needs than the Commons. In due time the heavy burdens became galling to the people, notwithstanding it was known that the Queen herself had furnished enormous amounts reaching the Queen herself had furnished enormous amounts reaching above the million mark measured in pounds. Upon new demands the Lords stood ready and so reported to the Commons. The latter, speaking through Sir Francis Bacon, resisted on the ground that taxes originating in the Lords were not in accord with either principle or practice. When the Lords appointed a committee to confer with the Commons, the latter refused by a vote of almost 2 to 1 to meet them. During the 45-year reign of Elizabeth, there was no lessening of parliamentary control over the much-disputed question of taxation, but the principle was woven into the mental fabric of what is now known as the "mind of the legislature", sufficient to meet the Stuart attempt of royal dictation, which will necessitate a Cromwell and later a Bill of Rights.

At the death of Elizabeth in 1603 we have James I, son of Mary, At the death of Elizabeth in 1603 we have James I, son of Mary, Queen of Scots, granddaughter of James IV and Margaret, daughter of Henry VIII, the first of the House of Stuart. This house introduces the theory of the divine right of kings. The unfortunate reign of the House of Stuart covered the period from 1603 to 1714, save the interregnum of the commonwealth headed by Oliver Cromwell covering the years from 1653 to 1660. It constitutes the most turbulent period in the history of the kingdom, due to the deadly conflict between King and Parliament. This conflict, which is coextensive with English history, especially since the time of the control by the House of Normandy, is marked by ups and downs, first the King, then Parliament, and vice versa, which reached a climax in 1649 in the execution of Charles I by order of Parliament. This conflict is read in the government of the people in the commonwealth; the restoration of Charles II, upon specific concession; and finally the revolution of 1688 followed by the adoption of the Bill of Rights, henceforth to be recognized as a part of the British Constitution. Constitution.

Constitution.

The contest over the divine-right theory began upon the coronation of James I. His was not an auspicious beginning. His religious convictions as well as his foreign status and propensities were not welcome to a large and growing element in England soon to be known as "Puritans", a term of derision when first applied, James let the public know his views of government and made it plain that, like one of his predecessors, he could do without a Parliament if he should so decide. The needs of royalty were matters of right to him, and not mere privileges. They were to be demanded, not requested. Parliament was more of a voluntary body to be tolerated by the crown. If he wanted it, he would call it at his leisure; and more than that, would dictate who was to compose it. compose it.

His first effort was to control its membership, which effort met His first effort was to control its membership, which effort met with decisive action of the Commons, who expressed their disapproval also of the King's position on the onerous taxes of benevolences and purveyances. In the King's own handwriting he assumed a better attitude and communicated with the Commons, in which he assured them "that our people should have no occasion of distaste." This conciliatory attitude won a grant of a levy. But in the next Parliament opposition again flared which was not so easily appeased, but which was augmented by the famous Bates case, in which the King won through a decision of a court composed of what in modern days would be called "yes" judges.

In England, as in all other countries, the Executive is never without support from those who are either holden to him or who are looking for favors, as well as from those who are a part of his administration, from which they are not free to differ. In spite of the Bates case, the heart of which was to free the King from the necessity of securing the assent of Parliament for needed taxation, the Commons held their ground and suffered dissolution at the heart of the King who governed for the next 20 months with the hands of the King who governed for the next 30 months with-out a Parliament, and until his financial situation compelled him to again call it.

The Commons again notified the King of their determination not to yield their widely recognized right conceded by all his predecessors, among them the most famous of the English kings. They went further and instead of relying as heretofore upon custom as a basis of their rights, they now demanded in confirmation of that custom an official recognition in the form of a statute to be enacted by Parliament just as any other law to be binding, not only on the people and the members of Parliament, but on the King as well. They proceeded to enact such a statute setting aside "all impositions set without the assent of Parliament to be abolished." Such a bill was at once passed in the House of Commons, but it was refused in the House of Lords. It must be here noted that the opposition in the Commons was not to any specific tax or any subsidy per se, but only to its imposition without the consent of Parliament. This fact explains why in hundreds of cases Parliament, having resisted the demand for a specific tax, later enacted it, but not until the King had recognized their rights on matters of taxation.

Their only contention was the recognition of the principle that the King could lay no tax without their assent, and further that the power to approve carried with it the right to disapprove or relact.

The King, reluctant to yield, again dissolved Parliament. He did not call another for 3 years. In the meantime he attempted to raise his necessary funds by a system of extortion through forced loans upon the security of the Great Seal, and also through the collection of fines by the agency of his famous star chamber court, to be augmented by sales of peerages and other devices. By 1614 he was again compelled, through the exigencies of a depleted treasury and want of funds, to call Parliament. By this time England had become aware of the trend of a Stuart policy, sufficiently so that when the Parliament was elected and convened it was overwhelmingly against the King and for the people's cause. This Parliament early in the session made a record of their rights on the subject of taxation. No amount of threat of dissolution sufficed James' prerogative. The Parliament having stood its ground was again dissolved 2 months after it had met. This Parliament was dubbed "the addled Parliament", by which name it has been known in English history.

James I, bent upon having his own way, and as an advocate of name it has been known in English history.

James I, bent upon having his own way, and as an advocate of the divine right theory of the sovereign, he refused to yield to his enemies, resorted to strong-arm methods, and proceeded to imprison some of his most distinguished subjects who had refused to comply with his demand for benevolences. One distinguished baron, whose offense was that he had quoted Magna Carta and the statute of Richard III as a defense against paying such a tax, was by order of James I cast in prison to serve during the King's pleasure.

After his vain attempt to rule without the Parliament, and despite the galling humiliation involved, he called his third Parliament and attempted to preserve his prerogative by chiding them as "spoilt children" and warned then "not to hunt after grievances * * deal with me as I deserve. I will leave nothing undone that becomes a just king if you deal with me accordingly." The Commons treated his chiding in no uncertain language by announcing officially that grants and grievances go together. Among the grievances stood the King's practices of monopolies and purveyances. Then this Parliament proceeded to extend its authority by reviving the power of impeachment, and thereby displayed its determination by impeaching no less a figure than the King's Chancellor, Francis Bacon, a lord of standing, who was found guilty of bribery. Again the Parliament was adjourned, but this time to meet later in the year, when the King hoped for better success. The report of the Crown's officers was made to the effect that the treasury was empty. Events proved that this was a matter After his vain attempt to rule without the Parliament, and dethat the treasury was empty. Events proved that this was a matter on which the Commons would not be hurried.

In the adjourned Parliament the question of free speech arose. It grew out of the imprisonment of Sir Edwin Sandys for something he had said not appreciated by the King. This protest on behalf of free speech so offended King James that on the day it was presented he dissolved Parliament and sent for the journal, and with sented he dissolved Parliament and sent for the journal, and with his own hands and in bad temper tore out the page containing the protest. The Parliament nevertheless was again called, but before the date of assembling James dissolved it and denounced members who had questioned his right of prerogative, and further demonstrated his determination by imprisoning no less a figure than Sir Edwin Coke and several others. These events disclosed the extent to which royal prerogatives under the divine-right theory had gone, and it also indicated the speed by which events were traveling, looking to a crisis to be not long delayed if the course is not changed.

The House of Lords, for years suspicious of the aggression of the Commons, and naturally more responsive to royal requests, were now fully awake to what was pending. This is disclosed by their attitude on the grants for the Palatine War, which were conditioned on its payment to commissioners to be appointed by the Commons and to be expended by them under the direction of the council of war, to insure that the money so voted would be applied to the naval and military establishments. By March 1625, at the time of the death of James I, it was fairly well understood throughout England that the autocracy of a divine right adherent could not succeed, notwithstanding the powerful hold upon the mass mind of the English people in support of kingship. A survey of the reign of James I makes it easy to understand why the Duc de Sully pronounced James I the "wisest fool in Europe."

Upon the death of the first Stuart King, his son was crowned as pronounced James I the "wisest fool in Europe."

Upon the death of the first Stuart King, his son was crowned as Charles I. He was 24 at the time of his coronation. Being in entire sympathy with the divine-right doctrine of his father, having closely observed his contests with his Parliament for the 22 years of his reign, Charles I was forewarned, but poorly equipped, for what awaited him and his efforts in arbitrary and dictatorial administration. Tunnage and poundage had ever been regarded as revenue for conduct of foreign relations, to defray war expenses, and hence usually not only granted when desired but frequently for the life of the King requesting this particular tax.

Charles' first Parliament, instead of granting tunnage and Charles' first Parliament, instead of granting tunnage and poundage for life, limited it by act of the Commons. However, this action was not agreed to by the Lords. This course of the Commons was ominous to the new King. He, through his chancellor, communicated his needs to the Commons and peremptorily demanded answer without delay. Whereupon the Commons proceeded to take their own good time. The King expressed his resentment by an immediate dissolution, which indicated that the fight which had raged throughout the father's career was now on in earnest in the son's reign. Six months later Charles I summoned his second Parliament to answer to his needs. Instead of considering the King's needs, for which they were specifically called, the Commons proceeded to inquire into the conduct of the King's favorite, the Duke of Buckingham.

The King was so enraged that in a storm of bad temper he threatened the members for the unwarranted assumption of authority over matters not of their concern. Here, as in preceding contests, the issue between King and Parliament was not whether the funds should be supplied; on the other hand, the needs were generally conceded as the very basis of the existence of govern-ment. The persistent issue was how the funds were to be levied, how much, and upon whose authority. In the early days the Crown claimed all power, both of legislation and administration. Gradually he was compelled to concede legislation upon the recommendation and approval of his council, a body of his own choosing. At a later date the council had to be chosen from members of Parliament, and still later Parliament demanded as the next step its own approval, to which another and the next logical step was the power of removal through impeachment—a power employed in the Lancastrian and Yorkist regimes in 1386 power employed in the Lancastrian and Yorkist regimes in 1386 and again in 1450, given here as mere citations of the exercise of such power. From these citations it is easily seen that Charles the First's Parliament was well within historical precedent when it proposed to investigate Buckingham; so it will be noted that while his second Parliament made grants, not however what the King requested, but what in their judgment were warranted, they notwithstanding still retained their position upon their control of taxes which now they extended to the investigation of the King's favorites.

Grants under such conditions were viewed by the King as worse than no grants. In spite of the deep conviction of the King on what he regarded as clear violation of his prerogatives, the Parliament added to his discomfiture the additional offense of Parliament added to his discomiture the additional offense of refusal to make necessary grants until grievances were acted upon, including those against Buckingham. Again the King resorted to his royal prerogative of dissolution. In his dire need of funds, which he placed upon the defense of the realm and the nation's honor in its war with Spain, he believed himself justified and safe in renewing the old forced-loan system of benevolences. To this in renewing the old forced-loan system of benevolences. To this was added a new source of revenue devised by his advisers, among them a Judge Noy; the new tax to be known as "ship money", which is to play a large part in future events. To make sure if possible of nullifying all opposition to this new revenue policy, both within and without official life, the King decided upon repressive measures, among others, the dismissal of officers, the quartering of soldiers on private grounds, and in pressing citizens into military and naval service. On this plan the King was doomed to disappointment.

In spite of this source of revenue the demands incident to the foreign wars with Spain and France were too great and necessitated the King for the third time calling his Parliament. Despite tated the King for the third time calling his Parliament. Despite his great needs, he did not show a conciliatory attitude, but on the other hand, he aroused powerful feeling by his declaration that "none here but know that common danger is the cause of this Parliament, and supply at this time is the chief end of it." He further declared: "If you should not do your duty in contributing what the estate needs, I must, in discharge of my conscience, use those other means which God has put into my hands to save that which the follies of some particular men may otherwise hazard to lose." The intensity aroused by this royal threat was not relieved by the follow-up of his chief spokesman, who supplemented the King's statement with an additional threat, ending: "Remember His Majesty's admonition. I say, remember ending: "Remember His Majesty's admonition. I say, remember

Far from being intimidated, this threat was immediately met by a resolution of the Commons on the subject of grievances and extortions in the following language: "No freeman ought to be committed or detained in prison or otherwise restrained by demand of the King or privy council or any other save in pursuance of law." The resolution further stated: "That the ancient and undoubted right of every freeman is that he hath full and absolute property in his goods and estate that no tax, tallage, loan, benevolence, or other like charge ought to be commanded or levied by the King or his ministers without common consent of Parliament."

The issue was clearly drawn. The King had shown his mettle in two preceding Parliaments, which he had dissolved as recalci-trant, which had failed to compel obedience to his command.

in two preceding Parliaments, which he had dissolved as recalcitrant, which had failed to compel obedience to his command. The Commons, fully aware of the King's intention and equally clear in their own rights, proceeded to appeal to the nation to set before the country at large a declaration of these rights, which took the form not of a prayer but a statute and is known in history as the "Petition of Rights." It was drafted by the famous Edward Coke, who, among others, had already suffered imprisonment as punishment for his utterances upon the rights of Englishmen. At first the sting of this unheard-of audacity was ignored, and answer was evaded, which was laid to the influence of the King's favorite, who was subject to impeachment.

To prevent the serious possibility involved, now obvious to the King, he signed the famous Petition of Rights. It will here be noted that Charles I, the greatest exponent of the divine right of the King, and the greatest opponent of parliamentary meddling with the royal prerogative, signed a statute presented to him by his greatly despised Parliament, thereby extending parliamentary control over taxation as no measure ever before presented had contemplated; and by this act denying to the King powers some of which in some form or another had been exercised by all the Kings before him. This famous statute declared: "That no person hereafter be committed to make or yield any gift, loan, benevolence, tax, or such like charge, without common consent by act of Parliament, and that none be called to make answer, or take such oath, or to give attendance, or be confined, or otherwise molested or disquieted concerning the same or for refusal thereof * * and that Your Majesty will be pleased to remove the said soldiers and marines, and that your people may not be burdened in time to come."

The King and his "yes" counsellors were hard put to find a

The King and his "yes" counsellors were hard put to find a loophole in this famous petition. They thought they had found it by confining it to domestic affairs. In their judgment it did not cover foreign affairs, which were conceded to be diplomatic, and as such for the King. Therefore, the King in their judgment still controlled tunnage, poundage, ship money, etc. The King lost no time to repair his fortune and declared he never would give up control over these mentioned sources. When he was informed that the Commons were going to resist this contention he immediately proceeded to prorogue Parliament before the protest could be handed to him, thereby nullifying its legal effect.

He continued to levy the above-mentioned taxes, and to enforce collections by imprisoning those who refused to pay, including at last one member of the House of Commons, Henry Rolls. This action caused a commotion which could not be overlooked or discounted by the King, who immediately summoned the two Houses action caused a commotion which could not be overlooked or discounted by the King, who immediately summoned the two Houses to meet him at Whitehall, where he lost no time in rescinding his former statement to never give up tunnage, etc. He informed the members that he had meant to continue the levy only until Parliament requested him to discontinue it. He had been wrongly led to believe this attitude on his part would insure the favorable action of Parliament to give him these taxes for life, as had been done with most of his predecessors; but on the contrary, when such motion was made it was immediately shelved for the consideration of the more important issue, the breach of the rights of Parliament by the arrest of Rolls, one of its members; whereupon those charged with that violation were summoned.

The King thereupon informed the house of his unwillingness to have officers catechised as their acts were his own. The Commons then took a recess until the 2d of March. On the named day, and upon resuming the session, the King ordered the recess to be continued a week. Against this order the House protested, and backed their protest by defeating the motion of adjournment by an overwhelming majority. The speaker of the House, feeling it his duty to respect the order of the King, started to leave the chair but was at once forcibly put back into his seat by members of the House. Resolutions defining the rights of the House, prepared by Sir John Eliot, were presented to the House. Neither the speaker nor the clerk would put them to a vote, whereupon Rolls, the member who had been imprisoned, read the resolutions and put the vote, which was carried by acclamation. Then the motion to adjourn to the 10th of March was put and carried. The King's guard was already at the doors of Parliament to enforce adjournment. This contest between King and Parliament now reaching The King thereupon informed the house of his unwillingness to guard was already at the doors of Parliament to enforce adjournment. This contest between King and Parliament now reaching to physical conflict was on the question of taxation. The Eliot resolution declared any person advising tunnage, etc., without the consent of Parliament, was a capital enemy to the kingdom, and any person who willingly paid such tax should be reputed a betrayer of the liberty of England and an enemy of the same. The King's reply was the dissolution of Parliament the day it met. In his own words, he refused to convene the "vipers" again. From 1629 to 1640 Charle I ruled without Parliament. These 11 years were the seed time of great changes to be wrought not only on taxation but upon a new philosophy of government which in time. taxation but upon a new philosophy of government which, in time, was to transfer all powers of legislation as well as administration was to transfer all powers of legislation as well as administration to Parliament.

To Charles I, Parliament was little more than a supernumerary body to be called if desired, or not, just as the King pleased. Since it was originally called by the King's will, so by his will he could avoid calling it. Back in the time of Edward IV he was informed Parliaments were dispensed with. He was advised, notwithstanding an old statute of Edward III required Parliament to meet once a year, that no Parliament sat from January 1465 to June 1467, or between May 1468 and October 1472, nor between King and Parliament, as recorded in the history of England during the reign of Edward IV, upon no grievances such as now suffered, Charles I decided to rule without this body.

To do this he must depend upon his ability to collect funds from his people by voluntary consent if possible, but by force if necessary. On the one hand, he attempted to persuade by an appeal to patriotism and flattery; on the other, he dealt drastically as with enemies, imprisoning not only Eliot, the author of the resolution put over the King's protest, but many other prominent personages including House members. He formulated his tax plans covering all forms heretofore tried, including all which had been forbidden save upon the approval of Parliament. His methods of extortion were enforced through the strong arm of the jail, or by fine, or both. He broadened the scope of ship money to include inland as well as coast people, through writs issued by the King upon the advice of his privy council, the justification of which was placed upon the necessity of national defense against foreign foes such as the Dutch Republic, and enemies to the North. Exactions of 1635 and 1636 were so heavy that they provoked loud protests from many and important sources. The King to strengthen his case, succeeded in securing a decision from his high judicial officers that "when the good and safety of the kingdom in general is concerned and the whole kingdom in danger (of which his Majesty is the only judge), the charge of the defense ought to be borne by all the realm in general." To further strengthen his claim the King had the matter considered by the judges of the Exchequer who, by a unanimous vote, supported him in his contention. Then followed the famous John Hampden episode, so familiar to the students of constitutional history.

This quiet countryman, then soon to be made famous, had refused to pay the ship money; being an inhabitant of an inland country. He was accordingly summoned before the court. The trial became a State case. On each side appeared the most famous counsel of the empire. The decision was divided seven to five in favor of the Crown, against Hampden, on the stated ground as delivered by the head of the court that "No act of Parliament can bar a King of his regality * * * acts of Parliament to take away his royal power in the defense of his kingdom are void. They are void acts of Parliament to bind the King, not to command the subjects, their persons, and goods, and I say, their money, too."

In spite of this judicial victory the King's situation was de-This quiet countryman, then soon to be made famous, had re-

In spite of this judicial victory the King's situation was deplorable, daily becoming more so. The uprising in Scotland on behalf of liberty, a new source of danger because it was bound to be reflected among the English yeomenry, as well as all the people, who were by this time greatly alarmed and were becoming thoroughly aroused. After 11 years' ruling without a Parliament the King in his extremity decided to call his fourth Parliament to meet, April 1640. While he had some support in the House of Lords, the Commons showed itself not so much interested in the King's needs as in such conduct as the Hampden case, which they began at once to investigate, whereupon Charles I dissolved it. King's needs as in such conduct as the Hampden case, which they began at once to investigate, whereupon Charles I dissolved it after 3 weeks' session, to meet again in 6 months. This Parliament is known in history as the "Long Parliament." As a body it strongly, if not defiantly, opposed the royal policy as practiced by their King. It opened the session by beginning impeachment proceedings against Strafford, Laud, Finch, the King's favorites, and the judges who sat in the ship-money case. It proceeded also to undo much that had been done in their absence, in the way of releasing prisoners and remitting fines, which had been and the judges who sat in the ship-money case. It proceeded also to undo much that had been done in their absence, in the way of releasing prisoners, and remitting fines, which had been assessed by the King through the Star Chamber institution, which they proceeded to abolish. In voting supplies for the King it repeated the wording of the "Petition of Rights"; they prescribed a heavy penalty on all who violated these rights in collecting taxes not consented to by Parliament. They reversed the findings against Hampden, and declared tunnage exacted by the Crown as illegal, and exempted persons from being put on trial for refusal to pay "ship money."

Hallam, in his comment upon the work of the "Long Parliament", declares that their statute on taxation is the last in the history of England which ended the centuries-long contest between King and Parliament over the rightful control of taxation. The statute is as follows: "It is declared and enacted that it is, and hath been the ancient right of the subjects of this realm, that no subsidy, custom, impost, or other charge whatsover ought or may be laid or imposed upon any merchandise exported or imported by subjects, denizens, or aliens without common consent in Parliament." Hallam further says: "This is the last statute that has been found necessary to restrain the Crown from arbitrary taxation."

It was a complete victory over Charles I, who set out by hook or crook to break down the power of Parliament in its control over taxation, and who because of these and other arbitrary acts ended his career on the block by the order of the same Parliament he had undertaken to control on matters of taxation. No subsequent effort after this tragic ending to levy taxes without the authority of Parliament is recorded. The revolution of 1688 called forth the famous Bill of Rights of 1689. In these resolutions is repeated the prerogative of Parliament and of Parliament, or longer time or in other manner than the same is or shall be granted is illegal." By this decree becoming a m

Henceforth, the conflicts over taxation were within the legislative bodies, first as between the two Houses, resulting in complete control as well as jurisdiction of the House of Commons, where it is lodged today. The House of Lords, unlike the United States Senate, has no power of amendment, not even is the approximately approximately

The historic conflicts over taxation such as that involved in the American revolution arose out of the claim of the rights to tax the colonies without their consent, a contention which at first was confined to tax burdens, but later extended to the demand of the American colonies that there should be no legislation affecting the colonies without their representation. A denial of this principle lost to England the American colonies, and led to an entirely new rule upon taxing, and even legislating for British colonies.

The English system on taxation today operates under an airtight control. The formula: "The Crown demands money, the Commons grant it, and the Lords assent to the grant."

grant it, and the Lords assent to the grant."

The Crown's demand may be in the (1) speech from the throne; (2) by message; (3) by demand for a credit vote; or (4) by presenting an estimate. The Commons do not vote supplies not requested by the Crown. The Commons follow strict rules of procedure; first it must be considered in the committee of the whole house, which must sanction the grant. In this committee of supply greater freedom of debate is permitted, and no bill creating a charge on the treasury can be brought in until considered in this committee and reported favorably. This committee may recommend either favorable or unfavorable action, amend by adding to or subtracting from, and when it is reported the House acts on the report; if favorably, the bill becomes a grant. Then it is taken up by the ways and means committee. Even though the House has passed the grant, it does not become a charge upon the Treasury passed the grant, it does not become a charge upon the Treasury until further steps are taken. The next step is to provide funds to meet the grant through the ways and means committee. When the committee of supply has authorized the grants and the ways and means committee has authorized the necessary drafts on the consolidated funds to meet the grant, the Commons is ready to consider the bills to give the force of law, without which the action of the committee is inoperative.

The next step is that of appropriations. After all these steps have been taken, further formalities are required before the funds reach the paymaster general for credit or necessary payments for service—necessary machinery to insure against any misapplication of funds as designated by Parliament. These grants with the sanction of law to the Crown upon his demand must be applied as specifically designated by the resolution of the Commons. This machinery does not differ in the main from that employed by the United States in handling disbursements. What is never permachinery does not differ in the main from that employed by the United States in handling disbursements. What is never permitted in the British system is under the guise of emergencies by the use of the lump-sum appropriation the authorizing body surrenders to the spending body complete control of the application of these funds. In the United States prior to the innovation of making lump-sum appropriations Congress exercised control. Soon after the employment of this discretionary power by the spending departments was inaugurated, deficits became the order of the day, until a statute was enacted making it a purishable offense to create until a statute was enacted making it a punishable offense to create a deficit without authority from Congress, the authorizing power. The practice was corrected by the adoption of the budgetary legislation.

The practice was corrected by the adoption of the budgetary legislation.

Since the depression the old practice is again renewed in spite of the rigid control by the Budget requirements by the authorizing body again turning over to the spending body full control without limitation through the old lump-sum device, whereby not only many of the old errors have been renewed but with the blanket authority given to the Executive by a virtual abdication of Congress, legislative functions are employed, whereby the administration, through various Government-incorporated agencies, enters upon various kinds of business. During the last year the Executive scheme to deal with the depression included many newly created Government corporations which embarked upon all sorts of business, mining, manufacturing, commercial brokerage without further authority than blanket control of the depression delegated to the Executive, with whatever funds thought by those in charge necessary, allocated from the lump-sum appropriation. The head of Public Works informs the country if the Gravelly Point is the place for the Washington airport, he will be glad to allocate from the emergency funds what is necessary to complete it, without a line of authority from the authorizing body that such application of funds should be made.

He also states that if New York City decides to build a municipal power plant, he will allocate so much money for the purpose, with no further authority than hands-off policy of the new deal.

It is well to contrast this practice with Great Britain's control of the tax question.

RÉSUMÉ

The struggle in Great Britain's history over the rightful authority of the taxing power, as between the King and Parliament, runs through the centuries. Under the four Kings of the House of Normandy, 1066 to 1154, the authority resided with the King. Under the eight Kings of the House of the Plantagenets, 1154 to 1399, the early Kings levied taxes in consultation within council—at first chosen by and representative of the King. Later this council was to be approved by Parliament, which was gradually growing in importance on tax matters.

Under the House of Lancaster, 1399 to 1461 (Henry IV, V, and VI), and the House of York, 1461 to 1485 (Edward IV, V, and VI), taxation must be approved by Parliament. Under the House of Tudor, 1485 to 1603, the five rulers of this period recognized generally taxation a parliamentary function not only demanding this approval but the right of origination in the House of Commons.

Under the House of Stuart, 1625 to 1714, a reactionary theory of the "divine right of kings" was announced and steps to enforce it.

This long struggle ended with the Petition of Rights and the execution of Charles I, to be further confirmed by the Bill of Rights of 1689.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Chaffee, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 5913) making appropriations for the military and nonmilitary activities of the War Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1936, and for other purposes, requested a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. Parks, Mr. Blanton, Mr. McMillan, Mr. Snyder, Mr. Dockweiler, Mr. Bolton, and Mr. Powers were appointed managers on the part of the House at the conference.

The message also announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 5255) making appropriations for the Departments of State and Justice and for the Judiciary, and for the Departments of Commerce and Labor, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1936, and for other purposes, requested a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. OLIVER, Mr. McMILLAN, and Mr. BACON were appointed managers on the part of the House at the conference.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED

The message further announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the enrolled bill (H. R. 330) for the relief of Sophie de Soto, and it was signed by the President pro tempore.

THE PITTSBURGH-PLUS PLAN

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, out of order I ask leave to introduce a bill and to make a very brief statement about

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. BANKHEAD. On April 26, 1921, the Federal Trade Commission filed a complaint against the United States Steel Corporation and other steel companies requiring them to show cause why they should not cease and desist from the Pittsburgh-plus plan for fixing prices of steel. A brief amici curiae was submitted and an oral argument made by counsel for the States of Illinois, Iowa, Minnesota, and Wisconsin under special legislative authority of each State, these States acting on behalf of themselves and the other 28 States of the United States, making up the membership of the Associated States Opposing Pittsburgh-plus, viz Alabama, Arizona, Colorado, Delaware, Florida, Georgia, Idaho, Indiana, Kansas, Kentucky, Louisiana, Maine, Massachusetts, Michigan, Mississippi, Missouri, Montana, Nebraska, Nevada, New Mexico, North Dakota, Oklahoma, Oregon, Rhode Island, South Carolina, South Dakota, Utah, and Wyoming.

After a protracted investigation, the Federal Trade Commission on July 21, 1924, entered an order directing the parties to the proceeding to cease and desist from quoting for sale in the course of interstate commerce their products at Pittsburgh-plus prices, and from quoting for sale or selling in the course of interstate commerce their rolled-steel products upon any other basing point than that from where the products are manufactured or from which they are shipped. Thereafter, on September 27, 1924, the respondents to the complaint filed with the Federal Trade Commission a statement agreeing to comply with the cease-and-desist order made by the Commission.

Following that action, another and different system was established by the steel manufacturers for making prices which did not comply with the purpose and spirit of the order of the Commission, and consumers never had the advantage of free and open competition throughout the country in the matter of prices for steel.

When the steel code was adopted, the Pittsburgh-plus plan was reinstated in full, with some local modifications.

I am introducing a bill to make unlawful what is known as the "Pittsburgh plan." The bill, in addition to terminating basing-point prices and consideration of transportation and delivery charges, also requires manufacturers engaged in interstate commerce to make the same price on the same quality and grade of goods offered to all customers, a differential being authorized between wholesalers and retailers. This provision is intended to terminate the unfair trade practice of making prices based upon quantity purchases and financial strength of buyers. This wide-spread practice has been one of the chief factors in the growth of the chainstore system. It enables the wealthy and the strong to compete in an unfair way with the great mass of retail merchants in the United States. It is a practice which makes the strong stronger and the weak weaker, and is tending to the establishment of monopoly in the mercantile trade of the country. It is not of special benefit to consumers, because the price concessions made to the strong, constituting about one-tenth of the retail stores, are balanced and overcome by higher prices than are justified to nine-tenths of the retail merchants.

In view of the wide-spread effect the passage of this bill would have upon commerce and trade throughout the country, I ask unanimous consent to have the bill printed in the RECORD immediately following this statement. The bill may be referred to as the Equal Rights Trade Act.

Representative Huddleston is introducing the same bill in the House.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the bill will be printed in the RECORD at this point.

The bill (S. 2211) to regulate and maintain an open market for the sale of goods in interstate commerce, to supplement existing laws against combinations in restraint of trade and discrimination in prices, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

A bill to regulate and maintain an open market for the sale of goods in interstate commerce, to supplement existing laws against combinations in restraint of trade, and discrimination in prices, and for other purposes

Be it enacted, etc. That it is hereby declared to be the purpose and policy of this Act to supplement the existing laws against monopoly, restraint of trade, and price discrimination, and to eliminate certain devices which have been shown to promote those

Mr. KING. Mr. President-

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. KING. I should like to ask the Senator from Alabama if he knows that the President of the United States a long time ago submitted to the Federal Trade Commission and to the N. R. A., for investigation and report, the question of the activities and monopolistic propensities of the Steel Trust. The Federal Trade Commission prepared a report, which it filed with the President, as I am advised; but the N. R. A. has not filed a report, though the time within which it should be filed has expired. I may say to the Senator that the N. R. A. approves of these monopolistic practices, and of the Pittsburgh-plus plan; and perhaps the only way in which we can secure relief is through the bill which the Senator has introduced, possibly to change the policies of the N. R. A.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Certainly.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I think the Senator can secure valuable information in regard to the matter dealt with by the bill he just introduced; and I ask the Senator if he will not 1 introduce a resolution asking the Federal Trade Commission to report to the Senate or send to the Senate any information they have as the result of their investigation of the question of the Pittsburgh-plus plan and the steel

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator that a short time ago the Federal Trade Commission did make a report to the Senate, which was published as a Senate document.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I understand that was a year ago. Mr. BANKHEAD. I do not know the exact time, but it is practically current, up-to-date. That is available to the Senator

Mr. BANKHEAD. I will say to the Senator that before the codes were adopted the Pittsburgh-plus plan had not been abandoned in good faith, and legislation was then needed without any codes, before any codes were adopted, because we were not getting the benefit of the orders of the Federal Trade Commission.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the first committee amendment.

Mr. NORRIS obtained the floor.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, as the State of Illinois is referred to in the list of States recounted by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. Bankhead], it naturally is very much interested in the result. It is at this point that I want to make a distinct observation as to the views expressed by the Senator from Idaho, our esteemed friend [Mr. Borah], and that supported by the views stated by the eminent Senator from Utah [Mr. King]. It cannot be denied that there have been indications of these monopolies and the practices of them, as described by both able Senators; but, Mr. President, it is not fair to leave upon the public mind, as I see the situation, that these wrongs are created by the codes, or that by the codes themselves they are tolerated and encouraged. We must tell the truth in order that the public may not be discouraged to the point of hopelessness in recovery.

It is not in the codes or in the legislation, or the provision created by the law of the codes, but it is to the habit and conduct on the part of those to whom have been committed the administration of these codes and their methods of application, and their methods both of ruling and of administration in executing the provisions, to which we should specifically address ourselves as responsible for action complained of. This is due that we may not wrong the codes and do injustice to the President or the administration when it is struggling to come to the relief of the people. If these masters of commercial and financial power have been able, sir, through personal influence or combined machination to control and direct those who administer the codes to the point where they could visit these hardships and injuries, through monopoly, upon the public-such men, whoever they are, these masters of finance, and those acting with themshould be indicted under the law known as the "common law of conspiracy" prevailing in every State of the Union, barring one or two, serving under civil law, and submit these offenders as guilty of confederation. Under the Federal law they may be indicted. If my eminent friend from Idaho [Mr. Borah] is correct that there has been some suspension, if there be such, of the Sherman Antitrust Law, there is a provision in the Federal law of conspiracy making criminal equal rights and immunities under that law of conspiracy.

I therefore rise to observe in connection with this matter which touches my State, to which allusion is made by the Senator from Alabama, that the time is now ripe to let us place the guilt where it is, where it should be, and let us proceed against the guilty sources, whoever they are, by whatever process of law is at the command of the Government, or of the citizen, as has been done as called to our attention by the public press. I refer to the private lawsuit against the Aluminum Co., in which under the Sherman antitrust law we observed that there was pressed a suit in which a verdict for more than a million dollars was obtained in the last few days. This was for a violation of law which came within the meaning of the Sherman antitrust law. The punishment of those who continue to conspire to commit the offense as described by the Senators from Alabama and Idaho can be secured through invoking the Sherman antitrust law.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, the report filed by the Federal Trade Commission sometime ago clearly discloses that the code had been prepared for the steel industry and the code had been approved by the steel industry.

This code permitted the Pittsburgh-plus system to be continued and maintained. The report disclosed that the administrative authority of the code was what is known as the "Steel Institute", and the Steel Institute is made up of representatives of the leading steel organizations or industries. The report further disclosed that the code authority not only permitted the Pittsburgh-plus practice to continue but permitted an increase in prices in some instances up to 800 percent.

That could not happen except under the protection of the code. If we would restore the antitrust laws and enforce them, we could more easily protect the interest of the public.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, may I ask if my able friend the Senator from Idaho, in using the words "code authority", means the authority contained and expressed in the terms of the code or those who are administering the code? Mr. BORAH. I mean the authority selected by the code to execute the code.

Mr. LEWIS. I answer respectfully and say that I have asserted that the offense to which this Government or the people should address themselves is on the part of those to whom are committed the administration of the law and who allow it to be so abused, if it be true that a wrong may be inflicted under it, and that we should not hold the President of the United States or the officer, Mr. Richberg, and the system known as the "code", a system of law devised to relieve the people, responsible as though these officers created the code as a system of persecution, when it is perfectly apparent that it is those who have administered it, for whatever purpose it may be, as referred to by the learned Senator from Idaho, as an aggregation or combination of men who have been able to influence action. Whatever may be the source, it is these who have the authority who, if they continue this practice, should be weeded out and other men, fit for the trust, should be installed in their places.

Mr. BORAH. The Senator from Idaho has said nothing about the President of the United States; he has at no time indicated that the President of the United States was responsible for these matters; but I did say when the N. R. A. was enacted that big business would write the codes and that big business would execute the codes; and big business has written the codes and big business is executing the codes.

Mr. LEWIS. The "big business" to which my able friend from Idaho referred is not above the law. This is an instance where the law must announce her policy, in the words of Bishop Hooker, "the least as feeling her care, and the greatest not exempt from her power." I suggest to my friend from Idaho that if evidence can be presented here from people affected and with a complete compendium obtained under the information added by the suggestion of the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS], the allegations can be proved, they should be taken to a grand jury, either a Federal grand jury or a State grand jury, wherever jurisdiction those who shall deny or defeat another in the enjoyment of | may exist, and proper punishment meted out to those who gather themselves together merely because of power and assume, in criminal design, to confederate and inflict upon the people destructions such as the able Senator from Idaho in his speech has described.

Mr. BORAH. The trouble in taking such a case to the grand jury and indicting somebody is that when the party indicted should come into court he would plead that he was acting by authority of the law of the United States, otherwise known as a code adopted under the authority of the Congress of the United States. His defense would be rather complete.

Mr. LEWIS. To which the answer must be that if the Sherman antitrust law prevails, as is apparently true according to the report we had yesterday of a case in a civil tribunal which sustained the law against Mr. Mellon and his company, therefore the law prevails to the degree that it cannot be urged that a mere provision of a code inconsistent therewith is superior to the law.

I differ from my able friend from Idaho, recognizing his great ability as a lawyer, that the Sherman Antitrust Act is suspended. I insist, respectfully, that it remains the law, subject, however, to the instances where there has been the representation that there should be an exception based on such facts as appear to be not in violation of the law. I invite the Senator from Idaho to recall that from his presentation of a few days ago of the cases of the United States Supreme Court there was omitted from his memory that the Supreme Court of the United States, other than in the Standard Oil case and the tobacco case, in what is known as the "Steel case", found a way to set forth that before the law is considered violated the method of union which brought the individuals together to consummate their deed of achievement as against those who may be competing with them must appear to have been a deliberate and "unreasonable" one in business. Then followed the Supreme Court of the United States in the later coal cases, which came from West Virginia but a short while ago. Here was laid down by the Court the doctrine that where it can be established that the combination would have the effect of lessening expenses and overhead charges resulting finally in a less price for the goods to be consumed, such course is justified under the law. Theretofore, the attainment of such purposes is within the province of the code and evidently by the members of the code justified.

Mr. BORAH. I agree perfectly that the Supreme Court of the United States and the code authorities have frustrated the effect if not the letter of the Sherman antitrust law. I do not disagree with the Senator on that proposition. think, even if the Sherman antitrust law were restored, it would have to be strengthened, in view of the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States. But as the situation now is, it is impossible to prosecute such people as the Senator from Alabama complains of so long as they are protected by codes, as they are protected at this time. They are secure and may carry on their practices with impunity.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, in view of the bill just introduced by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] dealing with the steel industry and steel code, and in view of the remarks of the Senator from Illinois [Mr. Lewis] and the Senator from Idaho [Mr. Borah] relative to the steel code, and because the matter of the N. R. A. is before the Finance Committee, I shall for a few moments invite the attention of the Senate to a condition which exists in one of the other large industries of the country, the paper industry, in order to show the actual condition as it affects invested capital and the employment of labor and the wages of labor in that industry.

Last spring the Joint Committee on Printing called for bids for approximately $1,000,000 worth of paper. When the bids were opened we found there were 47 bids and that each bid was identical with every other bid. The price offered under the bids was 10 to 40 percent higher than the price of 1929. When the bidders were asked how they arrived at the identical price, whether they had come together and agreed upon the price, they said that under the open pricefixing regulation of the code every bidder had to make public his bid 5 days before the bids were opened, and when that was done any other bidder could amend his bid to meet whatever other bid he saw fit to meet.

As a result the bids were identical, but the prices were 10 to 40 percent higher than in 1929. When the bidders were asked why the price was so high compared with 1929 they said it was due to the high cost of labor under the code.

The committee adjourned its meeting and consulted the code authority to ascertain what was the wage scale in 1929 and what was the wage scale under the code. A memorandum was submitted which showed that the average man working in the industry in 1929 received at the end of the month $125, showing that in that year the average worker in the northern zone had at the end of the month in his pay envelop that much money. The same memorandum showed that under the code the average man working in the industry in the northern zone had at the end of the month $60 instead of $125.

As a result of that information the committee called on the administrator of the code to explain how this was carrying out the provisions and purposes which we were told the N. R. A. was called upon to accomplish—to increase purchasing power, to redistribute in a more equitable basis the income of the country. We asked him to explain how that could be done under a code and under regulations where the average man now had only $60 in his pay envelop at the end of the month instead of $125 as in 1929.

The explanation we received was that in 1929 the industry was working 75 percent capacity and under the code it was working only 50 percent capacity. The code administrator said that as production increases men will work longer hours and as a result will have a larger income and more money in their envelop at the end of the month. It was suggested that we assume the industry reaches to 100 percent production, the hourly wage being the same under the code as it was in 1929, but under the code a man could only work 40 hours a week or 160 hours a month. If the production of the industry should increase 100 percent all that a man could earn under that wage scale and under the code would be a little over $90 a month. That is all he could possibly earn and have in his pocket at the end of the month.

The administrator of the code authority was asked to explain how that would restore purchasing power and a more equitable distribution of income. His answer was, "We have put more men to work. We are giving more people labor and more people income." I asked the administrator, "How did you do it? You took work and income from one workingman to give to another on this basis: I have no job; the Senator from Illinois [Mr. Lewis] has a job; in order to give me a job and income, we cut down his working time and income. That is done in order that I shall have an income and have a job. That makes him support me. I am being supported and given an income at his expense. He being a workingman as I am, it makes the one workingman support the other workingman and makes the poor support the poor."

Industry under these regulations will receive from 10 to 40 percent more for their products than in 1929. When the administrator was asked why industry was entitled to such an increased income, he said, "Under the code they are prohibited from selling below cost of production. As production goes down, the cost of the finished product increases, the cost of production increases. When production goes down, the price goes up." Consequently, as the price goes up, less goods are sold and consequently production again decreases, and as production decreases the price again rises.

It is very clear that under such conditions we have a vicious circle, which will in time not only destroy the industry itself but which does not give more income to the average man working in industry; in fact, it gives him less. It makes the poor in the industry support the poor. While industry and capital invested may think that by charging 10 to 40 percent more than they received in 1929 they can carry the overhead fixed charges of overbuilt plants and overcapitalization, it seems to me it is repeating the policies which were practiced for 15 or 20 years prior to the depression and which were so potent in bringing about the depression.

The administrator did not say that this condition came as the result of his administration. He said, "I am only the administrator. You gentlemen wrote the law."

Mr. KING. Mr. President, in view of the statement of the Senator from Illinois [Mr. Lewis], in which he seems to blame the Administrator or anybody except the Executive, I desire to call attention to section 5 of the act to encourage national industrial recovery, and so forth. That section reads as follows:

While this title is in effect, or in the case of a license while section 4 (a) is in effect, and for 60 days thereafter, any code, agreement, or license approved, prescribed, or issued and in effect under this title, and any action complying with the provisions thereof taken during such period, shall be exempt from the provisions of the antitrust laws of the United States.

While title I may have expired by limitation, the code dealing with the steel code, and other codes, were adopted prior to the expiration of title I.

It would seem that under the section of the law just read the antitrust laws were to be suspended, at least during the period title I of the act was in force. I do not think it can be doubted that many of those who were advocates of the N. R. A. Act hoped that the antitrust laws would be repealed, and there are many facts available which prove that combinations in restraint of trade have been permitted under the act, and that monopoly has been fostered and is flourishing in many industries. Senators will remember when the N. R. A. Act was under consideration-and it was urged that amendments be incorporated making it clear that none of the antitrust laws were to be suspended, modified, or repealed-that strong opposition was aroused to such amendments. I believed at the time that there was a desire to give to the industries a rather free hand to engage in price fixing and in monopolistic control of commodities.

An examination of many of the codes will reveal, as I believe, that they permit evils at which the antitrust laws were aimed. It certainly cannot be claimed that the code authorities—those who administer the act—were ignorant of the monopolistic provisions of many of the codes. The N. R. A. Act will expire by limitation within a short time. Many representations are being made for its continuance, and I have no doubt that some of the strongest supporters of the movement to prolong the life of the act are those who are connected with big industries and who have been and will be benefited under codes which promote monopolistic control of industry.

WAR DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATIONS

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 5913) making appropriations for the military and nonmilitary activities of the War Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1936, and for other purposes, and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. COPELAND. I move that the Senate insist on its amendments, agree to the conference requested by the House of Representatives, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the President pro tempore appointed Mr. Copeland, Mr. Hayden, Mr. Sheppard, Mr. Norbeck, and Mr. Townsend conferees on the part of the Senate.

Mr. LEWIS. I again announce the absence of the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. Overton] and the Senator from Arkansas [Mrs. Caraway], occasioned by illness, and the absence of the Senator from Montana [Mr. Wheeler], who is necessarily detained from the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Ninety-one Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Typings in the chair). The question is on the first amendment of the committee, found on page 1, beginning in line 3.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President, some time during the course of the discussion of the pending joint resolution it will be necessary to call attention to certain features of it which were not fully presented when the subject was last before the Senate. I take this opening to mention certain aspects of the joint resolution which deserve special attention, in the hope that if the joint resolution should not be disposed of today, my remarks may be of more than immediate use to Members of the Senate, whether now present or absent.

My suggestions are not devoid of embarrassment, because, above all, I do not desire to oppose the slightest obstacle. but instead am eager to hasten the enactment of any measure which promises substantial relief or work relief. Indeed, I am one of the Members of the present Senate who would go further, if opportunity were afforded, to promote needed and valuable public works in this country as part of our recovery program.

A great many of the difficulties Congress has been encountering with respect to the pending joint resolution arise from confusion in the public mind, and perhaps in the minds of some Members of the Congress, over the proper distinction between relief and public works.

Before the present proposals were brought to the attention of the country in legislative form, it was announced that a program had been prepared by which the employable unemployed in the United States on the relief rolls would be given employment on public works, or through some form of work relief, and that the unemployables in the United States would be passed to the several States, to be cared for exclusively by those States.

Evidence taken before the committees of Congress which have lately considered social-security legislation indicates that no such clear distinction as those who announced that program hoped for can be drawn between unemployed and unemployables.

Indeed, the question whether or not an individual is employable largely depends on the opportunities for work presented to that individual. In addition, it will be foundalready we have had abundant evidence of this-that many of the States are wholly unprepared to deal with unemployables within their boundaries, and that from now on, as heretofore, assistance to many States for an indeterminate time must necessarily continue to be given by the Federal Government to meet these needs.

Broadly speaking, we ought to do in the future as we have been doing: We should pass legislation which will give aid to the States in meeting their unemployment problems, and continue and enlarge our substantial program of Public

When one turns to the joint resolution before us, I think he must be impressed by the fact that the Appropriations Committee of the Senate, acting on the measure that passed the House, dealt summarily with the opening section. It did so first by striking out subdivisions (1), (2), (3), and (4) of the opening paragraph, which specified the original broad purposes of the administration in dealing with relief; and for language suggesting that its purpose was to promote the general welfare, provide relief from the hardships attributable to wide-spread unemployment, relieve economic maladjustments, and improve living and working conditions, the committee substituted words which declare the purposes of Congress to be merely to provide relief and work relief.

In so doing, the committee introduced into the legislation a new expression which will call for future construction by the courts, if the joint resolution shall be enacted into law in its now submitted form without further amendment. The question is raised, What is the intention of Congress in using the expression "work relief"?

In conjunction with this proposed legislation it should be remembered that the Public Works Act is to terminate in June of this year unless some provision is made for continuing it, and that if the Public Works Administration is to go out of existence at that time it may be on such language as that we now have before us that we must rely for future public works and public relief.

Considering the narrow possible construction which every trained lawyer in this body will recognize may be given by technically critical courts to the words "work relief", and the specific limitations imposed in the amendment of the committee on page 3 of the pending joint resolution, the question is very properly presented: After the termination of the Public Works Act in June 1935, if it shall then terminate, what will become of projects already initiated by the Public Works Administration which are certain not to be completed by that time? Also the question arises whether the specifications on page 3 of the joint resolution do not substantially limit the purposes to which the funds appropriated under the joint resolution may be applied?

The familiar rule that the specification of one thing is the exclusion of another may well be invoked with reference to the amendment on page 3 offered by the committee.

For instance, in our western country, plans have been initiated for the transfer, in the form of what is called "transmountain diversion", of waters from the western to the eastern slope of the Rocky Mountain, with a view to the application to our eastern soil of waters not needed in the west, but highly valuable on the lands to the east, which, though arid, are rich for agricultural purposes if water can be applied.

Bearing in mind the specifications in the amendment on page 3 and the language used in the amended opening section, I ask Members of the Senate to consider whether it will be possible to proceed with such transmountain waterdiversion projects if and when the Public Works Act terminates and we are left to the construction by the courts of the language now before the Senate.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? Mr. COSTIGAN. I yield.

Mr. KING. I call the Senator's attention to line 2, page 9, and to the words "reclamation projects" so that the section up to those words will read "Federal public-roads projects, river-and-harbor projects, reclamation projects."

Would not those words cover the point which the Senator is making, and permit the transfer of water from one watershed to another if for the purpose of reclaiming arid lands?

Mr. COSTIGAN. As a matter of fact, the transmountain diversion to which I was particularly referring is of a somewhat different character from that specified by the able Senator from Utah. In northern Colorado we already have rich agricultural land irrigated from the waters of the Rocky Mountains. It is, however, not possible to procure additional water on the eastern slope for the use of the farmers who till that land. It has been found feasible to divert water from the western slope, without any disadvantage to agriculture or water users on the western slope, for the purpose of supplementing the existing supply of water for the use of farmers in one of the richest agricultural regions in the world. The instance I refer to well illustrates the dangers inherent in a technical construction of any of the limiting language written into the joint resolution by the committee.

Another instance is a grant already made by the Public Works Administration to bring water from the western slope of the Rocky Mountains for the use of the citizens of Denver. In that case ordinary reclamation is not involved, but the future life of a great metropolis will manifestly be limited unless in some fashion, under such a project as has been initiated, it becomes possible to meet and anticipate the needs of a large urban population.

Concerned as I am about this subject, naturally I have felt it desirable, and have submitted an amendment to the Senate with that in view, to add to the committee's specifications on page 3 definite references to irrigation and transmountain water diversion, which are not mentioned in the joint resolution.

With reference to another large proposed Government project, known as the "Caddoa Dam", more beneficial in certain respects to Kansas than to Colorado, located on the Arkansas River near the Kansas line, the question is likewise presented whether that particular enterprise may not be defeated by this proposed legislation?

The purpose of the proposed Federal construction to which I now refer is to impound on the Arkansas River near the Kansas line flood waters which from time to time wash the prairies and rush to and are lost in the lower Mississippi because there is no present structure to collect and hold those waters for proper utilization.

To a limited degree it may be urged that this objective, which is sought by citizens of Colorado and Kansas and States farther down the Arkansas River, will be attained and protected by the words "flood control", found on line 20, page 3. As a matter of fact, however, anyone familiar with western conditions, as the Senator from Utah is, must recognize that a proposal of that sort is more in the nature of water conservation than flood control, and one looks in vain through the limiting words inserted by the committee to find such words as "water conservation." Therefore, at the appropriate time I expect to move to have the words "water conservation" added with "irrigation", "reclamation", and "transmountain water diversion."

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, let me ask the Senator. if I may, what he conceives to be the meaning of these words, "miscellaneous projects, $350,000,000." Would not those words include anything on the face of God's earth?

Mr. COSTIGAN. Manifestly not, I will say to the able Senator from Virginia.

Mr. GLASS. Not manifestly not. Perhaps in the conception of the Senator not, but not manifestly not.

Mr. COSTIGAN. I am now attempting to speak from the viewpoint of the rules of interpretation and construction with reference to statutes which those specially trained in the law are accustomed to apply, and with all due deference, of course, to the able Senator from Virginia.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to

Mr. COSTIGAN. With pleasure. Mr. McCARRAN. I may say that in view of my experience in the committee-and I may take it as my own viewthe terms used on page 3 of the committee amendment are terms of limitation in my judgment. For that reason I have now pending an amendment to include the provision "irrigation and reclamation", because I believe these terms, with the specific sum attached thereto, are terms of limitation. That is my personal view.

Mr. GLASS. Three hundred and fifty million dollars for miscellaneous projects, with an authorization to the President to transfer $800,000,000 in addition to that, would make a billion one hundred and fifty million dollars for miscellaneous projects, and I think "miscellaneous projects" comprehends anything on the face of God's earth.

Mr. McCARRAN. That might be true; but the Senator must of necessity, and the Senate must of necessity, read all the provisions of the section together, and, in reading them together, the Senator will find that at any time the entire amount of 20 percent may be taken away, so that any project which any Senator had in mind might be entirely out of the picture, especially in view of what I think is a fair application of the rule of statutory construction—that where there is specific mention of projects, that language is language of

Mr. GLASS. Of course, any project may be taken out of the picture. After all, the whole thing is within the jurisdiction of the President of the United States. He is not compelled to spend a dollar of this money, or he can expend any of the amounts enumerated for any of the purposes enumerated, or for purposes not enumerated; and, in addition to that, he may spend $800,000,000 for any one of these purposes, or any miscellaneous purposes he may desire to take care of. The whole thing is in the hands of the President. practically without any restriction whatsoever.

Mr. McCARRAN. Which, to my mind, if I may have the indulgence of the Senator from Colorado-

Mr. COSTIGAN. I yield.

Mr. McCARRAN. Emphasizes the position taken by the able Senator from Colorado, who desires to have included here another specific term, naming a particular project; and, to my mind, that is all essential.

Mr. GLASS. But the President would not be obliged to spend a dollar for it.

Mr. McCARRAN. That is all the more in furtherance of the argument of the able Senator from Colorado, in that on the last of June Public Works will cease unless they have something to carry them on, and that should be emphasized in this measure.

Mr. GLASS. Public Works have a billion six hundred million dollars unutilized as yet, or did have it until the President apportioned it to relief; but it is well understood and has been publicly avowed that the purpose of the President is to transfer this money back to Public Works, and Public Works will go on just as they have gone on heretofore.

Mr. McCARRAN. May I interrupt the Senator from Colorado a little further?

Mr. COSTIGAN. I yield to the Senator from Nevada.

Mr. McCARRAN. The very fact that that billion and a half, which I will use as a round figure, has been already allocated, means that no other public works could be commenced, because the Secretary of the Interior has publicly stated-and I am rather quoting from memory now-that there have been already filed with him a list of projects the cost of which would approximate $60,000,000, but half of the three billion three hundred million has already been expended, and the balance is allocated to projects now

Mr. GLASS. But any of these amounts, under the provisions of this measure, may be used-and that means may be spent or given away-in the discretion and under the direction of the President, and the President may use them and expend them through the medium of the Department of the Interior, just as he is doing now under the Public Works Act, or under any other agency of the Government through which he may care to give away or spend the money.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, I apologize to the Senator from Colorado——

Mr. COSTIGAN. I am happy to have the Senator from Nevada express his views as a member of the bar and of this body.

Mr. McCARRAN. My idea is-

Mr. GLASS. The members of the bar have not all the comprehension in this body. I am not a member of the bar, I am not a lawyer, but I think I can interpret plain English language as well as a member of the bar, perhaps. [Laughter.]

Mr. McCARRAN. May I say that I should be very glad to have the court of last resort of this great Republic admit the great Senator from Virginia as a member of the bar.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator offer that as a substitute?

Mr. GLASS. I might do better than the Court if they would admit me to the Court. [Laughter.]

Mr. McCarran. I am trying to carry the thought of the Senator from Virginia—and I know his seriousness and his far-sightedness—into the thought of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. Costigan] in this, that the public-works projects under the $3,300,000,000 appropriation which we heretofore provided have already settled themselves, if I may use a common, understandable expression. They have been allocated. It seems to me if we apply the terms of statutory construction to page 3 of the bill, we are limited to the particular allocations set out in that particular amendment.

That is the reason why I am trying to express myself as best I can in furtherance of the idea which I believe is the idea of the Senator from Colorado, which is that, if projects are eliminated from those specifications for which specific amounts are set forth, they should, in order to be included, be mentioned in the amendment on page 3, either by a generic term or by a specific term.

Mr. GLASS. What does the Senator think this language means—"miscellaneous projects, $350,000,000"? What particular project does he think that means?

Mr. McCARRAN. The very word "miscellaneous" sets it away from any of these projects and eliminates it. Therefore it should be made more specific.

Mr. GLASS. It comprehends everything, does it not?

Mr. McCARRAN. It might be construed to comprehend everything, but I am not afraid of that construction.

Mr. GLASS. And $800,000,000 additional may be transferred to that fund; may it not?

Mr. McCARRAN. I am only going on the idea that where a specific thing is mentioned, all other things may be eliminated.

Mr. GLASS. There is not any specific thing mentioned in "miscellaneous projects." Everything is comprehended in "miscellaneous projects."

Mr. McCARRAN. All of which emphasizes my thought.

Mr. GLASS. I cannot see it that way.

Mr. McCARRAN. I am sorry.

Mr. BYRNES and Mr. BONE rose.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. COSTIGAN. I yield first to the Senator from South Carolina, and I shall yield next to the Senator from Washington.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, as to the interpretation to be placed upon this language, knowing that finally it would be construed by the office of the Comptroller General, I communicated with that office in order to determine what construction would be placed upon it under item 8, and cited reclamation as one of the projects to be undertaken under the appropriation for that purpose. It is the opinion of the Comptroller General that under item 8 reclamation would be properly construed, and that under item 7 irrigation would be properly included.

Mr. LONG rose.

Mr. COSTIGAN. May I ask the Senator from South Carolina whether the Comptroller General passed upon the significance of the words "work and work relief", as limiting language applicable to the entire measure?

Mr. BYRNES. No, Mr. President; I did not ask him that. Will the Senator yield further?

Mr. COSTIGAN. Yes.

Mr. BYRNES. Under P. W. A. and under the Federal Relief Administration, quite a large number of projects have been carried on. It was absolutely impossible to itemize them, to set them forth in detail. To attempt to describe them would necessitate itemizing from 60 to 70 different projects. That is particularly true under professional and clerical workers. It is true under many other items. I submitted to the Comptroller General a statement of projects heretofore undertaken by the Relief Administration and P. W. A. in order to determine, as far as it was possible, what construction would be placed upon that language. I did not submit the question as to relief or work relief, but solely as to various projects.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Was water conservation or transmountain water diversion included?

Mr. BYRNES. No; I must say that waterways and water conservation were not included.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, let me ask the Senator from South Carolina for what purpose we entered upon these public-works projects. Was it not for relief?

Mr. BYRNES. And work relief; I agree.

Mr. GLASS. I say for relief.

Mr. BYRNES. Yes.

Mr. GLASS. And was it not for work relief?

Mr. BYRNES. For work relief and for relief.

Mr. GLASS. That is what it is being done for; is it not?

Mr. BYRNES. Yes.

Mr. GLASS. That is all. Mr. LA FOLLETTE rose.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield; and if so, to whom? The Senator from Washington [Mr. Bone] and the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] have risen.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I shall ask to have my name added to the list of those who asked the Senator to yield.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Louisiana will be added to the list.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President, I will yield to the Senator from Louisiana after I shall have yielded to the Senator from Washington and the Senator from Wisconsin. I now yield to the Senator from Washington.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, in connection with the discussion in which we have just indulged on the question of interpretation, let me suggest that the rulings of Mr. McCarl are now submitted to the court for final determination, so Mr. McCarl's is not the last word. We realize that.

Mr. BYRNES. That is a correct statement.

Mr. BONE. So that whatever interpretation Mr. McCarl, or even the Attorney General of the United States, may place on this law has no more finality than any interpretation of any Member of the Senate. But here is a rule of law which, I take it, the Senator from Nevada [Mr. McCarran] and the Senator from Colorado [Mr. Costigan] were invoking, and it is a matter of common knowledge that it makes no difference what our opinion may be, it is the rule applied by the court, commonly known as the "rule of ejusdem generis." I take it that is the rule to which the Senator was referring. Is that correct?

Mr. COSTIGAN. Yes.

Mr. BONE. That rule, briefly stated, is this:

In the construction of laws, wills, and other instruments, general words following the enumeration of specific things are usually restricted to things of the same kind (ejusdem generis) as those specifically enumerated.

That means that if this statute goes into court, as it probably will, the lawmaking body of this country will have to yield its interpretation to that of the courts. I do not know whether or not the Senator is correct, but I do know that that principle of law applies to the court as the final arbiter in the case, and if the court should construe the law as the Senator | has suggested we may find ourselves facing that sort of a dilemma. I think every lawyer on the floor will agree with me on that. I merely suggest it as showing the propriety of the suggestion made by the Senator from Nevada.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. COSTIGAN. I yield.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. It seems to me this whole situation could be relieved, and the doubts which are in the Senators' minds could be dissipated, if we simply included in appropriate language the types of projects which are now authorized under section 203 of title II of the Industrial Recovery Act, which would comprehend all the projects which are now eligible under the P. W. A. Administration, and at the same time leave the matter entirely in the discretion of the administrators under this joint resolution. In other words, it would make it possible to complete the projects which the Senator from Colorado has indicated, and would remove any possible danger of a strict construction of this joint resolution, to exclude those types of projects which are now being developed by municipalities, counties, and States under loans and grants which they have obtained from the Public Works Administration.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President, the Senator from Wisconsin is proceeding in the same cooperative spirit in which I desire to act with the members of the Appropriations Committee and with the administration. It is to be hoped that this entire discussion will be regarded as a constructive and helpful effort on the part of us all to promote the ends which the able Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] apparently regards as already achieved by the present legislation.

The Senator from Virginia has stated in substance that the President under this bill, in conjunction with the Public Works Act, and the other related acts, will have full authority to use all these funds for any purposes which will afford, as I understand the Senator, immediately or remotely, relief or work relief.

Mr. STEIWER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at

Mr. COSTIGAN. I yield.

Mr. STEIWER. I agree with the Senator from Colorado that the phrase "relief and work relief" found in section 1 is in a sense a limitation upon the scope of the expenditure; but I am wondering whether the Senator is not unduly alarmed as to the extent of the limitation. In the Public Works Act—that is, in title II of the National Industrial Recovery Act—there is a very similar limitation, in that the appropriation is made to provide speedy employment; and yet under that act there has been no difficulty experienced, and the same type of projects for which the Senator now contends were in fact constructed without anyone raising any question so far as I am advised.

The supplemental act under which much relief work has been done is the Emergency Relief Act of 1933. It happens that that act provides that money may be granted to States for the same purposes contemplated in the committee amendment, namely, for relief and for work relief. I think I am quoting the words literally. So that the entire program of P. W. A. projects, and F. E. R. A. projects, or S. E. R. A. projects, as we call them, after the grant shall have been made to the States and to the governmental agencies, has been undertaken without embarrassment, and, I believe, without question, under language which is substantially the same as the language proposed by the committee amendment.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President, possibly the Senator from Oregon, whose suggestions I always find informative, did not hear my opening remarks, in which I emphasized that the Public Works Act, which, as the Senator from Oregon has said, is included in the National Industrial Recovery Act, is to terminate at the end of 2 years from the time of the enactment of the act. That will be, unless the may-act is extended, on June 16, 1935. Part of the purpose I had in mind-and if necessary, I shall offer an amendment to that end-is to have that act continued, and the powers in that act and in the pending joint resolution, if the latter shall become a law, combined, under the direction of the President. The situation which I have been discussing is one which would arise if the Public Works Act and the powers there given should end; or, if the Public Works Act should continue without being interrelated to the pending relief and work-relief joint resolution. It seems to me that under such conditions the sums here being appropriated will not be available except for very definitely limited purposes.

Mr. STEIWER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further at that point?

Mr. COSTIGAN. Certainly.

Mr. STEIWER. So far as I am now advised, I have no objection to the proposal which the Senator from Colorado makes, and think it might be very well if the scope of the P. W. A. Act with relation to projects should be written into the pending joint resolution, but I think it is true that the projects already authorized by the Public Works Administrator will all be financed from moneys that have been allocated for that purpose. The only exception is that group of projects covered by the diversion of $175,000,000 recently made for relief. That comes out of the housing allocation, and out of some other limited allocations, and I think, generally speaking, does not affect the long-time projects which are under construction by the Public Works Administrator. At the same time, I would not quarrel with the Senator's proposal that the provisions of that act be written into the pending joint resolution with the idea that projects which are there authorized may here be undertaken also.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President, perhaps something which I shall now say may additionally fortify the willingness of the Senator from Oregon to join with us in the amendment we have in view.

The Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] very properly asked the question, What is intended by the language "miscellaneous projects", on line 20, page 3 of the pending joint resolution? And assumed in asking that question that any project may be undertaken by the President with the funds here to be appropriated.

It had not been my intention to refer to the views of the Comptroller General until the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. Byrnes] did so. Concerned as I was about the possible construction to be given this language, last Friday afternoon I spoke to the Senator from South Carolina about it, and at the time he informed me that he had communicated with the Comptroller General's Office on this subject. Later he permitted me to look at the more or less informal opinion, I assume it to be, of the Acting Comptroller.

It is a very careful opinion, none the less, and I now invite the attention of the Senator from Virginia to certain qualifications placed by the Comptroller General on the possible use of the language "miscellaneous projects." In his opinion the Acting Comptroller General declares, speaking of miscellaneous projects:

The projects, "new construction, improvement or maintenance of transportation facilities "-

That language being quoted from a hypothetical question evidently submitted to the Comptroller General by the Senator from South Carolina-

The projects "new construction, improvement or maintenance of transportation facilities" and "new construction, improvement of public properties and publicly owned facilities" are too comprehensive in scope to be regarded generally as coming within the "miscellaneous projects" provided for under this item. Neither could this item be regarded as authorizing "submarginal land

Without specification by me of other projects considered by him unauthorized, the Acting Comptroller further says:

With the exception of the above, the projects listed-

Evidently by the Senator from South Carolina-

Leaving room here again for court construction, of | special consideration of such persons living in rural areas.

may be regarded as coming within the scope of this item.

Mr. STEIWER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me once more?

Mr. COSTIGAN. With pleasure.

Mr. STEIWER. Does not the Senator from Colorado feel that the language commencing in line 5, on page 3, will permit the acquisition of submarginal or other lands? I call attention to that language which is in the form of a proviso.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Will the Senator give me the reference again?

Mr. STEIWER. It is found on line 5, page 3, in the form of a proviso, and reads-

Provided, That except as to such part of the appropriation made herein as the President may deem necessary for continuing relief as authorized under the Federal Emergency Relief Act of 1933—

Under that act the Administrator of the Federal Emergency Relief Administration has acquired, I am told, about 15,000,-000 acres of land; an area equivalent to about one-third of the State of Maine, has been acquired, and the title is now in the Government of the United States. It has been acquired under authority of that act. I do not know just what the Senator from Colorado has in mind, but is he suggesting that we ought to broaden the act and include the further acquisition or provide an easier facility for the acquisition of privately owned land and taking that land off the tax rolls in order that the Government may use it for relief purposes?

Mr. COSTIGAN. What I am endeavoring to say is that, in my judgment, the Public Works Administration should be continued and that the powers given to the President with respect to that administration and the powers which are now sought to be given to the President for the purposes specified in the pending joint resolution should be so interwoven that the President may proceed under either

With further reference to the important question raised by the Senator from Oregon, I call attention to a further statement in the opinion from the Comptroller General's Office. Among the questions submitted to the Comptroller was one relating to the acquisition of submarginal lands. about which there was an inquiry a moment ago. There was another with respect to further expenditures mentioned by the Senator from Oregon. To show that this language does not as freely and fully authorize all the projects which the Senator from Virginia believes it does, I quote further from the opinion of the Comptroller General. He says, speaking in response to an inquiry about the acquisition of submarginal lands and other items-

All of these projects-

Referring to those previously listed in the lettermay be regarded as embraced within the item-

About which inquiry was made-except (1) the construction of "houses", which is provided for

That is a different list of the Senator from South Caro-and cannot be regarded as within this item.

I digress long enough to say that when the Comptroller deals with the other list of the Senator from South Carolina he qualified the possibility of constructing houses by saying, in substance, that such houses may not be con-structed in connection with "rural industrial communities" or with "subsistence homesteads." I resume the quotation from the Comptroller's opinion-

Except (1) the construction of "houses", which is provided for under item 4 and cannot be regarded as within this item; also (2) prosecution of work projects for the purpose of providing supplementary income (for destitute persons)—

The Comptroller says "etc.", referring to destitute persons, whom I have just mentioned parenthetically, with which appears to be beyond the scope of this item.

(3) The projects "prevention of soil erosion", "forestation and reforestation", "planting of shelter belts of trees", which projects are provided for under item (8) and cannot be regarded as within this item also; and (4) "acquisition of submarginal land", which project appears to be beyond the scope of this item.

The opinion, continuing, deals with a subject of great importance to many Members of this body. It has, I am sure, special significance, for example, for the Senators from Nebraska [Mr. Norris] and Washington [Mr. Bone].

Under item 3 inquiry had been made by the Senator from South Carolina about the possibility of carrying on rural electrification under the pending measure, and the comment of the Acting Comptroller General on the subject is this:

Under item 3, rural electrification, the only project listed is "extension or provision of electric service in rural areas, including any necessary acquisition of land for right-of-way or other purposes.

Showing how narrowly members of the bar-who have been rather lightly referred to here, notwithstanding the fact that our judges must be recruited from members of the bar-deal with language of this sort, let me read what the Comptroller says. It is this:

With the understanding that the "other purposes" includes only acquisitions such as for transmission lines and poles, but not for the erection of power houses or substations, the stated project may be regarded as within the scope of the appropriation

In other words, as I read the language of the Acting Comptroller General, it would, in his opinion, be possible to build transmission lines for rural electrification, but it would not be permissible for the President, in connection with such lines, to authorize the construction of power houses or substations. What now becomes of the broad objectives which the Senator from Virginia is assured may be achieved under the pending measure? I am not critical. Everyone knows there are difficulties about the satisfactory preparation of legislation of this sort. As I said at the outset, my only purpose is to be as constructively helpful as it is possible to be in framing proper legislation to give in our persistent crisis the widest amount of possible employment in the United States as part of our recovery program.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. COSTIGAN. With pleasure.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I think the Senator has brought out a very important matter; not only important, but to me very surprising. If the Government should extend lines for rural electrification and buy poles, but not be able to build generating stations, these lines would be required to take over electricity from private plants already established, companies held by holding companies with whose records we are somewhat familiar. It seems to me under that arrangement we would only be building a distributing system for private industry without any control whatever over the price at which the electricity should be sold to the farmers, unless there is something else in the measure touching upon that subject.

I am very much interested in the subject of rural electrification, not for the purpose of exploiting the farmers, but for the purpose of giving them a necessity of life at a price they can afford to pay. I am very grateful to the Senator for bringing this to the attention of the Senate, and I hope he will continue his discussion.

Mr. COSTIGAN. The Senator, in my judgment, clearly right in the conclusion he has reached from the Comptroller's opinion.

Without reading further, I trust the considerate Senator from South Carolina [Mr. Byrnes] will consent at this time to have placed in the RECORD the opinion of the Acting Comptroller to which he first referred and which is now being reviewed in some detail, so that Members of the Senate may have an opportunity to examine that opinion with care before discussion of the joint resolution shall have been possible to comply with that request?

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, it is my intention, in view of the discussion that has gone forward here, to place in the RECORD the statement of the type of projects submitted to the Comptroller General with the request that he furnish informally an opinion as to whether or not they would come within the classification set forth in the bill.

In doing so, however, I invite the attention of the Senator from Colorado to the fact that while the Comptroller sets forth in one or two instances that a certain project would not be deemed by him to come within the classification provided in that particular item, yet in some other items in the classification on page 3 the project is in his opinion authorized.

That the Senate may have the benefit of the opinion of the Comptroller I shall place in the RECORD the list of projects which are submitted to him, simply indicating the general type of work falling under each type of classification, and then follow it with the letter to me from the Comptroller General's Office.

Mr. COSTIGAN. The Senator from South Carolina does not question the reference which has been made to the erection of power houses or substations in connection with rural

Mr. BYRNES. It is contended by the lawyers who participated in the drafting of the joint resolution that it is covered by the language. I think, too, if the Senator from Colorado heard the statement made by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. STEIWER], he will agree that under the Federal Emergency Relief Act of 1933 the Federal Relief Administration today is using funds to purchase submarginal lands, and as the pending joint resolution and the pending amendment authorizes the use of funds therein appropriated to continue relief as authorized under the act of 1933, there would be authority to continue the purchase of submarginal lands as they are now purchased.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Does the Senator contend there is in the pending measure any extension of the authorization granted to the Federal Emergency Administration of Public Works which is to expire next June?

Mr. BYRNES. No.

Mr. COSTIGAN. I asked the last question in order to invite the attention of Members of the Senate to another and important related question. As already suggested, if the Public Works Administration should terminate within the next 2 or 3 months, as Congress provided it should, if there should be no extension of the life of that agency, we would largely be driven, as I view the statutory situation, even if the joint resolution is passed, before we could continue with many important projects already started, to await the construction the courts may give to the new language of the pending joint resolution. For instance, today I asked some well-qualified attorneys who have been dealing with the Public Works Administration to give me their opinion on that subject. I trust that what I have to say will be specially considered by Senators who are now here and are following this discussion.

It was suggested by the attorneys who have been giving special attention to the legislation in this field that under the joint resolution as it passed the House and in its present form the projects already undertaken, such as Grand Coulee, Bonneville, Casper-Alcova, and so forth, will be subject to abandonment unless special appropriation bills are enacted by Congress for the completion of such projects.

In addition, I have reached the conclusion that unless some such consolidated program as I have suggested is worked out, there will be a failure of appropriations to the P. W. A. already made and not covered by contracts on June 30, 1935, in the amount of about $75,000,000, which will go back into the Federal Treasury.

In addition, the likelihood is that our program for recovery will be deprived of the use of the moneys in the revolving fund, derived, or to be derived, from the sale of Reconstruction Finance Corporation securities possessed by the Public concluded. Does the Senator from South Carolina find it | Works Administration; and over the period of the next 2 years it is estimated that this revolving fund may well aggregate upward of $500,000,000.

In addition, and in some respects much more important, I am advised that there will be no means for inspecting, supervising, and carrying on approximately 2,000 non-Federal P. W. A. projects which will be under construction on June 16, 1935; that at the same time approximately 1,000 additional P. W. A. projects will be ready to go into construction over which the Government would have no supervision or control: that commitments have been made on all these projects, but that there would be no adequate machinery for carrying out these commitments and protecting the interests of the Federal Government by means of an experienced central organization which would supervise all accounting, legal, financial, and engineering arrangements.

There are other consequences which may be expected from the pending legislation unless safeguards are thrown around the action of the Congress on this very important subject.

I wish now to refer briefly to one other feature of the pending measure which should receive the attention of the Senate.

On page 7, line 6, the committee struck out the authorization given to the President in the joint resolution as it passed the House-

To make grants and/or loans and/or contracts.

If that amendment should be adopted, and if the joint resolution as it would then stand be read in connection with the words "provide relief and work relief" on line 8 of page 1, apparently no authority would be given to the President to use any of the funds specified in the joint resolution to make loans as heretofore made under the Public Works Administration, let us say, for the construction of municipal electric-light and power plants—and that is only one illustration selected out of a wide possible number. Why? Because it is reasonable to believe that the courts will hold that the erection of a municipal light and power plant is not relief and is not work relief. It is in the nature of a self-liquidating project, the Government advancing funds which ultimately are to be returned to the Government; and if the Public Works Administration shall be terminated nothing is more certain than that the private utility interests of the country will immediately invoke the language here employed by Congress to prevent any further construction through the use of funds contributed by the President to various municipalities in this country. Numerous projects of that sort are said to have been initiated by the P. W. A. In my judgment, they will be halted.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Minnesota? Mr. COSTIGAN. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. What would bar a municipality from making a self-liquidating loan, if the Senator's contention is correct, would also bar a farmers' cooperative county unit which might want to borrow money through a self-liquidating loan to electrify the rural communities of a county.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President, the Senator from Minnesota emphasizes what I ought to have said in the first instance—that apparently there will be no power to make loans. under the language of the joint resolution as it has come to the Senate from the committee. One limitation is in the words "relief and work relief." If the suggestion made by the Senator from Minnesota falls within either group, it may be urged that loans might be made. However, there is no specific authority; and it is, I should say, the wellconsidered judgment of able lawyers, who have examined this proposed legislation and are familiar with court actions with respect to this type of legislation, that there will be no power to make loans.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I cannot conceive of Public Works projects that would give more employment for unemployed labor than the projects which might be initiated to electrify farm communities; and I should be very much disappointed if that could not be done under this joint resolution. As a matter of fact, if the Senator's contentions are found to be correct and authoritative, I should not think of voting for the joint resolution.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Before I conclude, I desire to refer to a very interesting phase of one of the amendments offered to the Senate by the committee, and placed in the measure since it left the House of Representatives. I refer now to page 3, lines 17 and 18.

In the amendment of which those lines are a part, it is proposed that the appropriation shall be available—I am reading, in part, ahead—

For the following classes of projects: * * public projects of States or political subdivisions thereof.

What is the significance of that clause? It is the general view of those who have most carefully examined the law on this subject that political subdivisions do not include any organization which does not have taxing power, or organizations other than the habitual subdivisions of a State such as counties or municipalities.

Mr. KING. And school districts.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Yes; and school districts, as the Senator from Utah has suggested. Such a project as the Casper-Alcova reclamation project is believed not to come within that class. Certain projects such as I have enumerated, some in the State of Washington, others in the State of Nebraska—there are many others which might be cited—are under a different form of organization than the one definitely specified in the lines to which I have directed the attention of the Senate.

Mr. KING. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ASHURST in the chair). Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. COSTIGAN. I yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. KING. I wish to inquire if the Casper-Alcova project was not undertaken under the terms of a reclamation and irrigation project? That was my understanding. I know that at the White House, where these irrigation projects were discussed, it was understood—at least I derived that opinion after the presentation, and the then Senator from Wyoming, Mr. Kendrick, was present—that the Casper-Alcova project would come under the authority which was granted in the former act as an irrigation or reclamation project.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President-

Mr. COSTIGAN. I yield to the Senator from Wyoming. Mr. O'MAHONEY. In response to the Senator from Utah, let me say that the work on the project is being done by the Bureau of Reclamation, but the funds are those which have been appropriated to the Public Works Administration; and, of course, for any further work it might become necessary to use funds that are now being appropriated by this joint resolution.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Similarly, it is my understanding that unless we adopt some amendments of a remedial nature, the funds may not be available for the construction of hospitals. At least that is the judgment of some qualified attorneys.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President-

Mr. COSTIGAN. I yield to the Senator from Washington. Mr. BONE. I wonder if the Senator will express an opinion on this point:

Suppose a quasi-public body, or something bearing some relationship to a public body in its legal characteristics, should be set up, for instance, to operate a toll bridge, that body would not have taxing power, but it would be an instrumentality either of a State or of some political subdivision of a State, like a county. Is it the Senator's viewpoint that, even though that sort of a bridge might be self-liquidating under a provision by which its revenues would be impounded and pledged for the payment of bonds that had been issued under authority of law, it would not come within the scope of the measure as it is presently drawn?

Again, may I ask whether the amendments, tendered or being tendered by the Senator from Colorado, will get at these matters which he mentions and remedy these omissions?

I have rather bracketed this question in order to get an answer on both points.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President, in answer to the first question of the Senator from Washington, in the case mentioned, the authority apparently would not be given under the joint resolution as it stands to make a loan for the purpose he specifies, or to continue a loan in regard to an enterprise which might have been undertaken under the Public Works Administration.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, is the Senator from Colorado clear that any loan could be made under this measure?

Mr. COSTIGAN. My judgment is that no loans are authorized under the pending measure with one exception to be mentioned.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further? Mr. COSTIGAN. I yield.

Mr. BONE. I have discussed these matters and kindred matters with the Senator from Colorado and I wish to ask him now whether he has presented the amendments which he thinks will cover these deficiencies.

Mr. COSTIGAN. I have several amendments with that purpose in view, and it is my understanding that the senior Senator from Washington and his colleague, the junior Senator from Washington, have prepared amendments along the same line.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. COSTIGAN. I yield.

Mr. LONG. As I understand it, loans are not contemplated under this measure, according to what the Senator from Colorado thinks.

Mr. COSTIGAN. That, broadly speaking, is my interpretation of the measure.

Mr. LONG. That would be my interpretation. Let me ask the Senator about something else. I believe the statement of the Senator from Virginia was that, as a matter of fact, in effect the pending measure does not require the President to do anything, and pretty well gives him the right to do anything. In other words, it would practically hand him $5,000,000,000, about as much money as there is in the whole United States, and would say, "You do not have to do anything, or you can do something." Do I understand the Senator to differ from that?

Mr. COSTIGAN. The measure as introduced in the House contained authority of the sort mentioned by the Senator from Louisiana. What I have been urging this afternoon is that certain restrictions have been written into the joint resolution by the Committee on Appropriations which impose definite limitations on the power to proceed, and that those restrictions will have unexpected and unintended effects if for any reason Congress should later conclude to let the Public Works Administration terminate, as Congress has heretofore declared it shall terminate, in June of this year.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further? Mr. COSTIGAN. I yield.

Mr. LONG. I do not believe the Senator quite understood what I tried to ask. Probably I did not make it clear.

Mr. COSTIGAN. What I am endeavoring to say to the Senator from Louisiana is that the pending joint resolution does impose restrictions on the President, some of which, in my judgment, are distinctly regrettable, and are not in the public interest.

Mr. LONG. As a general rule, however, the President could use the money, or he would not have to use it at all. He would not have to do anything. That is the first thing. Mr. COSTIGAN. That is true.

Mr. LONG. In the first place, he could say, "I have $5,000,000,000, and I am not going to do anything. I am just going to sit here and wait a while." Then he waits a year. Then he says, "I have a right to build $800,000,000 worth of roads wherever I want to build them, whenever I want to build them."

The President goes down to the next enumerated item—and I am not going to try to be accurate about it, but I am just giving an illustration—and he says, "I have so much money here to spend on flood control if I want to, or not to spend if I do not want to." Then, after he gets through with that, he says, "I can take 20 percent away from all of it and go out and hunt up something brand new and do it, or I do not have to do that."

In other words, I must say this, because I once was entrusted with spending money, a hundred million dollars—and that was more money than I thought I would ever see or hear of again; but the measure before us would appropriate $5,000,000,000, which a man can spend or does not have to spend. He can spend it where he wants to, or he does not have to spend it.

What would be the objection to specifying where the money is to be spent? I want to be frank with the Senator. In Louisiana we would be due to receive about one-fiftieth of this amount, based on area and population. That would give us, say, $100,000,000 in Louisiana, and I am just assuming that that would be an average way the money would be gaged. What would be the matter with our enumerating where we really needed public works?

I wish to say this: That we can take $20,000,000 in Louisiana, if Congress will enumerate the items, and do more good than was done with the last money the Government spent in the State, if they will enumerate the items according to what the authorities think ought to be done.

What would be the objection to our calling in the representatives of the States, instead of having these bureaucrats handle the matter, and enumerate some of the things, so that we would really know what the measure is about? No one knows what he is voting for. I am afraid Senators do not. Perhaps I might run counter to my friend the Senator from Colorado, but I believe nobody knows what he is voting for. To my mind, according to the Senator from Virginia, that is the one certain thing here, that nobody knows what he is voting for.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President, the Senator from Louisiana has asked a question, and has in effect answered it in what might well have been his own time. However, it seems to me, in all seriousness, that it ought to be stated that there are difficulties about attempting here and now to allocate relief work, State by State, partly because the suggestion which naturally follows is that we might be asked to apportion works so allocated somewhat on the basis of population.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator pardon me if I interrupt him again?

Mr. COSTIGAN. I yield.

Mr. LONG. I wish to state this, that they are spending in my State today around one and three-quarters millions of dollars per month for relief, and we are also asked to pass the pending measure. In my opinion, in the State of Louisiana—and it is an average State—if the State authorities were let alone and had $20,000,000 they would not need $100,000,000.

The sad thing about this is that the President is called upon—or he wants to; I will put it that way, it seems he wants this kind of authority; he wants to have the right to go out tomorrow and set up greater expending and constructing organizations than 48 State governments have.

Those of us who have constructed highways know that it takes years to set up a highway organization capable of spending $50,000,000. But according to this measure, for every State he wants a hundred million dollars, and he has to set up an organization of supervision, of inspection, and the means of outlining the plans, and what it is all going to be spent for; and at the same time he does not have to spend anything.

Would not the Senator think it would be better to call in the representatives of the States and see what they need, and enumerate the allocations ratably, or somewhat fairly, somewhat proportionately, as to what is to be built in States, and what is not going to be built? Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? Mr. COSTIGAN. I yield to my colleague.

Mr. ADAMS. The testimony of Mr. Hopkins before the committee showed that it was the intention to distribute the moneys provided by the joint resolution among the States in proportion to unemployment. That would result in this: That one-third of the appropriation would go into four States; one-half of the appropriation would go into nine States.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President, I was about to say, in answer to the helpful suggestion of the Senator from Louisiana, without joining in any criticism his remarks may have implied, that his indication of a course which might possibly be pursued would lead us normally to a distribution of relief on the basis of population, or on the basis of relief needs, which is something different from population; or, preferably, on the basis of the best places to undertake certain large public works, such, for instance, as Boulder Dam and the Coulee project in Washington.

It is conceivable that large amounts of money might be expended in places where, merely counting the number of people out of work there, such expenditures would not normally be made, and unemployed persons could then be diverted from other centers of unemployment to work on such projects.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. COSTIGAN. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. One of the things we ought to avoid in passing this kind of legislation, it seems to me, is the possibility of getting ourselves in such a position that we would be passing a "pork barrel" measure.

I do not desire to disregard population and distribution of benefits. I do not think we ought to. That is something to consider, but it ought not to be the predominating factor. Neither can we say we are going to adhere to a strict rule such as Mr. Hopkins has laid down, that we are going to divide relief up among the States where relief is needed. I can conceive of a locality needing relief and having a great deal of unemployment, but there is not any project there of such size as that the Government could make an expenditure of money and provide for the employment of men.

If we are going to develop a project which will be useful in the future we must go where the project is. We cannot build a Fort Peck project in Maine or Massachusetts, although we could squander the same amount of money there that we have used in the building of the Fort Peck project. We might easily imagine a condition in Montana under which there would be not a single instance of unemployment, but the Fort Peck situation would be there just the same. If we wanted to develop that project we would have to go there to do it.

It seems to me we get into difficulties the moment we undertake to lay down a rigid rule which must be followed. and try to make in this appropriation an equal division of the money between the different States of the Union. It is unemployment we want to relieve, and we want to do it in such a way that the country will have something to show for it afterwards. If Fort Peck is developed, the theory at least-and I think it is a good one-is that it is going to help more people outside of Montana than it will in Montana. It will go a long way toward preventing floods in Louisiana and other States through which the Mississippi and the Missouri Rivers flow. Yet Fort Peck is only in one place. So it seems to me we might take up another project and make the same analysis of it. I think it would be the height of folly if we should undertake to say, "New York has such a population and Rhode Island has such a population; we will divide according to population"; or "New York has so many unemployed, and we will divide it in that way." Those factors ought to be considered, I concede, but in addition to that we ought to consider constructive methods of doing things so that while we relieve unemployment we do something of lasting benefit to future generations.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator from Colorado yield to me?

Mr. COSTIGAN. I yield to the Senator from Louisiana. Mr. LONG. My friend from Nebraska [Mr. Norris] mentions the proposition of "pork barrel." There is just the question of who is going to get something out of the pork barrel." I do not subscribe to the doctrine particularly that Congress is "pork barreling" out an appropriation, but every Congress is going to decide where the money is going to be spent, or the Executive or bureaus of the Executive are going to decide it. Someone is going to do what is called the "pork barrel" work. You cannot get away from what they call the "pork barrel" work.

Now it is a question of whether or not we want the men who appropriate the money to say where it is going to be spent, or whether to leave out "pork barrel." The facts are very clear. My friend from Nebraska mentioned flood control. We had the flood-control work prescribed by Congress, and it had been set out and going along for years and years and years. All of a sudden the P. W. A. an-nounced over night, "Flood control in this area is suspended, and we do not know whether we are coming back or not." They did suspend. They closed the offices. They discharged the force of engineers who had been working on that river for many, many years. Suddenly there came in with the P. W. A. another bunch of engineers who had never heard of the river, and after about 6 months they found out where the river bent and did not bend for 5 or 6 miles.

Then they came out with the statement, "Why, this State did not contribute certain funds when we were dealing with the relief part of the money." One State, they said, had not contributed any money, but they were going to excuse that State because it was not able to contribute any money. They came along to another State and said that State had to contribute or they were not going to continue to provide relief inside of the State. One State, so far as I was able to tell, was in no different condition than the other State. They were on all fours. As a matter of fact, I could name the States, and no one would be able to discern the difference between them.

Not only that, but in dealing with this kind of money they go into one State and say, "This money is going to be administered by the State authorities." They go into another State and say, "This money cannot be administered by the State authorities." There is no rule of consistency at all. It is in the hands of the executive department; I care not whether or not it be said it is in the hands of the President. He is no more infallible than is Congress or anybody else. It is put into the hands of those he names, and as a general consequence I want to say to my friends from Nebraska and Colorado that the men sent into the States have to learn first what are the various and sundry affairs in the States before they are in position to administer anything.

When we provide $5,000,000,000 and say, "It is better to have this put into the hands of the President, to let him do just what he pleases", does anyone think that fund is going to be less out of politics with him spending it as he pleases than it would be if specific provisions were written in the act? And is it a fair thing with the Presidential election coming on-and I speak absolutely frankly and fairly and truthfully—is it a fair thing to give that man $5,000,000,000 to spend where it will do the most good, and to spend when it will do the most good, or to not spend it at all? Is anyone going to forget that at the time of the last election, when Maine had already elected a United States Senator, that State was left out of the list for future money, and that Louisiana was left out of the list of those getting money because it would not do any good whether they spent it there or not?

Those are things to which you cannot shut your eyes. They are happening all the time, and they are certain to happen here; and I do not care what country you went to, they would happen there-wherever mankind spends money $800,000,000, but that he could spend a certain amount of money on public roads, and allot that public-road money as it has been allotted during all these years past. Has the method we have adopted and worked out for allotting money on public roads been found at this late date to have been at fault during all the time it was in use? Is the system which we worked out, based upon area and population, for the equalization of the two factors, found now to be all wrong? Is it better to have the President say, "All right; I am not going to spend any money in the South"? And why not? Because the Southern States are going to go Democratic. They will go Democratic anyway. I know what I am talking about. They do not spend election money in the Southern States. They do in Tennessee—it gets doubtful every once in a while-but they do not spend it down in Louisiana or in Mississippi, because we go Democratic all the time.

The President is a candidate for office. He is running for reelection. He is as much interested in the Presidential campaign right now as he is in anything else. We are going to give a candidate for office $5,000,000,000—more money than the United States ever appropriated in all its history. This is the biggest appropriation measure, I am told, ever passed in any country at any time, not only in America but going back to the days of Pharaoh, when Pharaoh first saw the scribe who came in to tell him how to spend money. This is the biggest appropriation bill ever passed at any time by any country; and we propose to give $5,000,000,000 to this man. who is running for the office of President of the United States, and say to him, "Mr. Candidate for President of the United States, here is $5,000,000,000. Take this money, and if you do not want to spend any of it you do not have to spend a dime, and if you want to spend some of it you can spend it just as you see fit. If you do not want to spend any of it in Ohio, you do not have to do so: and if you think the situation in Kentucky is doubtful, you can put a wad over there." That is what this measure means.

I have run for office too much, Senators, not to know that those factors weigh with any man who ever was a candidate. It is perfectly natural that they should weigh with him. Men who argue anything else are arguing against reason and against 150 years of history. There never was a man who was a candidate for office who could dissociate himself from the spending of a little money where it would do the most good.

Mr. COSTIGAN. The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. Nor-RIS], as is often the case, was entirely right in his observation that the great majority of the Members of this body do not want any measure in the nature of "pork barrel" legislation, and if there was any intimation to the contrary in any of my earlier remarks, I hope it will be understood I do not underwrite any such contrary sentiment.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. COSTIGAN. I yield with pleasure.

Mr. NORRIS. I want to assure the Senator from Colorado that I was not thinking of him when I referred to a "pork barrel" proposition. I referred to it as to what I thought would be the natural result of the proposition of the Senator from Louisiana. I thought it would naturally result in a "pork barrel" measure if we followed that scheme and that plan. I am in hearty accord with what the Senator from Colorado is trying to do; I should like him to succeed, and I want to help him all I can.

Mr. COSTIGAN. I thank the Senator.

Mr. President, before I conclude I should refer to a question asked me a short time ago by my Colorado colleague [Mr. ADAMS]. There is a provision in the joint resolution to be found on page 4, lines 3 to 10, that was inserted by the committee of which the Senator from Colorado is a member. It refers to loans. If the Senate shall adopt that amendment, it will authorize certain loans to which I, for one, have no objection in this bill, namelyor controls such things.

I ask why could we not say, "So much money shall be spent on public roads"?—not that the President should spend in the president s

And so forth. What I desire to emphasize, however, with respect to that clause is that by the specification of "loans" to farmers", if we shall adopt the clause, we will by implication and clear inference exclude any other loans under the joint resolution. This seems to me a noteworthy additional fact for the Senate to consider.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President-

Mr. COSTIGAN. I yield to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. NORRIS. I certainly must have misunderstood the Senator, but, as I understood him, he said that if we should adopt that amendment we would, in effect, prevent the making of loans for any other purpose than therein stated.

Mr. COSTIGAN. We will authorize loans to farmers, but, in the absence of some other authority under the joint resolution, by implication we will exclude loans for other purposes.

Mr. NORRIS. As I understand, if we should let that amendment stand and then should adopt the amendments on page 1 and the one near the top of page 2, thus narrowing the purpose merely to provide relief and work relief, the Senator's contention would be correct, but if we should reject those amendments, I do not see that the adoption of the other amendment to which he has referred would have such

Mr. COSTIGAN. The Senator evidently did not hear the early part of my discussion, in which I urged that the words provide relief and work relief", on line 8, page 1, bring into the legal picture another expression tending to narrow the uses to which the funds appropriated may be put, and that some courts are likely to seize upon new language of that kind to enjoin the prosecution of public work such as municipal light and power plants, since they may be regarded as not in the nature of either relief or work relief, but rather as aid to municipalities in erecting self-liquidating projects.

Mr. NORRIS. I do not believe when we understand each other that there is any disagreement between the Senator from Colorado and myself. He is arguing on the theory, I believe, that we shall agree to the amendment on page 1 and thus narrow the discretion of the President somewhat by leaving only relief and work relief.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Yes. Mr. NORRIS. I was asking the question as to whether that conclusion would be correct if we rejected that amendment on page 1 and left the joint resolution as the House passed it. Then, there could be no such conclusion as the Senator seeks to draw from the adoption of the amendment on page 4.

Mr. COSTIGAN. If left as the House passed the joint resolution, without the substitution of the committee's amendment, the joint resolution would clearly have much further reaching implications.

Mr. NORRIS. It seems to me it would. Mr. COSTIGAN. The question still remains, however, whether at some point in the joint resolution we should not include a specific reference to loans, as the other House did in another amendment rejected by the committee.

Mr. NORRIS. That is what I was going to say. another amendment the committee has made striking out the loan provision.

Mr. COSTIGAN. As the bill originally passed the House

It permitted loans. Mr. NORRIS.

Mr. COSTIGAN. It permitted loans, as the able Senator from Nebraska has just indicated.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, let me deal-

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President, I am just about to yield

Mr. President, may I say in conclusion that as the discussion progresses I expect, from time to time, to offer occasional amendments to the joint resolution, based on the remarks I have been making, and that I hope the Senator from South Carolina will permit the inclusion in the RECORD, immediately following my remarks, for consideration by Members of the Senate between now and our next session, the entire opinion of the Acting Comptroller General.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I ask that there may be printed in the RECORD at this point the letter, dated March 7, from the Acting Comptroller General of the United States. to which reference has been made.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

COMPTROLLER GENERAL OF THE UNITED STATES, Washington, March 7, 1935.

COMPTROLLER GENERAL OF THE UNITED STATES,

Washington, March 7, 1935.

Hon. James F. Byrnes,

Committee on Appropriations.

My Dear Senators: You have requested the views of this office as to whether, in the event House Joint Resolution 117 becomes a law in its present form, the appropriation items as listed in the break-down in the first proviso of section 1 of the bill will be available, respectively, for the classes of projects listed in a memorandum submitted by the Federal Emergency Relief Administrator.

Under item 1 of the break-down, "Highways, roads, streets, and grade-crossing elimination", it is stated in the memorandum of the Administrator as follows:

"This would include such projects as bridges; construction of routes to avoid congested areas; express highways; farm-to-market, feeder, and secondary roads; grade-crossing eliminations; highways; acquisition of rights-of-way and adjoining territory; land-scaping and beautification; parkways; reconstruction of existing grade-crossing structures; repair, maintenance, widening, extension, and relocation of highways; roads and streets; sidewalks, paths, and gutters; streets; construction of other facilities to improve the free flow of traffic or to mitigate existing hazards to pedestrian or vehicular traffic; surveys and plans for projects under this general classification." general classification."

with the understanding that the "landscaping and beautification" and "parkways" will be confined entirely within the rights-of-way, each of these classes of projects would appear to be covered by the item except the one for acquisition of "adjoining territory." This appropriation item would not be available for the acquisition of any territory other than for rights-of-way.

Under item 2, "Rural rehabilitation and relief in stricken agricultural areas", there are listed in the memorandum:

"Furnishing subsistence goods and services (food, clothing, shelter, medical service, school supplies, etc.) to destitute families in rural areas.

"Furnishing farm equipment and supplies, mules, horses, cattle, barnyard stock, seeds, fertilizer, and other rehabilitation equipment necessary for the operation of farms in order to enable destitute families to become self-sufficient on the land.

"Acquisition of land for rehabilitation purposes.

"Supervision and advice in connection with rehabilitation of destitute families.

destitute families.

"Construction of houses, barns, fences, farm buildings, and other improvements for these families in rural areas.

"Prosecution of work projects for the purpose of providing supplementary income to aid in the rehabilitation of destitute persons in the rural areas.

"Rehabilitation or resettlement of stranded populations in rural

"Direct relief to families in stricken agricultural areas.

"Direct relief to families in stricken agricultural areas.

"Furnishing of feed and seed.

"Prosecution of work projects to aid in the relief of stricken agricultural areas, such as: Water conservation; dams; reservoirs; pipe lines; well digging and drilling; prevention of soil erosion; forestation and reforestation; planting of shelter belts of trees; purchasing, processing, and distribution of livestock; purchase of land necessary for the prosecution of work projects.

"Acquisition of submarginal land."

All of these projects may be regarded as embraced within the item except (1) the construction of "houses", which is provided for under item 4 and cannot be regarded as within this item, also; (2) "Prosecution of work projects for the purpose of providing supplementary income" etc., which appears to be beyond the scope of this item; (3) the projects "prevention of soil erosion", "forestation and reforestation", "planting of shelter belts of trees", which projects are provided for under item (8) and cannot be regarded as within this item, also; and (4) "Acquisition of submarginal land", which project appears to be beyond the scope of this item.

Under item (3), "rural electrification", the only project listed

Under item (3), "rural electrification", the only project listed

"Extension or provision of electric service in rural areas, including any necessary acquisition of land for right-of-way or other purposes."

With the understanding that the "other purposes" includes with the understanding that the "other purposes includes but not only acquisitions such as for transmission lines and poles but not for erection of power houses or substations, the stated project may be regarded as within the scope of the appropriation item.

Under (4), "housing", there is listed:

"Low-cost housing in urban and rural areas, such as detached

"Low-cost housing in urban and rural areas, such as detached and multifamily houses; slum clearance; demolition; repairing, reconditioning, and remodeling; rural industrial communities; subsistence homesteads; acquisition of land for housing."

The only items thus listed which do not appear to come within the appropriation item are the two projects "rural industrial communities" and "subsistence homesteads." As any necessary housing under these two projects would be only a minor incident to the main purpose of the projects, said projects cannot be regarded as authorized under the housing item.

As to item (5) "projects for professional and clerical persons"

As to item (5), "projects for professional and clerical persons", the Administrator states:

"This general class is intended to give employment to large numbers of professional and clerical workers now on the relief rolls, such as art projects; charts and graphs; dramatics; education work, such as student aid, workers' education, literacy classes, nursery schools, vocational training, and rehabilitation; mapping; nursing and other public-health work; orchestras; planning work; record keeping; research and special surveys; surveys of unemployment and population problems; traffic studies."

This would appear to be a proper construction as to the scope of this item.

Item (6) is "Civilian Conservation Corps" and with respect to

Item (6) is "Civilian Conservation Corps", and with respect to this the Administrator states:

"This would include all activities now being undertaken in connection with the Civilian Conservation Corps, such as water-conservation work; forestation and reforestation; prevention of forest fires; prevention of soil erosion; flood control; plant, pest, and disease control; maintenance or repair of forest trails and fire lanes."

This item would have to be construed as limited to the authorized operations of the Civilian Conservation Corps as now constituted and would not be available for similar activities carried on under any other establishment or organization.

Under Item (7), "public projects of States or political subdivisions thereof", it is proposed by the Administrator that:

"This would include such projects as airports; auditoriums; bridges; canning of garden products and surplus commodities; conservation of fish and game; demolition; drainage; eradication and control of disease bearers, pests, and poisonous plants; fire lanes, paths, and trails; flood control; forest-fire prevention; forestry; grade crossings and traffic-hazard elimination; hospitals; inclnerators; irrigation; landscaping; land acquisition; levees; malaria control; markets; park buildings; playgrounds; provision of commoditors; irrigation; landscaping; land acquisition; levees; malaria control; markets; park buildings; playgrounds; provision of commodities for the unemployed; public buildings; publicly owned utilities; reclamation; recreational facilities; reforestation; reservoirs; sanitation; schools; self-help and cooperatives; sewerage systems; sewerage disposal; sewing rooms; soil erosion; swimming pools; terminal facilities; warehouses; water conservation; water lines; water works; wells."

water works; wells."

With the understanding that this item of the appropriation will be used only on projects that are in fact public projects undertaken and contributed to by the State or political subdivision thereof, there would appear no objection to regarding the listed projects as within the scope of the appropriation item.

Under item (8), "sanitation, prevention of soil erosion, reforestation, forestation, flood control, and miscellaneous projects", it is stated in the Administrator's memorandum that—

"Included in the above would be such projects as dams; development and improvement of natural resources; drainage; eradication and control of disease bearers, pests, and poisonous plants; extension or provision of electric service; fire lanes, paths, and trails; fish and game conservation; flood control; forest-fire prevention; forestation; new construction, improvement, or maintenance of shi and game conservation; flood control; forest-fire prevention; forestation; new construction, improvement, or maintenance of transportation facilities; new construction, improvement of public properties and publicly owned facilities; reclamation; recreational facilities; reforestation; sanitation; soil erosion; submarginal land acquisition; water conservation; waterways and navigation aids."

The project "development and improvement of natural resources" is too broad in its scope to be regarded generally as authorized under this item. The project "extension or provision of electric service" may not be regarded as authorized under this item, because covered under item (3). The projects "new construction, improvement, or maintenance of transportation facilities" and "new construction, improvement of public properties and publicly owned facilities" are too comprehensive in scope to be regarded generally as coming within the "miscellaneous projects" provided for under this item. Neither could this item be regarded as authorizing "submarginal land acquisition." With the exception of the above, the projects listed may be regarded as coming within the scope of this item.

Sincerely yours,

R. N. Elliott.

Acting Comptroller General of the United States.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, I find myself totally unable to deal in legal sophisms and in classical rhetoric and other things I might mention in considering a plain proposition. It has been stated here that the pending joint resolution does not authorize loans. Let me ask the Senator from Nebraska, for instance, in the impossible event that I should give him $100,000 and tell him he could do what he pleased with it if he could not loan $10,000 or $50,000 or the whole amount to the Senator from Michigan [Mr. Couzens], who sits in front of him?

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, in the first place, if the Senator from Virginia should give me $100,000, I would drop dead. [Laughter.]

Mr. GLASS. If that should happen, the Senator could not loan it to anybody.

Mr. NORRIS. If I did not drop dead, and the Senator from Virginia said I could not loan it to the Senator from Michigan, I would be glad he said that.

Mr. GLASS. If the Senator remained alive, he could loan it, could he not?

Mr. NORRIS. If I remained alive, I would not loan it to the Senator from Michigan, of course, unless he gave me very ample security.

Mr. GLASS. But the joint resolution appropriates $4,000,000,000 "to be used" and what is the plain English meaning of the word "used"-"to be used in the discretion and under the direction of the President" of the United States. Under that language, could not the President of the United States loan any part of that money?

Mr. NORRIS. I would not say that the President could not, but the Senator from Virginia ought to know that some district judge in Maine or California or Texas may grant an injunction against the enforcement of this proposed law, and we will never be able to see it enforced until that lawsuit wears its weary way to the Supreme Court of the United States, and all suffering humanity are dead.

We ought to do everything we possibly can to avoid that kind of a contingency. The committee has stricken out of the joint resolution language which, it seems to me, is much broader than the language the committee includes when it puts it all in the few words, "to provide relief and workrelief." Later on they strike out of the House text the provision for certain kinds of loans that might be made. By narrowing the construction in the first section, by taking out language which seems to me to express the idea better than what they have inserted, and narrowing the possibilities of what the President may do, it leads to what may be a disastrous lawsuit, and we ought to go as far as we can to avoid that contingency.

Mr. GLASS. If there is any judge on the Federal bench. or any other bench, who has not good sense enough to know what the English language means when it says $4,000,000 .-000 is appropriated and handed over to the President to be used in his discretion and under his direction", he ought to be put off the bench.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Virginia yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. GLASS. I yield.

Mr. COUZENS. I have been wondering whether or not, as the Senator from Nebraska has said, some court might not interpret a loan as not being relief or work relief.

Mr. GLASS. It has been suggested that under the terms of the joint resolution, public works in States and communities of States are not relief work. Why should we make loans to the States and the various communities in the States? What has been the purpose of the loans but to relieve the situation?

Mr. COUZENS. But there is no language in the joint resolution about loaning to the States. The word "loan" is not used at all, is it?

Mr. GLASS. Oh, yes; there is a provision in the bill about loans to States.

Mr. COUZENS. Where?

Mr. GLASS. It is provided that the President may use $4,000,000,000 as he pleases, and it goes on to state. "for public projects of States or subdivisions thereof."

Mr. COUZENS. But the Senator from Nebraska and, I believe, some other Senators, have in mind whether under these proposals loans could be made to farmers and others.

Mr. GLASS. Oh, yes. Let me read that to the Senator:

Funds made available by this joint resolution may be used, in the discretion of the President, for the purpose of making loans to finance, in whole or in part, the purchase of farm lands and necessary equipment by farmers, farm tenants, croppers, or farm laborers.

Mr. COUZENS. Then, may I ask the Senator from Virginia whether or not the whole amount could not be used for that purpose? There is no limitation on the language.

Mr. GLASS. Oh, no; the whole amount could not be used for that purpose, because there is the general limitation that $800,000,000 of it is to be used for highways, roads, streets, and grade-crossing eliminations.

Mr. COUZENS. Yes; I understand; but this is not a mandatory provision at all.

Mr. GLASS. No; none of it is mandatory. I have said the President does not have to spend a dollar of it if he does not want to do so. We give him nearly $5,000,000,000 to do with as he pleases, and he simply indicates to us here, in what he claims is as specific a way as he may, what use he is going to make of the money.

Mr. COUZENS. There is a difference among Senators as to the interpretation put on the language by the Senator from Virginia. Some of the Senators have properly disclosed that there is nothing mandatory upon the President, but that he may spend any of the money and that he may use almost an unlimited amount in any activity he chooses, including even loans to farmers described by the Senator and mentioned on page 4.

Mr. GLASS. The Senator from Virginia has explicitly several times stated that the President is not obliged to use a dollar of this money. It is not mandatory at all. He has simply signified to the Senate the purposes which he has in mind and the amounts which he would like to have allocated to such purposes, plus a provision that he may, in his discretion, transfer to any one of the classifications $800,000,000.

Mr. COUZENS. May I ask the Senator whether he interprets that 20 percent of the total may be applied, under the other projects or activities provided for, for loan purposes as provided in section 4?

Mr. GLASS. Yes; for loan purposes.

Mr. COUZENS. The whole amount may be used for that purpose?

Mr. GLASS. I think the whole amount may be used for loan purposes and relief purposes. I do not think the whole amount may be used for loan purposes, because we understand thoroughly that $880,000,000 of it is to be used for direct-relief purposes.

Mr. COUZENS. So that, in effect, while the whole $4,000,-000,000 is allocated in the bill according to the amounts mentioned on page 3, the contention of the Senator is that all or any of that amount may be used for loaning purposes?

Mr. GLASS. No; not all of it. Eight hundred and eighty million dollars of it is to be used for direct relief.

Mr. COUZENS. I am talking about the loaning provision. What proportion of this money may be used for loaning purposes?

Mr. GLASS. I think $880,000,000 may be loaned for roads, streets, and grade-crossing elimination.

I think $500,000,000 of it may be used for rural rehabilitation and relief in stricken agricultural areas.

I think $100,000,000 of it may be used for rural electrification.

I think $450,000,000 may be loaned for housing purposes.

I think $300,000,000 of it may be loaned for projects for professional and clerical purposes—and what those projects may be only the human imagination can conceive, but I cannot.

I think $600,000,000 of it may be loaned, and very likely will be loaned, for the Civilian Conservation Corps.

I think $900,000,000 of it may be loaned to States and subdivisions of States for projects which would afford relief work.

I think $350,000,000 of it may be loaned for flood control, soil erosion, reforestation, forestation, and miscellaneous projects. I think "miscellaneous projects" covers anything on the face of the globe.

Mr. COUZENS. The Senator has been kind enough to enumerate the amounts which might be loaned for the purposes specified. How much does the Senator think may be loaned under the provision on page 4?

Mr. GLASS. I think any amount that the President, in his discretion and under his direction, may be pleased to take from any one of these other amounts, because these other amounts are not to be exceeded. He can take any part of them

Mr. COUZENS. I think the Senator is in error there, because they may be exceeded by taking 20 percent from the aggregate; so there is no amount specified.

Mr. GLASS. Oh, yes; I have said that over and over again. Eight hundred million dollars can be added to any of the amounts. The fact of the whole matter is that when this joint resolution first came into the Senate, some Senators—whether for political reasons or through concern for the taxpayers, the Senate may judge for itself—bitterly criticized the joint resolution, saying that there ought to be a break-down; that there ought to be some indication of the purposes for which the President proposed to use this money. Now the President, through his agencies, gives us what he says is as near to a break-down as he may be able to give the Senate; and now we have that break-down criticized because it presumptively does not include a multitude of other things!

So the Senator from Virginia is in a state of confusion over these adverse criticisms, first one way and now another way. I simply cannot conceive of anything that may be done within the limitation of $4,000,000,000 that may not be done under this joint resolution in the discretion and under the direction of the President of the United States.

Mr. COUZENS. I do not think anybody on this side of the Chamber disagrees with the Senator from Virginia on that statement. The break-down which the Senator said may have been inspired by political or other reasons was in part agitated by myself, and by no means for political reasons.

Mr. GLASS. The Senator knows perfectly well, without my saying it, that I never attributed to him any political reason for anything he ever said here.

Mr. COUZENS. I thank the Senator.

Mr. GLASS. The Senator knows that to be so.

Mr. COUZENS. Then, I thank the Senator for saying it

Mr. GLASS. I do not mind saying publicly anything that I say privately.

Mr. COUZENS. I shall have to challenge that statement some day, Mr. President.

Mr. GLASS. Oh, well, I occasionally "cuss" privately, and I am too dignified to do that on the floor of the Senate; that is all. [Laughter.]

Mr. COUZENS. The break-down, however, is not in the exact form that some of us had hoped it would be, because when the break-down was discussed among some of the Senators it was clearly the inference, at least, that the transfer from one activity to another would be limited to the amount set aside for each objective, and would not extend to 20 percent of the whole. So I hope that before we get through we shall bring this part of the joint resolution in line with the views of some of us who sympathize with the effort to divide up the appropriation through objectives rather than through geographical locations.

Mr. GLASS. I will say to the Senator that that was the thought of some of the members of the committee, and I voted for it; but I do not always get what I vote for.

Mr. President, frankly, if I had any criticism to make of the joint resolution, it would be my unwillingness at this time, and in the present condition of the country, to appropriate approximately $5,000,000,000 and put it at the disposal of any human being on earth; but now to contend that the joint resolution is not comprehensive, and does not enable the President to do enough, seems to me an extraordinary contention. I think it enables him to do too much, vastly too much; and right now my concern for the taxpayers of this country is much greater than it is for some favorite project, whether it be in one State or another State.

So far as I am individually concerned, I have not asked for a project in the State of Virginia and I do not intend to do so. I think if Virginia has any projects in view, she ought to tax her own people and do her own work under her own supervision, and not have to be trotting up here to Washington, hat in hand, and asking some miserable bureaucrat to allot back to Virginia some of the $129,000,000 which she paid into the Federal Treasury last year; and I think all other States ought to be on that basis. If we are going to liberalize this $5,000,000,000 appropriation, Heaven only knows where we will land; but the taxpayers will know after a while.

So, Mr. President, I think the joint resolution is clear enough, except that to appease the apprehensions of some Senators with regard to the possible discontinuance of projects already allocated in the various States by the Public Works agency, or that may be hereafter allocated by the Public Works agency, there should be an amendment to the joint resolution, which I have asked to have drawn, that will continue the Public Works agency for 2 years longer.

That fear may be dissipated in that way. Aside from that, however, I think the joint resolution is perfectly clear.

Mr. BONE. If the floor but a moment. Mr. GLASS. When the payers for?

Mr. BONE. I do

The idea of any Senator objecting to the elimination of the wretched provision, contained in the House joint resolution as it first came over to us, authorizing the President to spend money for economic readjustment! Under that provision the President could destroy thousands of industries in this country, should it occur to him that they were engaged in uneconomic competition. As I have previously pointed out, he could put out of business at least two pipe and foundry factories in my own town, because there are three there, and until recently they had not declared a dividend for 7 years. Here in the city of Washington he could put out of business at least four newspapers, because, in my considered judgment as a newspaper publisher of 50 years' experience, only two of the newspapers printed in Washington have made a profit in the past 10 years.

It is an unheard-of proposition that any such power as that should be lodged with the President of the United States, who does not know anything about the pipe and foundry business, or anything about the newspaper business, or anything about various other businesses which, under the terms of that provision, he might destroy.

We are criticized for having eliminated the absurd provision in the original joint resolution authorizing the President "To guarantee loans to, or payments of, needy individuals." I might enumerate other absurd things which we have been criticized for leaving out of this measure.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for a question?

Mr. GLASS. I yield.

Mr. COUZENS. Can the Senator tell where all these crazy suggestions came from?

Mr. GLASS. Happily, I can tell the Senator where they did not come from. They did not come from the White House.

Mr. COUZENS. They did not come from the White House?

Mr. GLASS. They did not come from the White House. Mr. COUZENS. I know they did not come from the Chairman of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. GLASS. They certainly did not. I do not know that I care to discuss that particular provision of the joint resolution any further, or any part of it any further, because to me it is perfectly clear. Happily, I am not a member of the bar, and it may be thought I am therefore incapable of interpreting the legal effect of plain English language; but I know the English language when I read it, and when we hand the President of the United States $4,000,000,000 to be exclusively used by him in his discretion and under his direction, and when, preliminary to handing that $4,000,000,000 over to him, he tells us, in what he deems as definite a way as he is capable of employing, what he is going to do with the money, I think he is going to do just that with the money, and heaven knows, after he shall have done that, he will have done plenty, without my now enumerating projects of this or that kind in one State or another State.

Mr. President, it would be literally impossible, metaphysically and physically, for the Congress of the United States to enumerate the projects upon which this $4,000,-000,000 should be expended. Senators know we cannot do that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment on page 1, line 3.

Mr. GLASS. Very well; let us have a vote.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, I think I am not misstating the fundamental purpose or the underlying philosophy of the measure which is presented to us when I say that it is primarily intended as a pure work-relief measure, and not as a public-works bill, as we understand those terms.

Mr. GLASS. What are public works for, may I ask the Senator?

Mr. BONE. If the Senator will permit, I shall occupy the floor but a moment.

Mr. GLASS. What are we using the money of the tax-payers for?

Mr. BONE. I do not intend to criticize the joint resolution on that ground at all; I merely shall content myself with a momentary observation, and then resume my seat.

It may be rather too subtle a differentiation for most people, to draw the distinction between public relief and public works, because in the public mind they are associated, and I think properly so. But there is an appreciable portion of our population who have very distinctly in mind certain projects of a type which they look upon as being highly desirable in their communities. Above everything else, they are thinking in terms of the consummation of these projects, the acquisition and the building of them, and in that connection they think of the labor that is necessary to be employed in the building of the projects.

When I speak of the differentiation between the two, it is a little too subtle for most people to appreciate, but the underlying object of the pending measure is work relief rather than public works, and with that in mind, I think some of the communities in our country are going to be in for a great disillusionment. I fear that very much, although I wholly sympathize with the purpose of the joint resolution, its purpose to give work to men, but I do think that the amendment of the Senator from Colorado, an amendment similar to the ones I and my colleague from my own State have presented-I think they are almost word for wordattempts to harmonize these two principles, and to give the President the power, through the procedure provided in the amendment, not only to make this a work-relief bill, but to make possible of accomplishment and realization some of the public-works projects which have been presented by the people in the various States.

Let me say further, that in my own State—and I suppose the same condition exists in every other State in the Union—the public-works organizations have sent out word to every public subdivision in the State, cities, and counties to come forward with a program of public works. That request, that invitation, has been widely broadcast, as the result of which Mr. Ickes' office now is receiving applications for funds for public-works projects on invitations sent out calmly and coldly by the Government itself. In my own State, under this blanket invitation, community after community has come forward with various projects which they think will fit into the public-works program.

The amendments which I and my colleagues have presented and which the Senator from Colorado [Mr. Costigan] has presented merely have to do with the matter of procedure outlined in the joint resolution and do not affect the substantive parts of the measure. They do definitely provide for the making of loans to these communities in order to accomplish the purposes which the communities themselves have been coldly and calmly invited to set out and send to the Government.

I think the amendment presented by the Senator from Colorado, which I understand is soon to be voted on, at least the first one, ought to receive favorable consideration. I do not think there is anything in it which can injuriously affect the joint resolution, and, in view of our calm invitation to the public to present plans for public-works projects for favorable consideration at the hands of the Government, I think we ought not now to set them aside lightly.

ALLOCATION OF FUNDS UNDER N. I. R. A.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Ashurst in the chair) laid before the Senate a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting, in response to Senate Resolution 91 (submitted by Mr. Byrd), an itemized statement of allocations, obligations, disbursements, and unexpended balances and certain other data relating to projects for which allocations were made out of the appropriation for $3,300,000,000, authorized in the National Industrial Recovery Act, approved June 16, 1933, and stating that as soon as copies of memoranda and agreements are received from the several executive departments and establishments, as called for by the seventh paragraph of the resolution, such data will be forwarded to the Senate, which, with the accompanying papers, was ordered to lie on the table.

THE PRICE OF COTTON

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I have been informed that the market on cotton went down $9 a bale today. It is said it would have gone down perhaps more than that, but there is some market rule which does not permit it to fall more than about $10 a bale, I believe it is. So the price fell within 10 percent of the limit it would be allowed to fall.

I undertook to find out from some of the learned Members of the Senate—or, rather, in order to comply with the classification of the Senator from Virginia, from some of the more learned Members of the Senate—the reason for this fall in the price of cotton. They tell me that it was all caused by the fact that an announcement went out this morning from one of the departments, from the White House, or the Treasury Department, or from somewhere else, that they intended to use the profit realized from calling in the gold and devaluing the dollar—which amounted to 41 cents on the dollar—in paying off some six hundred and twenty-five millions of bonds at once, I believe it was said.

My informants and experts in that line tell me that they are given to understand that the fact of that announcement drove the price of cotton down $9 a bale.

The other day an announcement went out from the White House, or from the Treasury Department, or from some other place working under the White House—no; I believe perhaps it was from Mr. Richberg; one of them went from him—at any rate, the statement went out that they were perhaps going to inflate, and the market went up. That afternoon a statement came out that they were not going to inflate, and the market went down. In other words, the point I am trying to make and the statement I am trying to make to Senators who are conservative is that any kind of statement over here, or any kind of action over here, is capable of throwing the market up or down as many as 200 points.

Take the case of cotton: Cotton was thrown down today 200 points. I suppose by tomorrow morning or tomorrow night some other kind of announcement will be made and cotton will go up perhaps 100 points.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? Mr. LONG. I yield to the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. BARKLEY. I am not enough of an economist to understand how it transpires that an announcement of the Secretary of the Treasury that $625,000,000 of the profits now lying in the Treasury as the result of the devaluation of gold is to be used to pay off some of the bonded debt of the United States could result in a drop in the price of cotton. It may be that there is someone who is sufficiently expert in economics to explain that, but I am frank to say I cannot understand the relationship of the two things.

The profit was there, and there has been criticism of the Secretary of the Treasury on the floor of the Senate for not using that profit for certain purposes and for certain expenditures, instead of allowing it to lie there as a sort of equalization fund, as it was supposed to be in a more or less indefinite way.

Is the Senator sufficiently expert in economics to explain why an announcement that out of a surplus in the Treasury the Secretary of the Treasury is going to pay off $625,000,000 of the Government's debt should drive down the price of cotton?

Mr. LONG. I must confess, Mr. President, that I am not. The only reason why I even state the fact is that a conference of my colleagues was going on in the marble room which I happened to witness, and I happened to hear what they were saying; and that was the reason they were giving, which they probably had been given by authority from the outside.

Mr. BARKLEY. I feel that there must be some other reason why the price of cotton declined. I do not know what that reason is. It may be a reflection of the international situation with reference to warlike rumors, and things of that sort; there are many things that might have brought it about; but I cannot understand how the announcement that we are going to pay off some of our debts is of such a depressing nature as to drive down cotton $9 a bale.

In respect to the other statement which the Senator made—that a few days ago the President or the Secretary of the Treasury announced inflation, and the market went up for an hour or two, and then announced that there would be no inflation—what actually happened was that at a press conference at the White House the President made the statement that he did not think commodity prices were high enough as yet, and that statement was seized upon either by the newspapers or by certain speculative influences in the country and construed as indicating that there was going to be some inflation. The President immediately corrected that impression and stated that there was no foundation for interpreting his language to mean that, and the market went back for an hour or two.

Of course, it is impossible for the President or anyone else in authority to keep silent on everything which is transpiring in the Government, and it is impossible for anyone to prevent speculative minds from seizing upon incidents and forming conclusions as to anything that may happen in the future. It ought not to be stated in the Record, however, that the President or anyone else stated that there was going to be inflation, and that the market went up for an hour or two, and then stated that there would not be any inflation, and then the market went back. That is not in accordance with what occurred.

Mr. SCHALL. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Louisiana yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. LONG. I desire to correct the Senator from Kentucky, if the Senator from Minnesota will pardon me for just a minute.

I do not know who made these statements. I do not even know that they were made, Mr. President. All I know is what I read about them. As I said, an announcement appeared in the newspapers, which was interpreted—at least by the newspapers—to mean that there might be inflation, and the market went up, and then a corrected announcement was made, and the market went down. That kind of thing has happened so many times, however, that I believe if I were called upon to do it, I could cite at least a dozen instances in which either the announcement or the rumor of an announcement that we might have inflation raised the market, and a few days or a few hours later the announcement that we were not going to have it lowered the market. That has occurred constantly.

I now yield to the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. SCHALL. Mr. President, I was wondering if the fact that Liverpool has changed all her machinery to spin long-staple cotton, that Brazil is clearing off millions of acres to plant and raise cotton to take the place of our cotton, and that Russia has raised four times as much cotton as she has raised heretofore to fill up the chinks that our not selling our cotton has created, would not have more to do with that than the inflation idea.

Mr. LONG. I understand that there was an immense amount of foreign selling of cotton today, and that our foreign competitors threw an enormous amount of cotton on the market. Whether or not they were affected by this announcement or some other announcement, or, as the Senator from Kentucky suggests, by something else, I cannot say. I am not enough of an expert even to prophesy or to explore into the facts. What I was going to do was to lead up to the point that on a number of occasions the announcement or the rumor of an announcement has been made that there is going to be an expansion of the currency, or that more silver money may be issued, and then again a few days later there will be an announcement that that is not going to occur, but that something else is going to occur, and the market goes up, and the market goes down; and if this opinion is correct as to what caused the cotton market to drop today, the market has gone down $9 a bale, and tomorrow an announcement of something else may again send the market up $9.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, suppose we follow that logic. If the Secretary of the Treasury tomorrow morning shall announce that he has changed his mind, that he is not going to pay off the public debt by this $625,000,000, will the market go up $9 a bale?

Mr. LONG. I do not know. If that is what caused the break in the market, however, I suppose that a contrary announcement would result in a rise in the market. As I say, I do not know. What I am leading up to is this:

The Senator from Virginia [Mr. Glass] has made a very

The Senator from Virginia [Mr. Glass] has made a very striking statement here this evening. I do not believe Senators here have really grasped the purport of what he said. He said this afternoon, if I understood and correctly translate his words—I hope I may have the attention of the Senator from Virginia, because if I am mistaken I desire to be corrected—that within the amount of $4,000,000,000 under this joint resolution the President could do whatever he wanted to do; that that was practically the effect of the joint resolution. With the exception of $800,000,000, which the President must spend for relief, the Senator stated, as I understood him, that $4,000,000,000 of this money could be used for any purpose for which the President wishes to use it.

Before I make the analysis I desire to make of these three things, I wish to say that as to the relief money, the President can also do what he wants to do with that. The President does not have to spend any relief money in Virginia. He does not have to spend any in Iowa or in Minnesota. The President, under the part of this measure dealing with relief, is almost as footloose as he is under the $4,000,000,000 part of it, because already in some States relief has been cut off for reasons which were assigned, and in other States relief has been granted for reasons which were assigned. That may be done by the President, or it may be done by someone exercising authority under the President.

I now come to the point that the President of the United States has the power to regulate money and the value of money.

That is absolutely a correct statement, as I understand. In practical effect the President has the right to regulate money and the value of money. He has had that right for 2 years to my certain knowledge.

Not only that but the President has the right to regulate the value of commodities, to lower or to raise the value of commodities. According to the Senator from Virginia the $4,000,000,000 or the $5,000,000,000, as the case may be, is a fund to be used by the President as he sees fit.

I desire to invite the attention of the Chair and the Senate to this fact: We decided 2 years ago that the emergencies were such that we had to get out of the ordinary category of congressional legislation. Instead of enacting a law "Be it enacted by the Congress of the United States that such and such is the law", or "Be it enacted by the Congress of the United States that the following sum of money is hereby appropriated for the following purposes", or "Be it enacted by the Congress of the United States that such and such a tax is levied", we enacted laws reading, "Be it enacted by the Congress of the United States that in the discretion of the President of the United States he may promulgate rules and regulations providing such and such a value or such and such a law", and "Be it enacted by the Congress of the United States that the President may appropriate money in his discretion and subject to will in such and such a manner", and "Be it enacted by the Congress of the United States that the President be, and he is hereby, authorized to levy such tariffs as may be agreed upon by himself and foreign countries."

In other words, the making of the value of money and the regulating of the value of commodities, the making of appropriations and the expenditure of moneys appropriated and the levying of taxes, all of which had theretofore been exercised by the Congress, were, on account of the exigencies of the situation existing 2 years ago, momentarily placed in the hands of the President.

Mr. President, I did not rise to make a speech. I only wanted, before we quit for the day, to draw the attention of the Senate to what I want others to consider and probably to discuss.

Did not nearly every Senator who voted for those measures 2 years ago make the statement that "under ordinary circumstances I should not vote to put any such power as this in the hands of the President, but I am doing it momentarily and temporarily so we may expeditiously correct the depression now prevailing"? Were not those practically the words of every man here who voted to transfer all the functions of Congress into the hands of the President?

Was it not practically the statement of every one of them that they would not under any circumstances vote for the economy bill, vote for the monetary bill, or vote for any of these bills except for the reason that there was a temporary emergency then and there existing, which, in order to correct, they then felt justified in doing the abhorrent thing of voting to abdicate those functions on their part and repose them in the hands of the President?

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President-

Mr. LONG. I yield to the Senator from North Carolina.
Mr. REYNOLDS. I beg the Senator's pardon; I thought the Senator had concluded.

Mr. LONG. If the Senator wants the floor, I shall be glad to yield to him. I can get the floor at a later time.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I thank the Senator.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair recognizes the Senator from North Carolina.

INVESTIGATION OF MAYFLOWER HOTEL, WASHINGTON, D. C.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, I wish briefly to consume the time of the Senate for the purpose of discussing a subject which is of interest to approximately 20,000,000 people in the United States, in that it affects directly some 4,000,000 families, the heads of which have made purchase of and investment in first-mortgage and second-mortgage real-estate bonds which have been issued against hotel and other business properties throughout the country, and which corporations, issuing some $10,000,000,000 in bonds, have either gone into receivership or into bankruptcy.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Virginia?

Mr. REYNOLDS. Certainly.

Mr. GLASS. Does not the Senator think he could do that more effectively after a good night's sleep?

Mr. REYNOLDS. May I say to the Senator from Virginia that I wish the privilege of making presentation and explanation of a report which the subcommittee of the Committee on the District of Columbia, empowered to investigate the Mayflower matter, authorized me to make.

Mr. GLASS. I think the Senator could do it more effectively after a good night's rest than he could do it now, when everyone is tired out with other speeches which have been made, including my own.

Mr. KING. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. REYNOLDS. With pleasure.

Mr. KING. I inquire of the Chair whether, if the Senator from North Carolina yields to the suggestion of the Chairman of the Appropriations Committee, he may be recognized and have the floor upon the convening of the Senate tomorrow?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The present occupant of the chair could not make any such arrangement; but if the present occupant of the chair should happen to be in the chair upon the convening of the Senate tomorrow he would recognize the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, I am very happy, indeed, to abide by the suggestion of the able Senator from Utah [Mr. King], who is Chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia. I wish to say further that I am likewise very happy to abide by any suggestion which my good and honorable friend from Virginia [Mr. Glass] may make. I selected this time at which to make my statement because I observed that not many Senators are present and I did not know that many of them would be interested in the subject. I thought I would speak now so it would give them the opportunity of finishing consideration of the joint resolution tomorrow at a time when we shall have a full attendance of the Senate. I thought I would be thus accommodating those who might hear me speak now rather than by delaying the matter until tomorrow.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Carolina has been recognized by the Chair.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Very well.

Mr. President, in view of certain investigations carried on by a subcommittee of the Committee on the District of Columbia under Senate Resolution 231, Seventy-third Congress, adopted May 28, 1934, it has become my duty to bring to the attention of the Senate some of the remarkable and scandalous conditions prevailing in the District of Columbia, and throughout the United States, with reference to the financing of large properties and the distribution of their bonds and other securities to a credulous, innocent, and unsuspecting public.

On May 28, 1934, Senate Resolution 231 was passed by this body, authorizing an investigation of these practices, with particular reference to the Mayflower Hotel, a nationally known hotel institution. Our former colleague, Hon. Hamilton F. Kean, a great business man, was chairman of the first subcommittee. At the convening of this session of Congress I was appointed chairman of the subcommittee, and had the assistance of my distinguished colleague the Senator from Nevada [Mr. McCarran] and the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CAREY]. We likewise, at all times, had the enthusiastic support and interest and attendance at our hearings of our distinguished colleague the Chairman of the District Committee, the Senator from Utah [Mr. King].

The first investigation work done by the Kean subcommittee was reported during the last session of Congress, and revealed many startling conditions with particular reference to the District of Columbia, and the Wardman Park and Mayflower Hotel properties. It also foreshadowed widespread conditions prevailing elsewhere in the United States because of the operations of two corporations engaged chiefly in promoting and thereafter distributing the sale of securities of hotels and apartment houses in all parts of the United States, these corporations being the American Bond & Mortgage Co. of Chicago, and Halsey, Stuart & Co. of New York. However, the work of our first subcommittee was devoted, as stated before, chiefly to going into the history of the Mayflower Hotel in Washington. During this investigation we not only learned of the wide-spread conditions throughout the country of similar financial operations, but we learned that the House of Representatives was also engaged in a much more thorough investigation of the conditions in the country at large than our committee was authorized to make. However, although our jurisdiction was limited by the terms of our resolution, we did very thoroughly investigate the conditions of the Mayflower, and learned much of other conditions as to other properties, and awaited with great interest a report from the House committee, headed by Representative Sabath, as chairman. Further reference will be made to the findings of the Sabath committee in the course of this discussion.

The resolution of the Senate, S. Res. 231, called attention to certain conditions as to the Mayflower properties, to wit: That the property had originally cost about $5,000,000;

That securities had been sold against it for more than $11,000,000 by Halsey, Stuart & Co., and American Bond & Mortgage Co.:

That these securities had been sold to approximately 7,000 people in every State of the Union at par; $7,500,000 of these securities were first-mortgage bonds, $2,400,000, second-mortgage bonds, and more than $1,000,000 in preferred stock;

That the corporation was recklessly and wastefully man-

That is was also grossly overburdened with debt;

That its losses were enormous, and that notwithstanding these conditions the financing just mentioned was done with the public as though the corporation were prospering and as though the securities were sound.

Of course, a receivership resulted, and our resolution recited that after the receivership was obtained the same groups guilty of the fraudulent financing in the first instance were seeking to regain control of the property, and that to do so they were proceeding by secret methods, using the names of the bondholders obtained by them when the bonds were distributed, lists of which they only had, and which were denied to the public, and for many months even to the courts, and that thereby they had actually obtained control of a great majority of the bondholders under bondholders' deposit agreements, and were seeking to have the property sold in receivership so that they could repurchase it at a fraction of its original cost, make an enormous profit again by a new operation, and thereafter refinance the property at another enormously advanced figure, probably drawing down a second profit of several millions of dollars in addition to the more than $5,000,000 of which the public was defrauded in the first

To indicate the scope of our investigation under the first resolution, I quote the following provisions from the resolution (p. 12 of the report):

(a) Who sold and what methods were pursued to accomplish the sale of $7,500,000 of first-mortgage 6-percent bonds; of $2,400,000 second-mortgage 6½-percent mortgage bonds; of $3,031,100 of 6-percent preferred stock; and 60,000 shares of common stock, all securities of said corporations, and aside from the common stock, amounting in the aggregate to $12,931,100.

(b) As to the management of said corporations since their formation in or about 1925 to date.

(c) As to the circumstances which have led up to the fixing, in proceedings for foreclosure of the first mortgage, of $2,800,000 as a price at which the Mayflower properties may be sold, on which securities to the amount of $12,931,100 were sold to the public.

(d) Whether the sellers of such securities for $12,931,100 are the same persons, or some of them, who have now obtained control of said securities as members of bondholders' committees of said first-mathematical and the mathematical securities.

mortgage bonds and the methods used to obtain such control, and to induce the bondholders to whom they sold such bonds to deposit the same with them as reorganizers, and specifically to determine if said sellers of securities and the members of said bondholders' committees are now advocating the sale of said hotel property for $2,800,000, a sum approximately one-fourth the amount of the securities issued against the same

(e) Whether the proposed reorganization is in the interest of the security holders.

Being conscious of the undertaking assigned to us, your first subcommittee entered seriously upon its duties, and brought before it witnesses and documents in order to determine whether or not the charge made in the resolution was true. We made our report, and it was printed and copies furnished to the parties litigant, and to the justice considering the case in the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia. If any Senator desires to read the detailed report, it will be found in Report No. 107, Seventy-fourth Congress, this session. I read from that report, pages 15 and 16, as

It is perfectly clear to the Senate subcommittee that, so far as the deposit agreement itself is concerned, few bondholders, if any, ever realized what its terms were since the summary of the deposit under the agreement was sent only upon request. After the call was made for the deposit under the agreement, the New York committee secured 51 percent of all the first-trust bonds, the Chicago committee 21½ percent, and the Washington committee 13½ percent, totaling a little more than 85 percent of all first-trust bonds issued. Thereafter the committees issued the plan of reorganization. By the terms of the plan wide powers were vested in these issued. Thereafter the committees issued the plan of recognition. By the terms of the plan wide powers were vested in these

When your committee had learned of the conditions with respect to the Mayflower, and the efforts of the large original financial agencies to regain possession of the property by means of deposit agreements and the reorganization plan aforesaid, many investors became alarmed, and your subcommittee likewise became exercised lest the property should be sold by order of court and bought in by the financial interests behind the bondholders' groups at a fraction of its worth, a very small fraction of its cost, and a much smaller fraction of the amount of its outstanding securities.

This alarm was created by the fact that on application of the bondholders' committees' counsel, the justice of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia then having charge of the litigation had authorized the property to be | sold at an upset price of $2,800,000, when the property actually cost $5,200,000 or more, and had passed an order permitting the bondholders to bid and buy the property by depositing bonds in lieu of cash and only paying in cash an amount representing a small fractional interest of nondepositing bondholders, less than 20 percent of the total. At this time your subcommittee engaged Hon. Robert H. McNeill, a prominent and successful Washington attorney, as its counsel and instructed him to appear before the justice and make an effort to cause the then pending sale, which was advertised to occur in June 1934, to be postponed, and the terms and conditions of sale changed, and a better time chosen for the sale in view of the depressed real-estate market.

Your committee's counsel, Mr. McNeill, did so appear, and the corporation counsel's office also sent a representative to make a similar effort, on behalf of that office and on behalf of your subcommittee; and through the efforts of said counsel and the efforts of dissenting bondholders the sale was called off and postponed indefinitely. Before this was done, however, in open court it was admitted by all parties concerned, including the representatives of the bondholders' committees, that unless the sale were called off the property would be knocked down to the bondholders at the upset price of $2,800,000, little more than one-half of its actual cost and about one-fourth of the amount of the securities actually sold against it, and without a dollar being paid by the bondholders' committee on account of the purchase. The sale plan submitted to the court provided that the bondholders' committee might place on the property a first mortgage of from $500,000 to $750,000 to obtain funds with which to pay off dissenting bondholders and use the balance of the cash in hand, about $500,000, to pay receivers' fees, bondholders' fees, attorneys' charges, and numerous other extravagant expenses.

When this threatened sale was called off, as just outlined, your subcommittee felt confident, and now feels certain, that the results then obtained amounted to a saving of at least $1,500,000 to the bondholders, and probably $2,500,000, because, in the opinion of all financial experts consulted and particularly in the opinion of Senator Kean-who, as you Senators all know, was a financial man of great wisdomthe second-mortgage bonds which would have been distributed to the first-mortgage bondholders would not have been worth more than 50 cents on the dollar at any time, and probably much less, since similar bonds on the Wardman properties have been selling in Washington for the last 2 or 3 years at from 18 to 30 cents on the dollar; and the Wardman Park Hotel, as you all know, is a great hotel property, financed by the Halsey-Stuart interests, the dominating financial group in the case of the Mayflower.

Following the postponement of the sale, which I have just outlined, representatives of dissenting bondholders who had for 2 or 3 years been denouncing the plans of the American Bond & Mortgage Co. and Halsey, Stuart & Co., and the bondholders' committees and their financial interests and schemes with reference to the Mayflower, took advantage of section 77-B of the Bankruptcy Act passed by Congress in 1933, and filed a petition in bankruptcy against the Mayflower Hotel Co., believing that they were thereby divesting the control of the Mayflower property from the hands of the bondholders' groups and their financial backers who were proposing the fraudulent refinancing scheme I have just outlined. Certainly, this was the purpose of the bankruptcy provisions passed by Congress in 1933. However, I will show you that the purpose has lamentably failed in this instance, as it is failing in many instances throughout the United States. I only submit to the Senate the facts, so that it may draw its own conclusions and take such remedial steps as seem necessary.

After the Mayflower Co. had been put in bankruptcy, and notwithstanding the criticisms of the preexisting receivership of the property in the equity courts, and notwithstanding the findings of your subcommittee, first headed by Senator Kean, as to the extravagance and bad management of the receivership, the justice taking charge of the bankruptcy case appointed as trustees in bankruptcy the same three gentlemen who had been operating the hotel for about 3 years as receivers. With respect to the receivership for the hotel, I quote from our printed report, pages 13 to 15, as

Subsequent to the investigation held by the subcommittee and the issuance of its report in 1931 default occurred in the payment of interest on the notes secured by both the first and second trusts on the Mayflower Hotel. Default first occurred in the payment of interest under the provisions of the second trust. Subsequent to the default on the second trust an application was made to the the default on the second trust an application was made to the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia sitting in equity for the appointment of receivers. After due notice to the Mayflower Hotel Co., and after hearing upon the petition of second-trust noteholders, Mr. Justice Gordon, on July 29, 1931, appointed three attorneys at law, members of the bar of the District of Columbia, as receivers. The persons appointed under the court's order were Mr. John Lewis Smith, Mr. Rush Holland, and Mr. J. Miller Kenyon. Thereafter default also occurred under the first trust and like application was made for appointment of receivers. The court after hearing upon made for appointment of receivers. The court, after hearing upon the second application for receivership, continued these same persons in office as receivers. Since that date operation of the hotel has been by the receivers, under the supervision of the court.

The committee finds that since the receivership the condition of the hotel has been steadily improved. From July 30, 1931, to January 31, 1934, there has been available net profits for interest and receivers' expenses $998,262.40. This, according to the chart submitted by the receivers, takes into consideration taxes and insurance. The total income during that time has been over $4.000.000. ance. The total income during that time has been over $4,000,000, with an operating result of $1,230,330.24. The improvement in the hotel has been brought about mainly by reason of the influx into the city of persons having business relations with the Federal Government

In one of the reports of the receivers filed in court criticizing the reorganization plan the receivers stated therein that they had given practically their entire time to the operation for more than 2 years. The testimony of the receivers before the committee does not bear out the statements made by them to the court, but their testimony, on the contrary, indicates that in most instances they arrived at the hotel around 10:30 to 11 o'clock in the morning, and, after having lunched, left the hotel about 2 p. m. The receivers have already applied for and received on account of fees $37,500 each and they are asking for fees, which, if granted, will net each receiver $20,000 per year; or, if stated in terms of interest, 6 percent per annum on $1,000,000. In addition to the fees, the receivers have been accustomed to receive their lunches at the hotel gratis.

The committee is of the opinion that the appointment of 3 receivers in a case of this character was unnecessary; that 1 diligent receiver, with the help of competent counsel, could have In one of the reports of the receivers filed in court criticizing the diligent receiver, with the help of competent counsel, could have performed all of the duties shown to have been performed by these receivers, and that 1 receiver could have been compensated at a figure which would have saved considerable money to the already denuded bondholders.

The receivers attempted to justify the fees paid to them, but the committee finds from information before it that the receivers were not even familiar with the banks at which their accounts were kept, nor were they able to give an accurate statement conwere kept, for were they able to give an accurate statement con-cerning the number of checks issued by them. One receiver esti-mated the average number of checks signed by them to be 100 per day. As a matter of fact, the evidence before the committee shows the number of checks to be more nearly 10 to 15 per day

The fact is that the management of the hotel employed before The fact is that the management of the hotel employed before receivership, having been retained by the receivers, is very largely responsible for the efficient running of the hotel. In retaining the management the receivers are to be commended.

This committee has found in the course of its minute and detailed investigation that Mr. Polio, manager of the hotel, has made a most satisfactory job of his management in every respect and the success of the hotel is largely attributable to his management.

As I have stated, notwithstanding these findings in our report, the justice having charge of the bankruptcy case in the first instance appointed the same three gentlemen as temporary trustees. Under the Bankruptcy Act of 1933, these trustees were permitted to hold for a period of 30 days, or more, in the discretion of the court. At the end of 30 days another justice assumed charge of the bankruptcy proceeding. He also was furnished with a copy of the report of your subcommittee under the chairmanship of Senator Kean, and has called to his attention the terms of the report, including its references to the preexisting receivership. Notwithstanding this information, this justice appointed as permanent trustees in bankruptcy the same three gentlemen who had been receivers in equity, and they continued in an uninterrupted absolute control of the management of the property.

After the bankruptcy proceeding had been instituted and permanent trustees appointed, Halsey, Stuart & Co. and the American Bond & Mortgage Co. and a group of Washington bondholders, known as the "Washington Committee", said committees all having formed themselves into a so-called "combined or consolidated bondholders' committee", resumed their efforts again to get the dominating control of the Mayflower Hotel Co., and submitted to the bankruptcy court a modified plan of reorganization, this plan calling for a new first-mortgage bond issue of about one-third of the amount of the first- and second-mortgage bonds originally sold by the same financial agencies to the public, together with a certificate of stock for 10 shares to be attached to each $1,000 bond, and delivered to the former first-mortgage bondholders in units, the bond unit representing 60-percent face value of the outstanding first-mortgage bonds, the secondmortgage bonds being disregarded except for a small cash payment growing out of the proposed sale of unmortgaged assets. This plan, like the plan offered to the equity court, called for no cash whatsoever from the financial groups, and permitted them to take absolute control of the corporation without putting up a dollar, and permitted them also to take from the receivers approximately $600,000 in cash for distribution to their own committees and counsel, to the receivers and their counsel, to the trustee and his counsel, and to cover expenses incurred by said groups during the entire time of the continuance of their plans to regain control of the Mayflower property, the estimated total of such fees being about $600,000.

Upon learning of these plans, your committee again instructed its counsel to bring to the court's attention the fundamental objections to the plan, and to urge upon the court that the bondholders should be furnished information as to the details and true intent and meaning of these plans before they were received by the court for consideration. In fact, Senators, your first subcommittee, headed by Senator Kean, urged strongly upon the court that there should be appointed by the court, under the bankruptcy provisions of the law, a special master or officer of the court for the purpose of communicating with all the bondholders and advising them of the pending litigation, so that they might intelligently express their wishes as to whether or not they desired the same people who had defrauded them out of more than $6,000,000 when the bonds were sold to them should regain control under a voting-trust agreement for a period of 10 years, unrestricted and absolute control for 2 years, with an 8-year renewal by a majority of the stock attached to the new bonds, all of which stock would remain in the possession of the voting trustees during the intervening 2 years, thereby giving practically absolute power over it for a period of 8 additional years.

While the above investigation, the second investigation, was going on, a distinguished former Representative came before the court with an offer to buy the hotel property by putting up $1,000,000 in cash and bidding at the beginning of a proposed public sale a total of $4,000,000. That is, this gentleman, who is now a practicing lawyer in the District of Columbia, Hon. S. Wallace Dempsey, offered to start the bidding at $4,000,000. He also notified the court that he represented a widely known hotel management, the Manger interests of New York. When this information was received by your subcommittee it seemed so important that it suggested to the court that in addition to submitting to the bondholders the question of their approval of the bondholders' plan to be managed for 10 years by the financial groups who had defrauded them, they also be permitted to express their wishes as to giving to the outside bidder represented by Mr. Dempsey an opportunity to bid on the property at a public sale. With respect to our recommendation to the court as to the appointment of a special master, I quote from our report (p. 19) on that point as follows:

The committee believes from the testimony adduced at the hearing that the terms of sale as laid down in the decree of court which was signed December 18, 1933, providing for a minimum bid of $2,800,000 should be modified. The committee believes that under no circumstances should the property be offered with an upset bid of less than $3,500,000 and that, as to the terms of sale the wishes of the majority of the first-mortgage bondholders should be obtained by people inquiring through an officer of the court appointed for this purpose.

The committee also believes that the terms of the foreclosure and sale should also provide that the court retain jurisdiction of the action so as to prevent any reorganization plan submitted by the bondholders' committees so far as may be necessary to have, approve, and confirmed a sale to an outside purchaser on the terms of sale modified as hereinabove suggested, or as the court shall order, and the disposition of cash paid and the issuance of securities to the existing security holders in the process and as a part of the reorganization of the Mayflower Hotel Co., all of which the committee believes should be done under the supervision of the court. Should the bondholders' agreements be allowed to stand by the court, the committee also recommends that the decree be modified so as to provide that nondepositing bondholders shall receive the same treatment and be entitled to the same amount of securities and cash as those who have heretofore deposited their securities under the deposit agreement.

As I have stated, after the equity receivership had proceeded for about 3 years the bankruptcy court took charge of the Mayflower properties. At this time, as all Senators know, Washington was full of people engaged in the procurement of codes for industry, or in the administration of codes and related matters. This brought to Washington many thousands of new Government employees and a host of people interested in governmental business. In fact, this had been going on since the inauguration of President Roosevelt. The results of this influx of people into Washington filled the Mayflower Hotel with guests, and resulted in substantial profits for the 3 years of the receivership. Out of these operations there was accumulated a fund of more than $600.-000 over and above operating expenses, and over and above a certain additional amount-about $675,000-paid as interest on first-mortgage bonds. However, this apparent profit was not all a real profit, as depreciation and obsolescence on the hotel and equipment was not fully charged against operating income. Still the property was demonstrated to be a valuable property; and this accounts for the fact that the Manger Hotel interests of New York and other hotel interests were endeavoring to get an opportunity to bid on the hotel property at public or private sale by the court in competition with reorganization bondholders' groups, which we believed to be headed by Halsey, Stuart & Co.

It was obviously the purpose of the Halsey, Stuart & Co., and the American Bond & Mortgage groups to prevent such competition in bidding. From the time the bidder represented by Mr. Dempsey appeared in court, offering to start the bidding on the property at $4,000,000, a determined effort to prevent a consideration of this bid or any other bid was launched in court by the bondholders' committee which, I regret to say, was apparently concurred in by the receivers of the company.

I am sure Senators will agree with me that it was the purpose of the new bankruptcy law of 1933, section 77-B, to guarantee to the holders of securities against mortgaged property that no organization of bondholders promoted and financed by sinister financial interests should be allowed to dominate any plan of sale or reorganization of these properties where they had fraudulently oversold securities to the public. This was impressed upon the court by counsel for your committee, by representatives from the corporation counsel's office, by our report signed by Senator Kean and myself, and by the attorney for independent nondepositing bondholders.

Regardless of these facts, the justice appeared to act throughout this case upon a misconception of the new act of Congress. He seemed to act upon the theory that so long as any sort of plan of reorganization was submitted to him, he was without power to do anything except submit to this plan and approve it.

Notwithstanding the findings of the two subcommittees of the Senate that these bondholders' groups were the same agencies that had defrauded the bondholders of more than $6,000,000, and that they should not be treated by the court as honest representatives of bondholders, and that their deposit agreements should be disregarded, as allowed by the Bankruptcy Act of 1933, section 77 (b), nevertheless the court assumed that they should have every consideration just as though they had been independently organized, as though they were disinterested and public-spirited, and as though they had previously dealt fairly with the investors in the bonds of the company.

In our second report upon the Mayflower, completed in January of this session, we again emphasized our previous recommendation that the Halsey-Stuart Co. and American Bond & Mortgage groups should not be recognized by the court, and their representatives should be refused consideration or a hearing. We suggested to the court in our report that this action was in line with the prevailing decisions of Federal and State courts in other jurisdictions. to the court such rulings by the supreme court of the city of New York in the case involving a large banking house of that city, and by the Federal court in Illinois, refusing to recognize Halsey-Stuart Co., who had formed a bondholders' committee in that State and sought recognition in the Federal court, just as they had done in the Mayflower case. These cases are cited at the bottom of page 9 of our report.

The subcommittee finished its investigation, prepared its report, and on February 6, 1935, submitted a copy of the report to the court, outlining the conclusions which I have just recited, and again submitted that the groups seeking to get control of the Mayflower should not be allowed to do so.

Notwithstanding the foregoing presentation, as I am advised, the court instructed the litigating parties in the Mayflower case to close the transaction whereby the title and possession of the Mayflower property in bankruptcy was transferred to a new corporation sponsored and promoted by the bondholders' committees, including the equitable right over more than $600,000 in cash, and permitted representatives of the new corporation so sponsored to enter into possession and control of all assets of the corporation, which control now exists.

Mr. President, at the conclusion of my remarks I wish to have printed certain citations which I have made and copies of which citations were submitted to the court at the time our representative, Mr. Robert H. McNeill, of the District Bar, and a representative of the district attorney's office of this city appeared before the court.

I also should like to have included as a part of my remarks Senate bill 1805, which was introduced by me in this body on February 7, 1935, following the report of our subcommittee, which is addressed to the matter of a list of investors holding bonds and of those making purchase of securities.

In addition thereto, I should also like to have made a part of my remarks a portion of the report made by the subcommittee of which I served as chairman, which makes mention of the enormous amount of money which will be called for in the payment of the obligations on the Mayflower Hotel property in the liquidation of the salaries of the receivers and attorneys and bondholders' committees, which information is set out on pages 8 and 9 of the report dated February 7, 1935.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. McKellar in the chair). Is there objection?

There being no objection, the matters were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

A bill to amend the act entitled "An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States", approved July 1, 1898, and acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto.

Grand total

Be it enacted, etc., That subsection (c) of section 77 (b) of the act entitled "An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States", approved July 1, 1898, as amended and supplemented, is amended by adding the following two paragraphs:

"The court shall disregard all depositary agreements which have been secured or are held by brokers or other persons associated with such brokers who have sold or participated in the sale of securities against the property involved in the reorganization proceedings to an amount in excess of the fair value thereof, and such depositary agreements shall be conclusively deemed fraudulent and void; and the court shall ascertain the real wishes of the bondholders or other creditors through a special master appointed for that purpose, and all proceedings pend-

real wishes of the bondholders or other creditors through a special master appointed for that purpose, and all proceedings pending in any court of the United States wherein such bondholders deposit agreements have been recognized shall be reopened and reviewed and such agreements decreed legally void and further proceedings in such cases had in conformity herewith.

"That in the reorganization of any corporation under the terms hereof wherever it appears that any bond or brokerage house, which participated in the sale of any securities of the corporation so being sought to be reorganized hereunder, has in its possession or control a full or partial list of the names and addresses of stock or bond holders of said corporation obtained by said house in its operation of selling said corporation's securities, the court, before whom said reorganization of said corporation is pending, is hereby empowered and directed, upon application and pending, is hereby empowered and directed, upon application and for good cause shown, to require said list to be deposited in said court for its use in such reorganization."

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like to inquire of the Senator from North Carolina whether he has included in his remarks a statement showing the claims of lawyers and others which have been filed.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I may say to the Senator from Utah that that information is contained on pages 8 and 9 of the report, and I have asked that it be included in my remarks.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, in view of the references made by the chairman of the subcommittee who conducted the investigation, and in view of the rather startling facts which were presented, and in view of the fact that the report which has been submitted by the committee reveals some of these facts, it seems to me that the report, if it is proper to do so, might be transmitted to the committee of the House of Representatives of which Judge Sabath is chairman, which is investigating the alleged fraudulent transactions of some of the big bondholders throughout the United States, so that that committee might consider the report in connection with their activities.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is informed that that cannot be done officially, but there is no reason why the report could not be sent to the committee of the House of Representatives informally.

Mr. KING. It occurred to me that perhaps the report might be transmitted to the other body for their information, inasmuch as a committee is there making an investigation, but if that may not be done within the rules, I shall not ask that it be done.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. ROBINSON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. McKELLAR, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, reported favorably the nominations of sundry postmasters.

Mr. VAN NUYS, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported favorably the nomination of Edward G. Dunn, of Iowa, to be United States attorney for the northern district of Iowa.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. McKellar in the chair). The reports will be placed on the Executive Calendar. If there be no further reports of committees, the calendar is in order.

POSTMASTERS

The legislative clerk read sundry nominations of post-masters.

Mr. ROBINSON. I ask that the nominations of post-masters be confirmed en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nominations of postmasters are confirmed en bloc.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, March 11, 1935

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

Rev. Dr. L. L. Johnson, Baptist missionary to Maceio, Alagoas, Brazil, offered the following prayer:

O Lord, Thou hast been our dwelling place in all generations. Even before the mountains were brought forth, before Thou hadst created the earth and the world, from everlasting to everlasting, Thou art God. We look unto Thee, our Heavenly Father, with grateful hearts this morning, for the manifest mercy of Thy benevolent hand upon our Nation through all of its long history. We bless Thy name, our Father, that Thou didst guide the Pilgrim Fathers to these shores, that Thy hand was upon those of our fathers who founded this Republic on the sure foundation of justice and of love and of truth; and, our Father, we pray this morning that as Thou hast guided and blessed us in all of the hours of crisis which have faced our Nation, that Thou shalt still place Thy guiding hand upon those who rule in our Nation.

We pray, our Father, that Thou shalt bless those who sit within these walls, who counsel about the welfare of our country. We pray, dear Lord, that here intelligence and ambition may be consecrated to the services of our Nation and to the world. And may Thy blessing abide ever upon our great land, that the wonderful material wealth which Thou hast given us may be coined into character and into values moral and spiritual which shall bless humanity and honor Thee. And we ask it in Jesus' name. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Saturday, March 9, 1935, was read and approved.

HOUR OF MEETING TOMORROW

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns today it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock a.m. tomorrow.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. Can the gentleman inform us, or can the Speaker, when the Home Owners' Loan Corporation bill is going to be taken up again?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Tomorrow morning.

The SPEAKER. If this request is granted, it will be taken up tomorrow.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. There will be a special order first, which will take a little time. Today the business is that of the so-called "pink slip" legislation, and then business in order from the Committee on the District of Columbia.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Colorado?

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. Will there be anything else tomorrow after we finish the Home Owners' Loan Corporation?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Yes; if we have time, we will take up the agricultural appropriation bill.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Speaker, after we finish the H. O. L. C. an emergency deficiency appropriation bill will come up. In that bill are carried many deficiencies. The departments will be out of funds by the 15th. The bill carries $94,000,000 compensation for veterans, and $60,000,000 seed the newspapers carried stories and editorials throughout the Nation, characterizing the income-tax publicity laws as enemies of loans for farmers. The bill is important not only from that standpoint, but from the standpoint of the exhaustion of funds in the different departments on several small items.

Mr. SNELL. Is it the program to continue that on Wednesday?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Yes.

Mr. SNELL. And take up the bonus bill on Thursday?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. And I am going to ask to dispense with business in order on Calendar Wednesday.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Colorado that when the House adjourns today it adjourn to meet tomorrow at 11 o'clock a. m.?

There was no objection.

DISPENSING WITH CALENDAR WEDNESDAY BUSINESS

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to dispense with business in order on Calendar Wednesday this week. We have a very full week in front of us.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? There was no objection.

THE "PINK SLIP" REBELLION

Mr. CLAIBORNE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend in the RECORD the remarks made by my colleague Judge Bell, with respect to the "pink slip" legislation.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CLAIBORNE. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the radio address of my colleague from Missouri, Hon. C. Jasper Bell, from Washington, D. C., March 4, 1935, as follows:

Ladies and gentlemen, I have been wondering as I stood here

Ladies and gentlemen, I have been wondering as I stood here waiting before this microphone just how you would feel if you were awakened some morning after a sleepless night worrying about your business and found that the paper at your breakfast table carried a story emblazoned on its front page showing the state of your business affairs?

No doubt it would be a great shock to you. Your first impulse would be to give vent to your anger. There are thousands upon thousands of substantial business and professional men, widows, and citizens in almost every walk of life who would feel just as you would on that occasion. They would feel that neither the Government nor any individual has the right to hold a court of inquisition on them to learn and punish their private affairs, except insofar as the public welfare is concerned.

Yet according to section 55 (b) of the Revenue Act of 1934 and a similar section of the National Industrial Recovery Act passed by Congress in 1933, the United States Government, in effect, may soon be doing this very thing.

Listen carefully while I read you a few lines from the United States statutes on the revenue act:

"Every person required to file an income-tax return shall cause

States statutes on the revenue act:

"Every person required to file an income-tax return shall cause to be filed with his return, upon a form prescribed by the Commissioner, a correct statement of the following items: (1) Name and address; (2) total gross income; (3) total deductions; (4) net income; (5) total credits against net income for purposes of tax, and (6) tax payable."

It is now that we come to the most detrimental part of the act which continues and relates that:

"Such statements or copies thereof shall as soon as practicable."

which continues and relates that:

"Such statements or copies thereof shall, as soon as practicable be made available to the public examination in such manner as the Commissioner may determine."

That in substance is the "pink slip" clause against which the many substantial people of the Nation are rebelling.

This legislation was crowded through the last session of Congress during those stormy hectic days toward the end of the session when everyone recognized the importance of passing the Revenue Act as an emergency measure.

Revenue Act as an emergency measure.

The leaders in the Senate were afraid to push the fight against this rider providing for publicity because they were afraid a filibuster would defeat the entire Revenue Act. Therefore it was enacted and sent to conference between the Finance Committee of the Senate and the Ways and Means Committee of the House for a final report. The members of the conferring committee from the House objected to the rider, but in the interest of the bill's greater importance otherwise, they voted to report it favorably for action. It was adopted a short time later by resolutions in both Houses

A big fight is brewing now in the Senate on the bill. It is believed that a majority of the House Members are in favor of repeal of the publicity laws.

When I submitted my bill for repeal as a companion bill to that filed in the Senate by Senator Copeland, of New York, it appeared that we might be fighting for a lost cause. The Senate's attitude was in doubt, and there appeared to be no crystallization of thought on the House side. At the time of the filing of my bill in the Senate was logical.

A the time of the filing of my bill to that prospects given them by the Government.

From these reasons you can see that my action in filing my repeal measure was logical.

Promiscuous publicity of income-tax return information under the manner prescribed by the present laws would be a vicious thing.

the public welfare.

They cited that the only State that has tried income-tax publicity was Wisconsin, and that the Wisconsin Tax Commission published a report in which it opposed the promiscuous use of income-tax information for private purposes. The report pointed out that this publicity was used almost exclusively for private and pursonal interests.

out that this publicity was used almost exclusively for private and personal interests.

The commission's report concluded: "These files contain the record of the life and register the pulse of the personal and private business affairs of our own taxpayers and should be accessible only when public welfare is concerned."

Political and economical observers feel that if publication of income-tax matters was so unsuccessful in Wisconsin, it is apparent it would be an unsuccessful Federal law.

Commenting on the legislation pow pending before Congress.

Commenting on the legislation now pending before Congress, looking to the repeal of this iniquitous measure, the New York Times, in an editorial on February 11, says: "It is to be hoped that this Congress will undo the mistakes of its predecessor. It is hardly necessary to recapitulate the invincible arguments against a requirement that assumes every income-tax payer to be a crook."

The New York Herald Tribune, on February 12, said: measure should be repealed. It is a stupid thing. There is not one thing that can be said in its favor. The "pink slip" was not sponsored by the President. It was not called for in the Democratic platform."

There are many reasons for repeal, expressed daily to me in the numerous letters that have flooded my office since I filed my bill.

The endorsement of the Copeland-Bell bill has been Nation-wide. It has been endorsed by merchants' associations, lawyers, dentists, doctors, chambers of commerce throughout the land, and citizens from all walks of life.

I was very much gratified last week-end to learn that a subcommittee of the Ways and Means Committee of the House had determined to act immediately on the bill in the face of a threat from certain Senators that they would submit a bill as a rider to some other emergency measure of the President's program which would be more drastic and severe than the present law, if that were possible.

The action of the Ways and Means Committee was fearless and courageous. It came after I had talked on numerous occasions with various Members and leaders of the House of Representatives. It is my understanding now that the bill will reach the floor of the House this week. At that time a vote may be taken and I am sure that the House Membership will show the courage of their convictions in voting the measure through for submission to the Senate for a final vote.

It is my understanding tonight that the bill which will be reported favorably to the House for action will be one which will restore the income-tax publicity laws to their 1926 status.

My bill and that of Senator Copeland were both designed to serve that purpose. In fact, they were the only bills before Congress which would totally accomplish the purpose effectively, yet leave still available all necessary information to proper Government officials. ment officials.

under the Revenue Act of 1926 the committees of the House and Senate, State officials, and Federal tax officials were guaranteed access to the income-tax records. Other releasing of this information was to be done under rules prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury and approved by the President of the United States under Executive order. That gave the people ample protection. tection.

There were several distinct reasons, all objections to the present laws, which caused me to file my bill for repeal. They were:

First. The "pink slip" publicity will not aid tax collections, as the Wisconsin report shows. After all, that should be the sole purpose of such a law.

Second. Small business men, professional men, and small corporate enterprises will be compelled to give competitors the information which will allow only the large and the strong to survive. One of my prime considerations was for the small business man (and God knows what a struggle most of them have had in the last 4 years), whose business livelihood might be jeopardized by the revelation of his business success or failure to unscrupulous and predatory competitors. predatory competitors.

Third. The "pink slip" will give just enough publicity to be misleading.

Fourth. The "pink slip" sucker list will provide the best possible encouragement and assistance to unscrupulous salesmen, stock peddlers, "blue sky" promoters, and blackmailers who may not otherwise obtain the precise information released in this manner.

Fifth. The cost of making public this information will be tremendous.

Sixth. The "pink slip" spy or snooper will become a gossiping

Sixth. The "pink slip" spy or snooper will become a gossiping menace in every community.

Seventh. The "pink slip" tax expert will pursue every taxpayer in the land to get a commission for his pretended and illegal help. Eighth. Kidnapers and racketeers will use the "pink slip" list as a directory for their activities. They will have a certified list of prospects given them by the Government.

From these reasons you can see that my action in filing my speed measure was locied.

It would serve no useful purpose and would be an unwarranted intrusion by the Government into the private affairs of the people. Publicity clauses have been attached on several occasions to the income-tax laws, but they have always been met by a storm of protest from the right-thinking people of our country, and have been promptly repealed at the next session of Congress.

If you want these laws repealed before March 15, when they become effective, write or wire your Congressman and your Senators. They are your servants and representatives.

Let them know what you want.

They should join in this rebellion to repeal the "pink slip" laws.

RESOLUTION OF THE ARKANSAS SENATE

Mr. PARKS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD a resolution of the Arkansas Senate with reference to the services of the distinguished leader in the Senate. Hon. JOSEPH T. ROBINSON.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. PARKS. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following resolution of the Arkansas Senate with reference to the services of the distinguished leader of the Senate. Hon. JOSEPH T. ROBINSON:

Senate Resolution 14

Whereas the Congress of the United States now has pending many measures of vital importance, sponsored by the President of the United States, for the purpose of bettering social and economic conditions and for rehabilitating the people of this Nation; and Whereas efforts have been and are now being made to embarrass

Resolved, That we express our supreme confidence in Franklin D. Roosevelt, our President, and Joe T. Robinson, the Democratic leader of the United States Senate, and a distinguished son of the State of Arkansas, and extend to them our grateful and heartfelt appreciation for their untiring efforts in enacting legislation and administering the affairs of our National Government in the best interests of all humanity; be it therefore who for selfish interests seek to obstruct and destroy the humanitarian program of our great President and the efforts of our beloved leader, Senator Joe T. Robinson.

March 7, 1935, resolution read and adopted.

E. Harris, Secretary.

OREGON APPLES

Mr. EKWALL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 2 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. EKWALL. Mr. Speaker, my Oregon colleagues and I have had delivered to the cloak room on the Republican and Democratic sides four boxes each of Oregon apples. which we want the Members here to enjoy. [Applause.] They come from the district of my colleague, Governor PIERCE, the Second Oregon District, from the Hood River Valley, about 60 miles from my home city of Portland. They are not the best apples we grow there, because it is a little late in the season for apples. Earlier next session we shall have sent here from Oregon some of the most beautiful apples grown in the world. Nature has so combined the elements and the climate in the Hood River Valley, that we believe the most delicious apples in the world are grown there. The city of Hood River, at the head of that valley, is located on the now world-famed Columbia River Highway, and it nestles at the foot of the majestic Mt. Hood, whose peaks, forever snow-covered, stand like sentinels thousands of feet in the air. The transcontinental airplanes, flying down the awe-inspiring Columbia River Gorge, pass over this beautiful Hood River Valley, disclosing a scene of such beauty that once seen, it is never forgotten. From time to time we are also going to have a supply of Oregon walnuts, filberts, and prunes sent here for distribution. When I refer to Oregon prunes, I mean prunes that, once tasted, babies cry for and adults will walk many miles to procure. Then also we shall endeavor to distribute sometime the world-renowned Medford, Oreg., pears, grown in the First Oregon District, represented here by my colleague, Mr. Morr. We want you all to enjoy these apples at this time, and to think of Oregon and the citizens of Oregon and of the beautiful Hood River Valley, and to know that you will always be welcome there at any time.

Mr. COCHRAN. And is it not true that the original trees on which these apples grow-

Mr. EKWALL. Yes; they undoubtedly came from Missouri. [Laughter and applause.]

THE FRAZIER-LEMKE BILL

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by including therein a resolution of both houses of the Legislature of the State of Michigan relative to the Frazier-Lemke bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following resolution adopted by the Legislature of the State of Michigan:

House Concurrent Resolution 36

A concurrent resolution providing for the appointment of a committee of two members of the house of representatives to be appointed by the speaker of the house and one member of the senate to be appointed by the president of the senate to accompany a delegation of farmers to Washington, D. C.

Whereas there has been presented to the Congress of the United States a bill known as the "Frazier-Lemke Act", and this measure is now pending before the Senate and the House of Representatives of the Congress of the United States; and Whereas this bill, if enacted into law, will relieve the farmers and agriculturists of this country by refinancing their debts at a low rate of interest; and low rate of interest: and

Whereas a company of nearly 300 representative farmers of the State of Michigan are making a trip to Washington on March 9 for the purpose of urging the passage of this important legislation: Therefore be it

Resolved by the house of representatives (the senate concurring), That the speaker of the house of representatives be instructed to appoint two members of the house of representatives and the president of the senate be requested to appoint one senator to this large delegation of farmers to Washington and in behalf of this legislature urge the passage of the so-called "Frazier-Lemke Act"; and be it further Resolved, That copies of this resolution be presented by this committee of representatives and senator to the President of the United States and members of the Michigan delegation in the House of Representatives and Senate at Washington.

Lansing, Mich., March 8, 1935.

Clerk of the House of Representatives. FRED I. CHASE, Secretary of the Senate.

Mr. Speaker, I should like to add that the Republican Members of the House of Representatives from Michigan met this morning in the committee room of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce with the delegation of farmers from Michigan and the committee of the legislature of the State, referred to in the above resolution and who are now in Washington, and exchanged views relative to the Frazier-Lemke bill, and my information is that the delegation plans to meet with the Democratic Members of the House from the State sometime during the afternoon.

WAR DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATION BILL-1936

Mr. PARKS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 5913) making appropriations for the military and nonmilitary activities of the War Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1936, and for other purposes, with Senate amendments, disagree to the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. Parks]? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and appoints the following conferees: Messis. Blanton, McMillan, Snyder, Dockweiler, Bolton, and Powers.

" PINK SLIP " PROVISION

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that my colleague, Mr. Treadway, be allowed to extend his own remarks in the RECORD on the so-called pink slip" amendment.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, the so-called "pink slip", based upon the amendment inserted in the Revenue Act of 1934, has created great public interest. So far as the section of Massachusetts which I represent is concerned, there appears to be a unanimous desire for its repeal. Explanations have been made as to how this requirement of law came into existence. It was not inserted in the Revenue Act of 1934 on its own merits, but as a necessary compromise in order to secure senatorial action upon the whole bill. As one of the conferees, I happen to have known all about the matter, but naturally am not in a position to make a statement based upon what transpired in the conference between the two branches. It is, however, perfectly proper that I thould state my individual opinion.

I never have favored greater publicity of income-tax returns than was provided by the law from 1926 until this year. That law offered ample opportunity for those entitled to information about the payment of income taxes to secure that information. Beyond that is simply a gratification of curiosity seekers or worse. It can serve no possible good purpose. Congress, through its proper committees or any special committee, the Governors of the States, or the stockholders in a corporation can under suitable rules and regulations obtain all data to which they may rightfully be entitled. The individual taxpayer should have protection of law from snoopers, blackmailers, and others with evil intent who wish the information for ulterior purposes.

I trust that the "pink slip" requirement will be repealed by prompt action on the part of Congress before the time comes for the information to be made public.

DEFLATING THE DEBT STRUCTURE AS A MEANS TOWARD ECONOMIC RECOVERY

Mr. TOBEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD by inserting an address made over the radio by Hon. Theodore Christianson. of Minnesota, on February 28.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Hampshire?

There was no objection.

Mr. TOBEY. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following radio address by the Honorable Theodore Christianson, of Minnesota, over the network of the National Broadcasting Co., on Tuesday, February 26, 1935:

At this time the people of the country are watching the news dispatches from Washington with great interest and much concern. They feel that history is in the making, and that decisions are being made which will shape the destiny of this country for a long time to come. Two years ago their mood was one of confidence; they felt that the Nation would soon emerge from the depression and that happy days would come again. That mood has given place to one of doubt, and even of despair, as the long months have dragged along without any improvement in the fundamental economic situation.

Two schools of thought seem to be developing in this country.

Two schools of thought seem to be developing in this country, both of which contemplate an abandonment of the underlying principles upon which America was built. Those who follow one school wish to retain the capitalistic order, but to regiment it still further, and to direct and control the entire mechanism of American business and industry from Washington. Those who follow the other school would have the Government not only direct the economic mechanism but own it acquiring it either direct the economic machine but own it, acquiring it either piecemeal by nationalizing one industry after the other, or all at once by wrecking capitalism and building upon its ruins a communistic state.

Whether we accept one of these alternatives or the other, whether we move with Rome or Moscow as our eventual goal, whether we move with rollie or moscow as our eventual goal, the end-result, so far as the average citizen is concerned, will be much the same. He will lose that individual freedom of choice and action which is the most precious part of the American heritage, and become the subject of the most ruthless and relentheritage, and become the subject of the most ruthless and relent-less of all tyrants—the all-embracing and all-powerful state.

The record of the last 2 years does not present by any means a uniform pattern. It is not easy to say toward which of these two goals we are moving. Sometimes the captain has turned to the right, and sometimes to the left; and as a result the ship has followed a zig-zag course. The N. R. A., and some of the policies of the Triple A, especially some of the developments of the Triple A now being proposed, point toward fascism. The T. V. A. and pending measures seemingly designed to put important private industries competing with T. V. A. out of business, point toward the eventual supplanting of individual enterprise by State monopoly. But, whatever the course toward which the skipper steers the craft, we are heading for uncharted waters. We are moving in a direction in which this Nation has never moved in the past, and in which no nation ever moved without coming to grief eventually.

Is it necessary, in order to accomplish economic recovery, to follow either of these two courses? In fact, can recovery be accomplished by any policy whether capitalistic or communistic, that is designed to put the individual in a strait-jacket? Are not individual initiative and self-direction needed to release those human forces which must be let loose once more if we are to have economic well-being?

As a Republican I believe that we should avoid both of the alternatives between which the Democratic party has been shifting during the last 2 years, and move straight ahead toward the goal which the fathers set a century and a half ago. I do not believe in regimentation. I believe that competition is not only the best regulator of business but the only regulator that not believe in regimentation. I believe that competition is not only the best regulator of business, but the only regulator that will regulate in the long run. The trouble with the artificial devices is that they are so complicated as to baffle and defeat those intrusted with their administration, and in the end to bedevil the situation instead of clarifying and improving it.

I am not one of those who would justify every policy my party has pursued in the past. I live in the Middle West, where the spirit of political independence is strong and where Republicans frequently dissent and insurge. The Republican party is big enough to take it on the chin and to admit that it has made mistakes; and I would say that its biggest mistake is not that it neglected to regiment the Nation, as it is being regimented today, but that it failed to enforce that competition which is the only effective regulator of business in a capitalistic society.

but that it failed to enforce that competition which is the only effective regulator of business in a capitalistic society.

I am not now referring especially to "trust busting", although "trust busting" as practiced by the first Roosevelt is certainly better than trust coddling under N. R. A. codes. The most effective way to reestablish competition is to withdraw and remove the special privileges which have made some men and some interests so powerful that no one can compete with them. Remove privilege and you destroy what monopoly feeds upon. That was one of the concepts upon which this country was built; and if it had been retained as a vital element in the national policy, the wealth of America would not have flowed into the hands of a few. There would have been a wider diffusion of ownership and con-There would have been a wider diffusion of ownership and control; there would be no monopoly, for no individual, or group of individuals, would exercise enough control to create a monopoly. It is my conviction that the way out of our present situation is not to concentrate still further the wealth of the country by nationalizing it or by the property of the control of the country by nationalizing it or by the property of the control of the country by nationalizing it or by the property of the control of the country by nationalizing it or by the property of the control of the country by nationalizing it or by the property of the control of the country by nationalizing it or by the control of the country by nationalizing it or by the control of the country by nationalizing it or by the country by the control of the country by nationalizing it or by the country by nationalizing it or by the control of the country by nationalizing its control of the country by nationalizing the country by the country by nationalizing the cou tionalizing it, or by turning its control over to the politicians, for that involves, so far as the people are concerned, only an exchange of masters; but to destroy privilege and to leave the wealth, as it is being produced, in the hands of those who produce it. That does not mean that all income should go to those who work with their hands, for those who direct industry are producers no less than those who man machines. It does not mean either that capital should not have its rewards; it only means that the rewards of capital should be commensurate with its contribution.

The failure to adjust the wages of capital, which is interest, with the wages of labor, is responsible for the present depression, as it has been responsible for all depressions in the past. Let me make what I mean clear by using a few figures: The total income of the American people in 1929 was approximately $85,000,000,000.

The interest burden was $10,000,000,000, leaving $75,000,000,000 net buying power in the hands of the very numerous group that owes money and can spend only that part of its income which is left after the creditor has been satisfied.

In 1933 the national income was only $39,000,000,000; but the debtor group still carried an interest load of $10,000,000,000, and there was left for spending after debt charges were satisfied only $29,000,000,000.

It was the drop in buying power from $75,000,000,000 to $29,000,000,000—a drop of almost two-thirds—in 4 years that put ten or twelve million men out of work. It is not strange that we have unemployment. It is strange that the economic that we have unemployment. It is strange that the economic machine has not entirely stopped functioning.

Men could be just as prosperous on a low-price level as on a high one, if fixed charges were reduced accordingly. Therefore the national policy should have been to reduce fixed charges in the national policy should have been to reduce fixed charges in the same proportion that the national income was reduced. If that had been done, the depression would have been checked and a return to economic normality begun almost immediately.

Instead of following that course, the administration tried to restore the balance between debts and income by raising prices. By adopting that expedient it ran counter to the economic forces, which all tended to make prices lower. Instead of reestablishing normality, the Government's policy intensified appearance. forces, which all tended to make prices lower. Instead of reestablishing normality, the Government's policy intensified abnormality. The price of the cotton required to produce a pair of overalls increased a few cents, but the price of a pair of overalls advanced a dollar. The price of a pound of wheat went up 1 cent, but the price of a loaf of bread 5 cents. A processing tax raised the price of hogs, but while hogs went up to 8 cents pork chops went to 40; and the pork packers, charging the tax back to the farmer and on to the consumer at the same time, were probled to declare unprecedented dividends. enabled to declare unprecedented dividends.

enabled to declare unprecedented dividents.

The wise provisions of the Sherman antitrust law, enacted by a Republican Congress, have been set aside; and monopoly, drafting its own codes and making its own laws, is riding roughshod over the American people. The industrial masters, about whom demagogs like to prate, and to curb whom was the avowed purpose of the new deal, have been permitted to write their own ticket. Doing business on a cost-plus basis, it makes no difference to them that labor costs are increased by higher wages and shorter hours, when the rules are so changed that price competition is eliminated. They can well afford to give the workingman another dollar, if in turn they may take $2 away from him as a consumer.

The number of unemployed today is greater than a year ago. The number of unemployed today is greater than a year ago. There is a reason. When prices advance faster than consumers' incomes, there is a reduction in buying power, and when buying power shinks employment ebbs. If the present drift toward higher prices and increased unemployment continues, the springs of business will eventually dry up. The P. W. A., the C. W. A., and all the pump-priming devices to which resort has been, or will be made, will not save the country. One of my Democratic colleagues, in an interval of frankness, said the other day: "You cannot get water by priming a pump in a dry well." Economic well-being is dependent on private industry, and there can be no being is dependent on private industry, and there can be no revival of private industry unless and until consumers' incomes overtake consumers' prices overtake consumers' prices.

The Democratic Party, following policies which are more and more being questioned by the country as a whole and are being challenged even by the Democrats themselves, is headed for a crisis. The administration is finding it increasingly difficult to steer its craft between the Scylla of Carter Glass and the Charybdis of Huey Long. The Republican Party is confronted with an opportunity and a challenge. It can win in 1936, but it cannot win by merely reciting the record of its past achievements. It cannot win by standing on a platform of negation. It must offer to the country a program adequate for the present needs of the people.

Rejecting the doctrine of scarcity, and returning to the doctrine of abundance and a balanced buying power as the key to prosperity, let us recognize the profit motive as the essential drive spring of the economic machine, but lay down a formula for a fairer division of the product between those who work, manage, and take risks and those who merely hold the mortgage on the economic plant. That involves the procedure which is bringing England back to prosperity and which has already brought Australia to within 20 percent of normality—a procedure which lifts the debt burden by reducing interest rates.

Let us stop putting the Government in competition with its own citizens and be done with socialism in all its forms and disguises, remembering that socialism never has worked and never will work, and cannot even be given a fair trial without first scrapping democracy.

scrapping democracy.

Let us stop going into debt for futile experiments, dismantle as soon as possible the alphabetical assortment of emergency machinery, provide adequate old-age pensions, and establish a workable system of unemployment insurance. Pending recovery let us make decent provision for the drought stricken and the unemployed, taking relief out of politics, so that a man may vote any ticket he pleases and still continue to eat.

I believe that if we do these things the American people will be well served.

STATE, JUSTICE, COMMERCE, AND LABOR DEPARTMENTS APPROPRIA-TION BILL, 1936

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 5255) making appropriations for the Departments of State and Justice and for the Judiciary, and for the Departments of Commerce and Labor, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1936, and for other purposes, with Senate amendments, disagree to the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OLIVER]? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none and appoints the following conferees: Messrs. Oliver, McMillan, and Bacon.

SEED LOANS

Mr. CARLSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 2 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kansas?

There was no objection.

Mr. CARLSON. Mr. Speaker, I want to call your attention to two matters that I believe are of primary importance at this time for the temporary relief of the farmer. On February 7 we passed in this body a seed-loan bill, which has also passed the Senate and which was signed by the President; but it was specified that this appropriation was to come out of the $4,800,000,000 emergency relief appropria-The farmers of this country need their seed now. I trust that the Appropriations Committee, which I understand has bills under consideration, will bring them out as soon as possible in order to aid the farmers for spring seeding.

Another bill that I believe should be brought to the floor of the House and passed that will be of great benefit to the farmers is the Farm Credit Act, which was passed by the Senate with the Wheeler amendment, which reduces interest on Federal land-bank loans 1 percent. I would urge that this bill be brought before this body as soon as possible. It is estimated that this will cost our Government $25,000,000 annually for a 3-year period, at which time the amendment expires. I appreciate that the opposition to this amendment is that it is a drain upon our Treasury, and that the Federal land bank should be a self-sustaining organization, but I have noticed that we do not hesitate to vote funds for other purposes, and, in my opinion, agriculture is in a most distressing situation. You read glowing reports on the increase in farm prices and the greatly improved conditions of the farmer, and I do not want to be accused of minimizing the assistance that has been given the farmer, but let us analyze

The farmers of this country are carrying a mortgage load of $11,000,000,000.

The interest charge on this debt is between five hundred and five hundred and fifty million dollars a year. With a farm income of less than $6,000,000,000 in 1934, the farmer cannot carry this load.

While every farmer appreciates the increase in the price of commodities that he has to sell, we must remember that in the larger portion of our farming area we had an extensive drought last year, which gives them high prices with nothing to sell. In other words, they are buying feed for their livestock at greatly increased prices. In this great drought territory the A. A. A. was not of assistance as a curtailment of production, but it did operate as a program of crop insurance. The farmers are using this money to pay interest, taxes, and living expenses, but have no funds with which to buy commodities that would bring about a business recovery. The Associated Press reports on January 5 state that agriculture prices are now at a pre-war parity price, and it also states that the commodities the farmers have to buy have gone up to 127 percent. With no crops to sell and with interest and tax payments to meet, and an increased cost of commodities, the farmer in the drought area is in a more distressing situation than a year ago; and to make the situation gloomier, there are vast areas of our farming sections that have less subsoil moisture than a year ago. In fact, we have counties in my district where as high as 50 percent of the farmers are on relief at this time. In Kansas we have 12.986 Federal land-bank loans, which total $49,587,700, and 15,712 Land Bank Commissioner loans, totaling $33,580,770, or we have a total of 28,698 loans, which total $82,168,400 of Federal land-bank loans. Reducing the interest rate 1 percent will be a saving to our State of $831,684 annually. In my own congressional district we have 3,542 Federal land-bank loans, which total $12,421,900, and 4,302 Land Bank Commissioner loans, which total $8,786,500, or 7,844 loans, totaling $21,208,400, and 1 percent reduction on this interest rate would save us $212,084 annually. At the present time the National Government owns $816,000,000 of the farm land-bank bonds out of a total issue of $1,832,000,000, and on some of these I understand the Government is making as much as 1 percent profit.

In my opinion, agriculture will have to be refinanced sooner or later, either by the Frazier-Lemke refinance measure or some similar method.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. Carlson] has expired.

Mr. BURDICK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 5 minutes out of the regular order.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Dakota?

There was no objection.

Mr. BURDICK. Mr. Speaker, when I last called the attention of this House to the feed and seed situation of the Northwest I doubt if anybody paid very much attention to what I said, but I made the prediction that unless the rules and regulations of the department handling relief were changed or amended, serious loss would result in the Northwestern States. Now, that has come to pass, Mr. Speaker, and because of these rules and regulations the feed has not gotten out to the livestock, and we have lost a great number, of them.

Instead of merely asking for seed for which no appropriation has yet been made, we will have to ask this Congress for an appropriation of a great many million dollars for horsepower in order to put in our crops. I want to notify you, Mr. Speaker, that I have been informed that the drought of 29 months in our State has been broken by a good share of rain and snow, and unless our farmers can get the seed and horsepower now, it will be too late again, as it was when I appealed for some help on the relief of the livestock 2 months ago.

After much agitation, the rules and regulations have been changed in some particulars, such as the granting of $10 of feed per horse. The damage, however, has been done, and horses have perished for lack of feed in the very sight of United States Government hay. Now that the rains and snow have come again in the Northwest, it will not be long before this Government hay will be hauled to the dump ground. The Government loss will be stupendous, and the loss to the farmers, in starved horses and cattle, will amount to millions of dollars.

If seed is not furnished promptly thousands of farmers will be unable to sow a crop and will be compelled to remain on relief for another year. The farmers abhor relief; they do not want to ask the Government for aid and would not have done so if there was any possible way under the sun to avoid doing so. They want to get off of relief at the earliest possible moment. Can we assist them in their desire to get off the relief rolls by failing to provide seed now when conditions look favorable? Hesitation and delay now will result in further disaster. One good crop in the Northwest will put the farmers on their feet as far as relief is concerned, and an even break in finance and price will make the farmer a power again and of value again to the business of the Nation. Every class, every manufacturer, and every laborer in the United States will be benefited by the return of buying power in the hands of the farmer. Let this Congress do the big thing, the right thing, and do it now.

Mr. MOTT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURDICK. I yield.

Mr. MOTT. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. Carlson] stated a moment ago that it was prescribed that the seedloan money should come out of the work-relief bill. Has the gentleman any idea who prescribed that? Neither the House nor the Senate prescribed it. Does the gentleman know why it is being held up?

Mr. BURDICK. My answer to the gentleman is that I have Resolution 119, now pending before the Committee on Rules. It reads as follows:

That the Speaker of the House be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to appoint a committee of five or more Members as a special committee on emergency relief legislation.

I am satisfied if that were done it would be a clearing house for all of the complaints against feed and seed and human relief, and give the Members of Congress a chance to at least think about some other matters of legislation. There is too much bureau control and not enough congressional action.

Mr. BACON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURDICK. I yield.

Mr. BACON. I will say that the Appropriations Committee tomorrow will report out the first deficiency bill, which contains a very large item for loans for seed purposes. [Applause.]

Mr. BURDICK. But in my last minute I want to say that the seed situation has been misunderstood by the House. I have authentic reports from disinterested parties, who do not belong to any of our political parties, who are in the service of the State, to the effect that we do need at least $20,000,000 for seed and feed in the State of North Dakota alone. I recall that the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. Christianson] said the appropriation of $60,000,000 was not sufficient. I do not believe anyone paid very much attention to what he said. Before this Congress adjourns this spring, in a very few days from now you will be called upon to make further appropriations for feed and seed for the Northwestern States.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?
Mr. BURDICK. I yield.
Mr. BOILEAU. The gentleman from New York stated that the deficiency bill which is soon to be reported out will carry aid for the farmers. Does that mean the $60,000,000 that was provided by legislation recently enacted?

Mr. BACON. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. BOILEAU. I would remind the gentleman that those loans are supposed to be loans made on a good security, whereas the farmers referred to by the gentleman from North Dakota will be unable to take advantage of that legislation and it will be necessary to pass additional legislation to aid this group of farmers.

Mr. BACON. That is just what that legislation is supposed to do.

Mr. BOILEAU. I may say to the gentleman that as I understand the bill we passed sometime ago it was not relief, but provided for commercial loans, and they are supposed to be loans covered by good security. The gentleman is not referring to a relief measure.

Mr. BACON. I think the gentleman is correct.

Mr. BURDICK. Two-thirds of the farmers in North Dakota, Minnesota, South Dakota, Wisconsin, and the rest of this territory cannot qualify under the seed loan bill because their property is already mortgaged.

The SPEAKER. Under the previous order of the House, the Chair recognizes the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. KNUTSON | for 30 minutes.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, ever since the enactment of the Hawley-Smoot tariff bill in 1930 the Democrats have denounced it as a thing of evil without any redeeming qualities. Indeed, during the campaigns of 1930 and 1932 the Democrats promised the American people that one of the first things that they would do upon taking control would be to repeal the Hawley-Smoot bill in its entirety.

The Democrats secured control of the House 4 years ago, and since that time they have had an overwhelming majority in the House. In fact, their majorities in both the House and the Senate are the greatest ever enjoyed by any political party in all the history of the Republic; and yet they have not made a single move to repeal the present Republican tariff law, which they have so relentlessly denounced both on the hustings and here on the floor of Congress. Why have they not fulfilled their promise? The American people would like to know.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KNUTSON. Not at this time.

Mr. RANKIN. The gentleman asked a question: I want to answer it.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, I decline to yield at the present time.

Mr. RANKIN. The gentleman declines to yield for an answer when he has asked a question?

Mr. KNUTSON. I will yield a little later.

On March 6 the beloved Chairman of the Ways and Means Committee [Mr. Doughton], who is my warm, personal friend, devoted considerably more than an hour to a denunciation of the Hawley-Smoot bill. Let me ask him now, Why has he not long since taken steps to repeal this law, if it is so iniquitous? He has had 4 years to do it in.

The gentleman's speech throughout was a defense of the reciprocal trade policy being followed by the Roosevelt administration, and he took some little time to tell us of the alleged blessings that will flow upon us as a result of the various trade agreements already negotiated by the Roosevelt administration and the agreements that are yet to come. He had something to say about the Cuban Treaty, and inserted in the RECORD a news item purporting to have originated in Houlton, Maine, which reads as follows:

Houlton, Maine, October 16, 1934.—An unprecedented demand from Cuba for Maine potatoes brought encouragement today to the distressed planters in Aroostook County, Maine's vase potato empire.

With their product bringing only 50 cents a barrel, less than the cost of raising, and 15 percent of the crop snowed under by last Friday's storm, the outlook heretofore this season has been gloomy indeed.

But the central potato inspection office announced today that a Cuban tariff on Canadian potatoes and a prospective duty on American exports, to become effective November 1, has resulted in a sudden demand for 80,000 sacks of Maine "spuds."

Sixty-two carloads are now being loaded on board a vessel at Searsport, and buyers now in the county have orders for 100

The rush of export business prompted Commissioner of Agriculture Frank P. Washburn to increase the size of the inspection staff here. Washburn said the demand was the outstanding export business for Aroostook County in the past few years, and expressed the hope that it might be retained under the new tariff arrangements.

Last year Cuba bought most of its potatoes in Canada. While the temporary advantage which American producers now enjoy as a result of the tariff on Canadian exports will be reduced after November 1, the duty on shipments from the United States is expected to be less than that on exports from the Dominion.

The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. HARLAN] inserted the same item in a speech which he delivered in this House on March 1 against the Hawley-Smoot tariff bill, so I assume that the Democrats consider this particular story one of their strong talking points in support of the trade agreement that we entered into with Cuba last fall.

Within the past week I have received three letters from potato growers living in Aroostook County, Maine, which would indicate that the Cuban trade pact has proven anything but a blessing to the potato growers of Aroostook County, and I now desire to read to the House the contents of these communications.

CARIBOU, MAINE, March 6, 1935.

DEAR MR. KNUTSON: I am writing you relative to the reciprocal trade policy of this administration.

DEAR ME. KNUTSON: I am writing you relative to the reciprocal trade policy of this administration.

First of all, let me tell you who I am and how I am being affected by these trade pacts. I am a farmer doing business at Caribou, Aroostook County, Maine. My people were pioneers, coming before one mile of road was built in this county. I operate two large and up-to-date potato farms and usually plant from 200 to 250 acres in potatoes, about one-half usually certified seed. My crop is shipped and marketed wherever possible.

For the growing season of 1934 my crop cost in actual expenditure, not counting my own time and efforts, $1.67½ per 165-pound barrel for seed, fertilizer, taxes, insurance, trucking, and storage, and this does not take into account rot or any damage that may develop. Our county agent has a list of farmers' expense accounts which vary from $1.50 per barrel production cost where little hired labor is required, to $1.90 per barrel where all work is performed by hired labor. So much for costs.

Now, with more potatoes produced here than can possibly be marketed at any price, our people with no other occupation are imploring Congress to pass laws limiting acreages and quotas, and at the same time asking the Government for money with which to keep these potato towns functioning and to plant new, smaller-sized crops, it cartainly does not look researched to let more notation.

to keep these potato towns functioning and to plant new, smaller-sized crops, it certainly does not look reasonable to let more potatoes come into our markets. We are not asking unreasonable things—just a regulation to where the industry can eke out its own meager existence.

As for the Cuban trade: It has never been of any particular value to Aroostook County nor to any producing section. We propose to let down the bars to them to bring in their potatoes while New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island supply them their conduction of their table potatoes in seasons when they buy while New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island supply them their seed and most of their table potatoes in seasons when they buy table potatoes. The Canadian transportation system and their banking arrangement make it possible for Canada to do the Cuban business in spite of American or Cuban tariffs and they do it while we would get in United States markets what they have to export, Canada none.

As for an agreement to let Canada ship in her seed potatoes at a lower duty, it would be just another impossible stumbling block for us. For the past decade we have so many potatoes that we cannot market all of them at any price and for most of the time we have been getting but a small fraction of their cost.

If a period of reduced entry were granted on Canadian seed potatoes their bulk would be rushed in here and storehouses filled at New York, Boston, Port Newark, Charleston, Savannah, Jacksonville, and Guif ports. We have had this condition before and it creates an impossible position for us.

We know just about what will happen if Canadian potatoes are permitted to come in again even if only for a period. It will mean that all her potatoes will come in here and the mere fact that that all her potatoes will come in here and the mere fact that those big storage houses full of potatoes are there to everybody's knowledge means that we can't sell any seed at any price. Nobody benefits but the importer. Most all these cargoes in past years benefits but the importer. Most all these cargoes in past years were consigned shipments.

I am asking that you use any and all means of fair persuasion to prevent the lowering of the tariff on either Cuban or Canadian potatoes. We can do without Cuba's seed trade as we always have and as for the United States potatoes going into Canada, it is a very negligible amount and that amount will go tariff or no tariff.

I have known Prince Edward Island potatoes to be delivered in Jacksonville and Daytona, Fla., for 6 cents for 167-pound bag in shipload, whereas our rate was 72½ cents hundredweight to Jacksonville and 89½ cents hundredweight to Daytona. This offsets a tremendous duty; at the same time takes our market and takes from our transportation companies the revenue so sorely needed. I have official Canadian production-cost figures of 49½ cents per barrel where all labor was performed by the grower's family, 71 cents where help was employed. United States recorded Canadian figures higher but purposely fixed that way.

Very truly yours,

E. H. DOYLE.

Washburn, Maine, March 5, 1935.

Dear Congressman Knutson: My attention has been called to a speech made by Congressman Harlan, of Ohio, in the House of Representatives as printed in the Congressional Record of Friday, March 1, 1935, in which Congressman Harlan stated that since the reciprocal trade agreement made with Cuba in the fall of 1934, that Maine potatoes had materially benefited thereby and were selling for a much higher price than heretofore.

I desire to deny the statement of Congressman Harlan and call to your attention the fact that Maine potatoes this season have been selling for the lowest price in the history of the industry.

The prevailing market price to the growers of Maine during the fall of 1934 was from 40 to 50 cents per barrel of 165 pounds net, a barrel containing 11 pecks, or 2¾ bushels. Since January 1, 1935, the market has gradually declined, and at the present time the prevailing market price to the grower in Maine is 30 cents per barrel bulk per 165 pounds net.

The newspaper clipping quoted by Congressman Harlan from the Houlton Times, Houlton, Maine, on October 25, 1934, held out hopes to the Maine grower that he would be materially benefited by the Cuban reciprocal-trade agreement and that such agreement would open up a new market for Maine potatoes in Cuba. This prophecy has not proved to be true.

If a reciprocal-trade agreement is made with Canada and the open up a new market for Maine potatoes in Cuba. This prophecy has not proved to be true.

If a reciprocal-trade agreement is made with Canada and the duty on Canadian potaoes is lowered, it will mean absolute disaster to the Maine potato industry, with no chance of the industry recovering in the future for the reason that with an already depressed market further importations of foreign potatoes would mean additional competition for the industry.

Transportation costs by water from Canadian ports, such as Prince Edward Island and New Brunswick in foreign ships, are much lower than railroad rates or combination rail and water rates from loading points in Aroostook County to the seaport terminal markets of the United States.

I desire further to state, Congressman Knurson, that the average cost of producing potatoes in Maine is from $1.50 to $1.75 per barrel of 165 pounds. Therefore, you can readily understand that the prevailing price received of from 30 to 40 cents per barrel by the Maine grower means a tremendous loss to the grower and the industry as a whole. and the industry as a whole.

Market prices for Maine potatoes received by growers so far this season, as quoted herein, may be verified through the Bureau of Economics of the United States Department of Agriculture.

Yours very truly,

Andrew J. Beck, President Aroostook County Council.

CARIBOU, Maine, March 5, 1935.

Dear Congressman Knutson: With reference to a speech made by Congressman Harlan in the House of Representatives on March Times, of Houlton Maine, relative to benefits to Maine potato growers under trade agreement with Cuba, I desire to state that this newspaper item was simply commenting on hopes of the Cuban market. No benefits have been received under the Cuban agreement, and Maine potatoes have been received under the Cuban agreement, and Maine potatoes have been selling throughout the entire season at the lowest price in the history of the industry.

These facts can be borne out by the daily Government market report. Any trade agreement or lowering of price tariff rates will result in further depressing the market which is already oversupplied with potatoes grown in the United States.

Yours very truly,

E. W. Russ.

May I say for the benefit of the Members that Messrs. Doyle and Russ are two of the biggest potato growers in Aroostook County, and that between them they produce in excess of 50,000 barrels annually. Mr. Beck is president of the Aroostook County Council, which has a membership of 3,000 potato growers. Let me call your particular attention to Mr. Beck's letter, wherein he states that during the fall of 1934 the prevailing market price to the potato growers of Maine was from 40 cents to 50 cents per barrel, of 165 pounds net, and that since January 1, last, the market has gradually declined until the present time when the prevailing market price to the potato grower in Maine is 30 cents per barrel, or 11 cents per bushel, which, of course, is far, far below cost of production.

The experience of the potato growers of Maine has been the same as the experience of the dairyman in Minnesota, Wisconsin, Illinois, Michigan, and New York. The price of butter, whilst seemingly satisfactory, is also much below cost of production when we take into consideration the fact that as a result of the drought and the operation of the A. A. A. the price of feed and hay has increased from 100 to 300 percent.

I want my Democratic friends to get this: Since this munificent trade pact was entered into, or since January 3 the market for Maine potatoes has gradually declined until at the present time the prevailing market price to the grower in Maine is 30 cents per barrel-get that-30 cents per barrel, and the barrel costs 15 cents; so the growers get 15 cents for 165 pounds of potatoes. Let that soak in!

My good friend, Mr. Stefan, of Nebraska, has handed me a letter and a telegram, dealing with butter imports that 1 desire to insert at this point:

CITY OF SCHUYLER, NEBR., March 4, 1935.

Hon. Karl Stefan,

House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

Dear Karl: The firm of Holub & Nash, grocers in Richland, have referred the enclosed telegram to me and request that I communicate with you with the thought that perhaps we might unite to combat the importation of farm products which so greatly reduces our farmers' income.

It would seem that the taxpayers and builders of our Nation should receive some consideration from our Government, who seem to favor foreign farmers over their own countrymen.

I am sure your efforts are very much appreciated by your many friends in all agricultural States and should be willing to assist in combatting this unfair competition.

Assuring you that we are most grateful for your assistance in fighting our fight in Washington, I am,
Yours fraternally,

OTTO ZUELOW, Mayor.

Gentlemen: It seems there is no end to the severe decline we are experiencing in this butter market.

Talked to New York today and they gave us to understand there will be better than 30,000 boxes of foreign butter received in this country this week, which butter is costing only 31½ cents delivered New York, duty paid. This being the case, it is quite apparent to us that this market will go much lower and it is imperative that we reduce our payment prices accordingly, therefore we positively insist that you reduce your price to 31 cents. We firmly believe this 31-cent price is only temporary and within another day or two we will see another decline, so please give us your fullest cooperation and handle accordingly. your fullest cooperation and handle accordingly.

Thank you.

Mr. Speaker, at this point let me read several letters from Minnesota which speak for themselves:

SWANVILLE, MINN., March 4, 1935. SWANVILLE, MINN., March 4, 1935.

Dear Mr. Knutson: I understand that there is considerable butter being shipped in from Europe, New Zealand, etc., and no doubt this is the cause of the butter market being on the downward trend again. Will you not kindly advise me if this is not the case? And would it not be possible for you to give me the exact figures of butter pounds being shipped in every month? Are there any American goods being exchanged for this butter?

I know you are in favor of an embasse on darm products. Will

I know you are in favor of an embargo on dairy products. Will you not kindly give me your viewpoint on it again? The present administration is not in favor of it, I know; they would sooner cut production at home and pay for it, and then turn right around and flood the home market with foreign dairy products. I fail to see any sense there.

I would like to have your answer for publication in our local papers. Very respectfully yours,

ERVIN MIELKE, Secretary-Treasurer Swanville Cooperative Creamery.

New Ulm, Minn., March 5, 1935.

Dear Mr. Knutson: Because this is the first of a number of years that the farmer has a chance to make some money, we ask that you do what you can to curtail or eliminate entirely importations of foreign meats, butter, and eggs.

Feed costs are high, and unless prices of the above commodities show farmers a profit above cost of feeding, they will be in the same position as before.

The butter market is on a downward trend because of heavy importations for which the seller in the foreign market gets 18 cents net a pound, and now desiccated and canned (frozen) eggs are being offered from China.

We are not egg breakers or driers, so that it would have no immediate effect on our business, but it is unjust to allow these commodities to come in and compete with domestic supplies.

We ask that you kindly support H. R. 5802, introduced by Congressman Lea of California, which calls for an excise tax on imported Chinese egg products. You are a member of the Ways and Means Committee and so will have a deep interest in the matter. Thanking you, we remain, Yours truly, STORK BROS., By A. H. STORK.

NATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF LOCAL CREAMERIES,

St. Paul, Minn., March 6, 1935.

Dear Mr. Knutson: Heavy importations of butter are almost entirely responsible for a drop of approximately 7 cents per pound in butter prices in the past few weeks, entailing a heavy loss upon the industry and blighting the dairy farmer's hope of once again obtaining a price for his butterfat which will enable him to get the cost of producing it.

This organization and the 250,000 dairy farmers which it represents are not unmindful of the dangers of all prices which are beyond the consumer's ability to pay and would not have complained had only enough foreign butter been imported to hold prices at a fair level. But the depreciated value of our dollar has offset the value of the 14 cents per pound tariff to the point where foreign butter has come in in sufficient quantities to push down the price of the domestic products beyond the point of reasonableness either to consumer or producer. The situation is becoming more intolerable daily, and steps will have to be taken soon to restore the protective features of the tariff or our dairy farmers will be confronted with a situation wherein they will be producing a minimum amount of butterfat to be sold at an extremely low price.

The farmer who produces the product from which butter is made has derived absolutely no direct benefit from any of the proposals designed to assist agriculture, but, on the contrary, has, until comparatively recently, suffered from the working of the Adjustment Act. It is unfair to ask that he be further penalized by working under a tariff which no longer affords protection because the value of our money has been depreciated.

Very truly yours,

Very truly yours,

W. A. GORDON, Secretary.

LAND O'LAKES CREAMERIES, INC. Minneapolis, Minn., March 6, 1935.

DEAR MR. KNUTSON: We received your telegram asking for information in regard to butter importations. Mr. Brandt will not be back in the office until Saturday morning so we hasten to De back in the omce until Saturday morning so we hasten to answer your inquiry.

It is true that importations of New Zealand butter has had a very depressing effect on the butter markets of New York, Boston, and Philadelphia. New Zealand is now producing grass butter which they are willing to sell at around 18 cents a pound shipping point, plus our duty of 14 cents and 2 cents a pound freight charges, making the butter worth about 34 cents delivered New York York.

Immense shipments have arrived recently, more than the markets could absorb along with the fresh butter that we ship to eastern markets. This gave the buyers a chance to sell the market short and purchase western butter at ridiculously low prices, forcing the importers to take losses in the event that they had to sell, but large quantities of it have been placed in storage in New York to be withheld from the market in hopes that prices will react.

It is too late now to cry about imported butter and "lock the door after the horse is stolen"; we foresaw this situation last December when the duty should have been raised to prohibit the importation of fresh, grass-made butter from the Southern Hemisphere. Our farmers are up in arms as they cannot produce butterfat at these low prices and compete with this cheap New Zealand butter even after the duty is paid. Practically all of the butter-producing farmers are short of feed, especially right now when they need every bit of help they can be given to carry them through until grass time. Due to the shortage of butter we possibly could have maintained a 36-cent butter market which would have given the farmers 40 cents a pound butterfat, and on that basis they could have bought a little feed to maintain their herds, but now thousands of them cannot afford to buy feed and are going on Government relief.

If the duty could be raised immediately to shut out any further

If the duty could be raised immediately to shut out any further importations, it would help some, but any raise in duty a few weeks hence will be of no value because by that time our Southern States will be in the producing season and our own markets will be below the imported market.

We do not know what you have in mind in regard to stopping butter importations, but Congress and the administration have been very lax in permitting a situation like this to arise and disrupt our entire dairy-marketing program from which we will not recover this year. Very truly yours,

LAND O'LAKES CREAMERIES, INC., H. F. MEYER, Director of Sales.

OGILVIE, MINN., March 6, 1935.
DEAR MR. KNUTSON: Please do not think I am trying to be med-desome, but I am going to ask you a question.

Hasn't Congress the power to assist us dairymen in maintaining the price where it will at least give us cost of production on butterfat and eggs? It seems very strange to many of us Minnesota dairymen that we only had a glimpse of 40-cent butterfat; it seemed only long enough for the speculator to get rid of his holdings.

The production of butterfat is the lowest in years and the amount held in storage is unusually small. On the basis of production and the amount in cold storage, we should be getting at least 45 cents a pound. You have shown that you understand the dairyman's problem, and I am sure you will agree with me that we are losing money right now with feed and hay 200 and 300 percent higher than in normal times.

Is it true that the United States Navy buys its butter from Denmark?

Why are potatoes only 40 cents a hundred? If something is out of joint, I wish you would look into it and see what you can do to straighten it out. We raise as nice a potato as any State in the Union and we should at least be entitled to cost of production.

Yours very truly,

In his remarks Chairman Doughton repeatedly spoke of the necessity for increasing our foreign commerce. My good friend Doughton must know that all foreign commerce is based upon two premises: Price and necessity. For any product to sell upon the open market of the world such product must be priced to meet the highly competitive prices of the world market. No country is going to buy from us because they love us. They will only buy from us because they must have the things that we produce, and because we can offer more attractive prices than competing

There was a time when American wheat dominated the world market and we annually exported hundreds of millions of bushels; but as the wheat fields of Canada, Argentina, and Russia became developed, we gradually lost the world market for our wheat because these countries were able to undersell us in that market, and our wheat farmers were compelled to take up dairying and other lines of agriculture.

We buy from other countries commodities that we cannot produce in our own country, such as coffee, tea, tropical fruits, rubber, certain minerals, and silks, none of which are produced in this country. Why do we buy? Because we must have these products. According to the United States Tariff Commission we purchased from Brazil in 1932 goods and commodities in the sum of $82,838,605, and in return we sold that country commodities valued at $28,546,-250. The bulk of our purchases from Brazil consisted of coffee. Now Brazil is a very poor customer of ours. We buy from her 300 percent more than she buys from us. Why do not we buy our coffee from some other country? Simply because we like Brazilian coffee and the price is the more attractive. The same reason holds good with the Republic of Colombia, from which country we bought $60,845,508 worth of commodities in 1932, while we sold to her only $10,496,985. Seventy-six and four-tenths percent of our purchases from Colombia consisted of coffee and 18.2 percent of crude petroleum. Under the Democratic theory, Colombia should buy as much from us as we do from her, but such, unfortunately, is not the case. We do not buy from Brazil and Colombia four and five times as much as they buy from us simply because we love them. We buy from them because we prefer their products and we like their prices and those are the only reasons that foreign countries buy from each other. They like our automobiles; they like our machinery; they like our shoes, our clothing, and other articles, because American products are superior in quality and our prices more attractive. And we are going to hold that market only so long as we can meet and overcome all competition.

The gentleman from North Carolina had much to say with reference to cotton and the necessity for maintaining the foreign market for the cotton surplus produced in this country. I am in thorough sympathy with that proposition; but let me remind the gentleman that a year ago it was testified before our committee that the British Empire is bringing 12,000,000 acres of cotton into production, which will make Great Britain wholly independent of us in the matter of cotton. Only the other day the press announced that Japan is getting ready to put a big acreage into cotton in Manchukuo.

To me that can only mean that our cotton farmer will wheat farmer had to do. In this connection, I desire to call to the attention of my good friend from North Carolina, Mr. DOUGHTON, an article which appeared in this month's Country Gentleman, wherein it was stated that a new variety of sugarcane has been developed which can be grown in all parts of the Cotton Belt. That should help to absorb the surplus cotton acreage in that area.

Mr. WOODRUFF. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KNUTSON. I yield.

Mr. WOODRUFF. Has the gentleman any information that Brazil has approximately 200,000,000 acres of land that is available for the cultivation of cotton?

Mr. KNUTSON. It was so testified before our committee about a year ago, if the gentleman recalls.

We imported last year from Cuba 1,901,752 short tons of sugar. As you all know, the National City Bank and the Chase National Bank, together with a few other large New York financial interests, control the sugar industry in Cuba. When you Democrats reduced the tariff on sugar a year ago by Presidential proclamation and again last fall, through the reciprocal-trade agreement with Cuba, from 2 cents to 0.9 cent per pound, you in effect made an outright gift to the international banking crowd in New York of $41,838,544 annually. Why do you not point to that with pride? That certainly is one of the outstanding accomplishments of this administration

Mr. BOYLAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KNUTSON. I yield. Mr. BOYLAN. Why refer to the banking crowd in New York? The gentleman is an intelligent man, the editor of a very strong paper in the West, and he knows that the stock of these banks is held all over the United States. The gentleman would like to infer that New York City controls what is done.

Mr. KNUTSON. The National City Bank in New York is not in the sugar business; it is the National City Co. There is a distinction without a difference.

Mr. BOYLAN. Does not the gentleman know that the stock of the company is held all over the United States, and not particularly in New York City? The gentleman knows that as an editor, does he not?

Mr. KNUTSON. I understand the stock is widely distributed.

I have already told you what you did for, or rather to, the potato growers in Aroostock County, Maine, as well as to those who raise potatoes in Minnesota, Montana, and Idaho.

Understand, I am not accusing the Democratic Party of double-dealing. The American people must have known that they would get free trade when you got into power; but, judging from letters that I am receiving from back home, I am led to believe that the American people are getting fed up on the idea of playing Santa Claus to the rest of the world.

As you know, Minnesota is one of the foremost dairying States in the Union. Before we went off the gold standard the American dollar was worth a hundred cents, but today the dollar is worth only 59 cents abroad; and, as a result, the 14-cent tariff on butter given under the Republican Hawley-Smoot Act has been reduced to 81/4 cents per pound, and that is the reason that we are having such tremendous importations of butter, condensed and powdered milk, cheese, dried and powdered eggs, potatoes, vegetables, canned beef, hides, wool, rye, and other grains, manganese, pulp and print paper, safety matches, coal, and hundreds and hundreds of other things that we formerly produced on the farms and in our factories for ourselves in the good old days when the Republicans were in power, but in this day of internationalism we go on the theory that the more we buy from other countries and the less we produce at home the more prosperous and happy we will be.

The Washington News for Wednesday, March 6, carried a story on the front page, the title of which reads: "Federal relief rolls at all-time peak of 22,000,000", and then went on to tell of the terrific cost in caring for these 22,000,000 people on the dole. Do you wonder that our unemployment is as great or greater than it has ever been in the history of ultimately have to go into some other activity, just as our the country when you stop to figure the enormous purchases that we are making from other countries of commodities that we can and should produce at home and thus make work for the American unemployed?

Mr. Speaker, at this point I desire to insert a few comparative tariff rates as contained in the Democratic Underwood Act of 1913 and the Republican Hawley-Smoot Act of 1930.

Mr. Speaker, I desire to insert a comparative statement of rates between the Underwood Free Trade Act and the Hawley-Smoot Act of 1930. I ask unanimous consent that I may be allowed to do so.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

There was no objection.

1 These rates were made by Executive order by President Hoover on July 24, 1931.

Mr. KNUTSON. I would like to ask my good friend from North Carolina which of the above protective rates he would reduce or repeal? Does he feel that the protection now given to butter is excessive, in view of the fact that between January 1 and March 5, of this year, over 4,000,000 pounds of butter were imported, as against 1,253,392 pounds for the entire year of 1934? This has already depressed the domestic price 7 cents, which comes out of the pockets of our dairymen.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield? Mr. KNUTSON. I yield.

Mr. DOUGHTON. In view of the gentleman's interest in the subject and what I know is his desire to state facts correctly, will he not put in the RECORD a table showing comparative prices of farm products-corn, wheat, tobacco, cotton, butter, and all other farm products-showing the price as it was when this administration came in at the end of the Hoover administration and what they are today under the present administration?

Mr. KNUTSON. Yes; I shall be glad to do that. Let me say to my good friend, however, that while it is true the price of butter is twice as high as it was 18 months ago, it is also true that it costs us three times more to produce butter at the present time because feed and hay have advanced 300 percent in price [applause], and we are not making as much money now as we did formerly under the old price.

Mr. ARNOLD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield? Mr. KNUTSON. I yield.

Mr. ARNOLD. Does not the gentleman recognize the fact that the increased price of feed inures to the benefit of the farmers?

Mr. KNUTSON. No: not under present conditions, because we are compelled to buy feed throughout all the drought area.

Mr. ARNOLD. Who is getting the benefit of the increased prices of feed if it is not the farmer?

Mr. KNUTSON. Ordinarily the gentleman perhaps would be right, but not under present conditions; for we must also take into consideration the fact that we have reduced our herds and production as a result of the feed shortage, in many instances by 60 and 70 percent, yet the price of feed keeps going up.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will permit, I would remind him that we are importing corn at the present time.

Mr. KNUTSON. Yes; we are importing considerable corn at the present time, may I say to my good friend.

Would Mr. Doughton reduce the tariff rate on frozen and powdered eggs, in view of the imports that are now coming in from China?

Would he be in favor of reducing the 15-cent tax per bushel on rye, in face of the 13,000,000 bushels of rye that we imported in 1933 from Canada and Europe, which importations depressed the domestic price 40 cents per bushel, causing the loss of many millions to the American rye grower?

Would my good friend from North Carolina be in favor of reducing the existing tariff on powdered and dried milk when we are already importing large quantities?

Mr. Speaker, I have a letter here which the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Woodruff] received from the manufacturer of dried-milk products in Michigan, in which he calls attention to the fact that they were asked to quote on four cars for delivery in March and April, and they quoted a price of 15 cents. In a few days they received a reply that a shipload of dried and powdered milk had arrived in New York from Holland and they were quoting a price of 131/2 cents. They had to meet the Dutch price because of the contracts they had with their farmers. In this letter he shows the loss they are taking by reason of the fact they were compelled to meet that price.

The letter is as follows:

NORTHLAND DAIRY Co., Evart, Mich., February 21, 1935.

Evart, Mich., February 21, 1935.

Hon. Roy O. Woodbuff,

House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

Dear Mr. Woodbuff: A good Congressman should be informed concerning conditions which may be brought to his attention for official action—we surely wish to keep you informed.

For years we have sold much dry milk to a large user on the Atlantic seaboard. We recently were asked to quote on four cars for March and April, and we quoted 15 cents delivered. These people shop around, as becomes a good buyer; we were advised that they were quoted on domestic milk from 14½ cents (one manufacturer only) to 18½ cents delivered. The 14½ cents was the lowest, ours was second at 15 cents, and the rest ranged from 16 cents to 18½ cents.

cents to 18½ cents.

Well, what happened? A cargo of dry milk from Holland came, on which they quoted 13¼ cents. The Dutch milk is just as good quality as domestic and, of course, the 13¼ cents was the good buy. However, they called us over the phone and advised us of the situation and said that they had determined to offer us what we might core to take at 13½ cents delivered. We took they are set to take at 13½ cents delivered. might care to take at 131/2 cents delivered. We took three cars at 13½ cents.

Now, it will not be possible for us to break even at 13½ cents, but in order to continue buying from the farmers and to keep our output going (we cannot let it pile up), we accepted and will take our loss some way, hoping, of course, to run into better markets later in the season.

This all means that domestic milk will suffer in price (and the price isn't too high to the farmer today), because of foreign milk. To compete with these foreign producers, the American farmer must take less for his milk. Milk bought on a butterfat basis at 40 cents spells prosperity to the dairy interests; when below that figure the farmer must use red ink. Now, what is the remedy? Raise the tariff. Put it where our Dutch friends cannot get in where it will force our farmer under at least 40 cents.

If our dairymen could have a 40-cent price for the next 10 years, they would be a happy and modestly prosperous bunch. A love of country and loyalty would follow, and these sentiments must return if we are to be relieved of the welfare and dole necessities.

To buy new tools, make necessary improvements, spend for other things required by a content and home-loving people, the American farmer must be given a market for that which he produces; must be favored over the foreign field where the living scale isn't what we must have for our folks.

Another thing, brother, that International Harvester situation should be investigated. There isn't any reason why these people should have such a monopoly on farming tools and our farmers made to pay such ridiculous prices.

Guess this is enough misery to bring to you for one February

GEORGE A. GLERUM.

Would my good friend the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. Doughton] be in favor of further reducing the tariff on pig iron when we are already importing large quantities from Europe and, as a result of such importations, thousands of steel workers in Pennsylvania, Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, and Minnesota are out of work?

It will come as a shock to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. Doughton] to learn that we are importing large quantities of anthracite coal from Great Britain, which is absolutely indispensable at this time, when there are 11,000,000 American miners out of work and walking the streets. As a loyal American, I am sure that my good friend from North Carolina deplores that we are annually importing millions of barrels of crude oil from South America, more particularly at this time when the oil producers of Texas, Louisiana, and Oklahoma are experiencing great difficulty in marketing their oil products at a price which allows them to break even.

Mr. STACK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KNUTSON. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsyl-

Mr. STACK. I would like to get some information as to who put those 11,000,000 men out of work.

Mr. KNUTSON. Who put them out of work?

Mr. STACK. Yes.

Mr. KNUTSON. The depression put them out of work.

Mr. STACK. Who started the depression?

Mr. KNUTSON. Why, Woodrow Wilson, when he kept us out of war back in 1917.

Mr. STACK. I think Herbert Hoover had something to do with the matter, too.

Mr. KNUTSON. It started under Wilson, and it is being finished under Roosevelt.

Mr. MOTT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KNUTSON. I yield to the gentleman from Oregon.

Mr. MOTT. Does the gentleman know of any Democrat who is in favor of lowering the duty on any product raised in his own State?

Mr. KNUTSON. I have not heard anyone advocate such

In order to justify his Brazilian trade agreement Secretary Hull recently issued a statement to the effect that there were only 354 miners engaged in mining manganese ore in 1929 when, as a matter of fact, we then had about 800 miners employed on the Cuyuna Range in Minnesota alone. According to the United States Bureau of Mines the total value of domestic manganese and manganiferous ores produced in 1929 was $4,886,823; more than half of this amount representing wages. Allowing $1,000 per man, this alone meant the employment of 2,440 miners in that particular line, so I would advise the Secretary of State to secure his information from more reliable sources in the future.

We have, in Minnesota, large manganese deposits and before the depression these manganese mines contributed to the school fund of our State several hundred thousand dollars annually in taxes. Today they are closed down because they cannot compete with the peon and forced labor of Cuba, Brazil, and Russia. As a result, these miners and their families are obliged to subsist upon public charity because the Roosevelt administration has failed to take their interests into consideration in the negotiation of foreigntrade pacts. I might say, in passing, that manganese is absolutely essential to our national defense, and yet the War Department was not notified when the treaty with Brazil, which reduced the tariff on manganese by 50 percent, was negotiated, and yet they talk about teamwork. Why was not the War Department consulted?

Mr. MILLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KNUTSON. I yield to my Democratic friend from Arkansas.

Mr. MILLER. I am at a loss to understand where the Secretary got his information. I live within 60 miles of the manganese district in Arkansas and I personally know more than 300 men are steadily employed in those mines. This employment has ranged all the way from 300 to 800 or 900 every year, according to the demand. I may say that the Brazilian trade treaty has done more to cripple the manganese industry in Arkansas than all other conditions com-

Mr. KNUTSON. I am glad to have that information. I may suggest to the Secretary of State that hereafter he get his information from more reliable sources.

Mr. SHORT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KNUTSON. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri. Mr. SHORT. Does the gentleman know that there is a company in Arizona that has spent some $5,000,000 to produce manganese, and since this reciprocal tariff with Brazil has gone into effect they have been forced to close down all of their operations and lose their investment?

Mr. KNUTSON. How many men were thrown out of Mr. SHORT. Several thousand.

Mr. MILLER. I was wondering if the United States Steel Corporation did not furnish some of this information in reference to the number of men employed in the manganese

Mr. KNUTSON. I think that is where the Secretary of State got his information, because the United States Steel Corporation owns the manganese deposits in Brazil.

Mr. MONAGHAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KNUTSON. I yield to the gentleman from Montana. Mr. MONAGHAN. Does the gentleman know that at the present moment in the cities of Phillipsburg and Butte, Mont., there are 400 men employed in this industry alone?

Mr. KNUTSON. And how many before?

Mr. MONAGHAN. That was during the low peak of pro-

Mr. KNUTSON. How many men were employed when the demand was supplied from domestic sources?

Mr. MONAGHAN. It would be well up in the thousands. I do not have the exact figures.

Mr. KNUTSON. I thank the gentleman for his contribu-

Mr. HOEPPEL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KNUTSON. I yield to my Democratic friend from California

Mr. HOEPPEL. Does the gentleman know that approximately 675,000 American miners and others in allied industries are unemployed because we do not have a sufficient tariff rate on copper?

Mr. KNUTSON. I assumed that fact was known to everyone in this House

Mr. CHRISTIANSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KNUTSON. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota. Mr. CHRISTIANSON. The Chairman of the Ways and Means Committee requested the gentleman to place in the RECORD a statement of comparative prices of agricultural products at this time, and I believe before March 4, 1933. Will the gentleman also place in the RECORD the statement that if the Democrats claim credit for these higher prices then they must also accept responsibility for the drought?

Mr. KNUTSON. The gentleman is absolutely right.

Mr. SHORT. Is it not also true that oil and lumber are being imported today from Soviet Russia?

Mr. KNUTSON. Oh, we are importing everything.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may have 10 additional minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. SHORT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KNUTSON. I yield.

Mr. SHORT. If more of these proposed reciprocal tarifftrade treaties are consummated, particularly with Mexico and several other countries, it will not only paralyze but destroy the great mining industry in southwest Missouri, southeastern Kansas, and northeastern Oklahoma, which produce two-thirds of the lead and zinc of the United States

Mr. KNUTSON. There is no doubt about that.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KNUTSON. I yield.

Mr. CONNERY. Does not the gentleman think that if we could pass in this House the provision which the Committee on Labor wrote into the 30-hour-week bill 2 years ago, that whenever the Secretary of the Treasury finds that the total landed cost of any article or commodity imported into the United States is less than the cost of production of a similar article in this country, such article or commodity shall be barred, would settle our whole tariff situation?

Mr. KNUTSON. Let me ask the gentleman a question. Does the gentleman know of any other country in the world that is foolish enough to permit articles to be imported into their country and undersell the domestic product?

Mr. CONNERY. No; I do not.
Mr. KNUTSON. I do not either, and it does not happen in this country when the Republicans are in power.

Mr. PITTENGER. The gentleman, I understand, intended to discuss the print-paper and match industries.

Mr. KNUTSON. And I shall do so at this point by inserting a letter from William J. Ward, Jr., which came to hand a day or two ago. The letter follows:

MARCH 8, 1935.

Hon. Harold Knutson,

House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

Dear Mr. Knutson: Knowing your interest in the fight of the small fellow to stay in business and our immediate need for relief, I am taking advantage of this occasion to point out the burden that has been placed upon the small paper mills who are not self-contained; that is, those who are unfortunate enough to have to buy all their raw materials.

all their raw materials.

In the first place, the present administration, as well as all politicians in general, very meekly step aside and keep quiet on any question pertaining to rebuking the publishers, who form the opinion of the American public by their mighty organ, the daily newspapers. Taking this statement as an undeniable truth, we find that our Congress and the Senate have been intimidated by threat of the publishers to oppose their reelection to the extent of refraining from the placing of a duty upon the importation of newsprint and the constituents of newsprint, with the result that what was once a 100-percent American industry is now in the throes of a dving gasp.

Perfectly cognizant of this fact, those Members, elected to represent and protect the industry of the American people, fail to recognize the destructive influence upon the remaining grades of manufacture.

sent and protect the industry of the American people, fail to recognize the destructive influence upon the remaining grades of manufactured paper. The six grades of paper in practically the same category as newsprint have to be sold at a price based upon that of newsprint. The reason for this is simple—if there is too much of a spread in the price the ultimate user elects from the point of economy to use newsprint as a substitute, thereby killing any market for the grades, such as posters, manilas, B publication, etc.

The N. R. A. and the code authorities of the groundwood division are perfectly aware of this situation and in their earnest endeavor to protect American labor and capital have graciously permitted a price filed under these grades of 20 percent below cost, excluding any interest on bonded indebtedness. Again in their effort to protect the small fellow they have allowed the most advantageously situated mills from a standpoint of cheap wood, power, and labor and equipped with the latest and most efficient machinery to set the price and then have the other less fortunate mills sell at this price which naturally is far below their actual manufacturing costs. On top of this they have raised not only the wages of labor to an alarming degree but also the price on all materials entering the manufacture of paper, such as coal, Four-drinier wires, felts, sulphites, soda, clay, alum, size, starch, color, etc., with the net result, to us at least, that not one single grade that we manufactured showed a profit, and our operating sheet shows a loss equal to $11.00 per ton on our entire output.

Many of the mills who manufacture grades akin to our own are abandoning them as rapidly as possible and are attempting to shows a loss equal to $11.00 per ton on our entire output.

Many of the mills who manufacture grades akin to our own are abandoning them as rapidly as possible and are attempting to establish themselves in other and higher grades such as those under the supervision of the book and writing division. This is causing a highly unpleasant situation as it heightens the competition in a field already overcrowded. How this can result in anything other than a further demoralization of markets and a general bankrupt condition to the smaller manufacturers whose operating capital is speedily diminishing, I cannot see.

The only logical answer is to make the publishers who are solely

The only logical answer is to make the publishers who are solely dependent upon the paper industry carry part of this burden in the way of an increased price for their paper and thus bolster the whole price structure of the higher grades.

I call upon you as a public-spirited citizen to do your part in saving an industry that is in dire need of relief from the domination of the press.

Yours very truly,

W. J. WARD, Jr., Vice President.

Mr. Speaker, Mr. Ward's letter tells in a much better manner than I could hope to do the desperate situation of the paper industry. I may say that the same deplorable situation confronts the match industry.

Mr. HOEPPEL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. KNUTSON. As I have no assurance that my time will be further extended, I must decline to yield. I do not want to unduly consume the time of the House, but I feel justified in taking such time as is necessary to call to your attention the chaos that exists in American agriculture, industry, and mining because of insufficient protection due to the devaluation of the dollar.

When we had Secretary Wallace before the Ways and Means Committee a year or more ago, he expressed the opinion that any American industry or activity that could not stand upon its own bottom should be discontinued in favor of the foreign competitor who can produce more cheaply.

If we cannot compete with New Zealand in the production of butter because the cattle of New Zealand are out on green pasture 12 months of the year, should we go out of

Because we cannot compete with China in the production of dried and powdered eggs, should our poultrymen be compelled to go into some other line?

Because we cannot compete with Great Britain in the manufacture of pig iron, should the American manufacturers of pig iron be forced to go into something else?

Because our papermakers cannot compete with the printpaper manufacturers of Canada, Scandinavia, and the Baltic states, should they be compelled to close down and throw their employees out of employment?

Because American growers of rye cannot compete with Canada and Europe, should they be compelled to go into some other line of activity?

Because American match manufacturers cannot compete with Japan and Russia, should they be compelled to close down?

Because our livestock raisers cannot produce cattle as cheaply as can Argentina, should they be compelled to go into some other line?

These are vital and pertinent questions, my friends, and if the announced policy of the Roosevelt administration is followed out to its logical conclusion, what will be left to the American farmer, wage earner, and manufacturer save bankruptcy? This is something that should give us the deepest concern, regardless of our political affiliations and

The Republican Party stands for the prosperity of the American producer and wage earner. It believes that the American market belongs to the American farmer, laborer, and manufacturer; and, in order to protect that market for the home folks and against the devastating competition of peasant, peon, and slave labor in other countries, we believe that it is absolutely necessary that we have a tariff that represents the difference in cost of production in this country and competing countries. If I am not mistaken, the next campaign will be waged with the tariff as the paramount issue. [Applause.] Then the American people will have an opportunity to decide whether our own people or those of other countries shall be looked after first. The Republican Party believes that our first duty is to the American people. In 1936 we will go before the electorate on the sound and incontrovertible proposition that there can be no return of prosperity so long as we continue to violate the fundamental principle that the home market belongs to the American producer, wage earner, and manufacturer. There never has been a time in the history of the Republic when we were less able to withstand the blighting effects of free and unrestricted international trade. Mr. Doughton speaks of making employment for idle workers formerly engaged in producing for the export trade. Why not make work for the millions of idle Americans who were formerly engaged in supplying our home needs? We consume over 90 percent of what we produce, so it would seem to me that providing work for these millions of unemployed should be our first concern.

We have spent billions and billions of dollars for relief, but we have not relieved the unemployment evil. Why not raise the import taxes to a point where industries now operating part time may go onto a full-time basis, which would also encourage the reopening of factories now completely closed down? That would give work to everyone and yet not cost the Federal Treasury one red penny. I commend this plan to the thoughtful consideration of the party in power. If you will adopt such a plan and eliminate the existing uncertainty in agriculture and industry, you can end the depression in 60 days. [Applause.]

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Horne, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had concurred in a concurrent resolution of the House of the following title:

H. Con. Res. 16. Concurrent resolution rescinding the action of the Vice President and Speaker in signing the enrolled bill (H. R. 330) entitled "An act for the relief of Sophie de Sota."

The message also announced that the Senate insists upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 5913) entitled "An act making appropriations for the military and nonmilitary activities of the War Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1936, and for other purposes", disagreed to by the House; agrees to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints Mr. COPELAND, Mr. HAYDEN, Mr. SHEPPARD, Mr. NORBECK, and Mr. Townsend to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate insists upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 5255) entitled "An act making appropriations for the Departments of State and Justice and for the Judiciary, and for the Departments of Commerce and Labor, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1936, and for other purposes", disagreed to by the House; agrees to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints Mr. McKellar, Mr. Russell, Mr. Pittman, Mr. Hale, and Mr. NYE to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

PUBLICITY OF TAX RETURNS

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I call up House Resolution

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 155

Resolved, That immediately upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for consideration of H. R. 6359, "A bill to repeal certain provisions relating to publicity of certain statements of income." That after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and shall continue not to exceed I hour, to be equally divided and controlled by the Chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Ways and Means, the bill shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the bill for amendment the Committee shall rise and report the same to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted. the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit, with or without instructions.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANSLEY].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania is recognized for 30 minutes.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, this rule provides for the consideration of the bill commonly known as the repeal of the "pink slip" provision of the income-tax law. It is a matter which is familiar to all the Members here. It has been a vexatious question for a great many years in the House and in the Congress.

in this session the gentleman from New York [Mr. Bacon] introduced a bill to repeal the section providing for such publicity. We are today considering a substantially similar bill introduced by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. Doughton), the beloved and distinguished chairman of our great Committee on Ways and Means.

Personally, I have always been opposed to the publicity provision and I have always voted against it. [Applause.]

Thanks to the distinguished gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. Doughton], this iniquitous measure is about to be

Next to the snooping which went on under the eighteenth amendment, I believe this provision for publicity of incometax returns, in the various ways it has been enacted into the law, has been the most outrageous violation of personal privacy this Government has ever attempted. I believe publicity of income-tax returns is wrong in principle, for this reason; it violates the privacy of our citizens. I am not concerned with the emotional talk about racketeers, snoopers, or gangsters. I believe the provision was always wrong in principle; that it never should have been enacted into law. and that it should be taken out of the law with all possible speed.

I am not concerned that only 31/2 percent of our people pay income taxes. I believe the principle would be the same if there were only one taxpayer in this entire Nation. I believe the amount of income that any one of our citizens earns is solely a confidential matter between that citizen and his Government and is not the business of any other person, whether a snooper, a racketeer, or the editor of a great newspaper. Let people mind their own business.

I have always felt that this principle of publicity of income-tax returns is similar to a possible repeal of the provisions in the Bill of Rights against "unlawful search and seizure." If the snoopers can find out how much income a citizen makes a year, the same interlopers can go into our homes and find out what you do there, day or night. Does anyone want that?

I do not believe that the American people ever intended when they adopted the income-tax amendment that the income of citizens would be made public for anybody who wanted to see it. I believe this repeal comes late, but I hope this is the day when our citizens will again be protected against the invasion of their privacy, and I hope, Mr. Speaker, that the repeal measure will overwhelmingly pass. [Applause.]

Mr. RANSLEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL].

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, in considering this legislation here today I think it is well that we should go over past history a little and be sure that the real picture is put before the House and the country.

As a matter of fact, when this provision was adopted it never received any real consideration in the House. It was put on in the Senate and came over to the House in a conference report in the very last few days of the session; there was practically no consideration and we had to accept it. It never had the consideration it was entitled to.

I also want you to remember that we put a like provision in the law back in 1923 or 1924, and after 1 year's experience it was almost unanimously repealed.

So that it shows that from our own experience when it was on the statute books it did not produce the result which the people who advocated it expected, or any other useful purpose, so was promptly repealed.

The reason given for the provision was that it would tend to bring in new income to the Treasury and result in more accurate returns.

The best information, it seems to me, there is on that subject comes from the State of Wisconsin where they had this provision in effect for 7 years, and I want to read a paragraph from the report of the Tax Commission of the State of Wisconsin:

The matter of giving publicity to the income-tax returns of our taxpayers has been treated in different ways. Early would result in fewer incorrect returns and in discovering much unreported income. These expected results have not materialized in any degree in the administration of either the individual or the corporation returns. There have been no instances where public inspection has brought forth unreported income, and as to its anticipated effect in producing more correct income returns, experience has shown that it has had the opposite effect. Knowing that their returns are open to inspection, taxpayers consolidate and condense their reports to make them as unintelligible as possible to those inspecting them, thus making their auditing by the commission or by the income-tax assessor more arduous, necessitating additional work, considerably more correspondence, and consequent expense and delay.

Further, the commission reported at that time:

A survey shows that public examination is almost wholly without any public motive or significance, but that advantage is taken of it to serve private and personal interests. Our filed returns are used by credit organizations which have men on hand almost constantly digging into the files. Returns are examined to prepare lists of prospective purchases of stocks and bonds and for other soliciting and advertising purposes. A common use of returns is to secure information in negotiating for the purchase of business properties, and very frequent use is made of them in delving into the intimate concerns of business competitors.

Further, the commission reported at that time:

The indiscriminate examination of returns is not only an imposition upon the reporting taxpayers but is also an imposition upon the State and upon its tax administration officers and employees. The commission does not favor any secrecy of returns that would bar examinations in the public interest, but it does suggest that the promiscuous misuse of files for private purposes to the great inconvenience and annoyance of officials and the expense to the State ought to be discontinued. No other State or country having such files in custody permits such misuse of them. These files contain the record of the lifeblood and register the pulse of the person and private business affairs of our own taxpayers and should be accessible only when the public interest is concerned.

It seems to me that that is about as good evidence as we can possibly get on a matter of this character, and it is absolutely conclusive on this subject. We should also take into consideration that every tax law that we have passed since 1913 has a provision in it authorizing the President, when he deems it necessary in the public interest, to make available these tax returns.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. RANSLEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman 5 minutes more.

Mr. SNELL. And as far as I know, the President has never taken it upon himself to open up the tax returns, because he has never been shown any real reason for doing it.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNELL. I yield.

Mr. MAY. I do not know that I remember the exact phraseology of the constitutional provision of the Bill of Rights, but it is to the effect that all men shall be exempt from unreasonable search and seizure of their persons and property. What is the difference between the statute that requires one to disclose in detail his personal property or money and going into one's house and searching for it and knowing that it is there?

Mr. SNELL. It seems to me that it is about the same thing.

Mr. WITHROW. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield? Mr. SNELL. Yes.

Mr. WITHROW. Has the gentleman read from the findings of the commission, or from a letter written to someone by one of the commissioners?

Mr. SNELL. I have read from the report of the Wisconsin State Tax Commission, to which, I understand, all of the commissioners adhere.

Mr. MILLARD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield? Mr. SNELL. Yes.

Mr. MILLARD. I have a copy of a letter from the commission, dated March 1, 1935, and it carries out what the gentleman says.

Mr. SNELL. That is the best information that is available on the subject at the present time, and comes from the only State that publishes returns. As a matter of fact, I do not know of any information that has ever come to us where any real public good was advanced by opening up these returns. Under our present law they are all available to any committee of Congress that has reason to investigate them, and every reasonable protection to the public is maintained by this provision for investigation. As a matter of fact, large corporation returns are published at the present time, and they are available to anyone who is interested in them, and the only possible excuse for making these income-tax returns public is for the purpose of catering to the most sordid inquisitiveness there is in every community. Unless someone can produce some real reason, which has never been produced as far as I know, I think the law should be immediately repealed. This commission goes on further to state that these returns are continually looked over by people who desire to get some sort of a list of people to whom they can attempt to sell things. In other words, a sucker list.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield? Mr. SNELL. Yes.

Mr. DONDERO. Is it not true that what this law does is to make Government just a little bit more disagreeable to them  $3\frac{1}{2}$  percent of the taxpayers of the country?

Mr. SNELL. It not only does that but it does not produce any good for the other fellow.

Mr. MILLARD. There are 29 States in the Union having income-tax laws. In 28 of them they do not have the publicity of the income tax.

Mr. SNELL. In addition to that, the commission says that it has produced no public good, no additional returns, or no more honest returns.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNELL. Yes.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I am in favor of the bill. Assuming that this bill is passed, but not signed until after the 15th of this month, will it affect the present publication of the income taxes?

Mr. SNELL. I do not think so. If it is not passed in time before the 15th, of course the returns will be open to inspection on the 15th.

Mr. GRAY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNELL. Yes.

Mr. GRAY of Pennsylvania. The gentleman is well informed in these matters and he has the good of the Nation at heart. Where money is accumulated in large sums, and in disproportionate measure, does not the gentleman think that it is well for the people to know where this money is being accumulated?

Mr. SNELL. I do not think that that is a question that goes into the matter of the publication of tax returns. I think that is an entirely outside matter.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from New York has again expired.

Mr. RANSLEY. Mr. Speaker, I vield the gentleman 5 minutes more.

Mr. SNELL. It seems to me it is very important at this time, especially in view of the happenings in the last couple of years, that we should not do anything as a Federal Government, to in any way encourage kidnapers and other people of that type. As a matter of fact, no poor child was ever kidnaped, as far as I have been able to learn. I think that when we go so far as to open all these returns, to a certain extent we are catering to the racketeers, to the policy men and kidnapers and the very worst element in our entire society. Personally I am very much opposed to continuing that any further. I am sure the majority of this House is of that opinion.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNELL. I yield.

Mr. RANDOLPH. The provision now works to the advantage of the snooper rather than to the taxpayer. The honest citizen has neither time nor inclination to get this information, has he?

Mr. SNELL. As far as I know, very few of them have ever expressed any desire for it. It comes from the other element in our communities.

Mr. KELLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNELL. I yield.

Mr. KELLER. The gentleman regards this as an important measure, does he not?

Mr. SNELL. I do.

Mr. KELLER. Then why should we not have more than 1 hour for general debate on this measure?

Mr. SNELL. I am not responsible for what time the majority side of this House allows for debate on any question.

Mr. MILLARD. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. SNELL. I yield.

Mr. MILLARD. I have a letter from the warden of Sing Sing Prison. I wonder if the gentleman would mind putting that in the RECORD during his time?

Mr. SNELL. I will be very glad to have the Clerk read it in my time.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the Clerk will read

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Ossining, N. Y., March 1, 1935.

Hon. CHARLES D. MILLARD.

The House of Representatives, Washington, D. C. My Dear Congressman Millard: While I believe the proposed publication of incomes may have its advantages and all interested officials should know what the financial return is for a particular organization or person, nevertheless, if publication is made of personal incomes, it will be the source of information for people who are criminally inclined and will undoubtedly form a basis for not only a sucker list but for extortion and other purposes, even robbery. Therefore I respectfully ask that you use your efforts to attempt to abrogate this vicious law.

With best wishes, believe me,

Sincerely yours,

L. E. LAWES.

Mr. SNELL. It seems to me that the argument presented by the commission which administered this law in Wisconsin, and the reports of distinguished gentlemen like the one whose letter was just read by the Clerk, are more effective arguments than any I could make at this time. It seems to me this House will be performing a real service to the country if it unanimously votes for the repeal of this obnoxious law. It might be of interest to state that foreign countries that have had an income tax for a great many years have always maintained the strictest secrecy of returns. England has had one for 75 years.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNELL. I yield.

Mr. BLANTON. Did I understand the minority leader to recommend that the House repeal this by unanimous vote?

Mr. SNELL. I would like to have it, as far as I am concerned.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman would like to have every Republican on his side vote for repeal?

Mr. SNELL. I said that as forcefully as I could, and I am sure the very great majority of them agree with me.

Mr. BLANTON. I just wanted that distinctly understood. Mr. SNELL. I would be glad to have it understood, and I would like to have the country understand that I am for the repeal of this measure. There is no question about it, nor is there any doubt in mind about feelings of a great majority of the Members on both sides. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH].

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I cannot help but look with suspicion on any bill that has been introduced or is being advocated by the Republican leaders. I am fearful that this bill will pass and that the publicity features of the income-tax law will be repealed.

Mr. MILLARD. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. SABATH. Later I will yield.

I myself, however, do not believe in the arguments that are being advanced by those who desire the repeal of this law, that it will aid the racketeers and that it will provide a sucker list, or that it will help kidnapers. Oh, what ingenuity is employed by these gentlemen who desire to bring about the repeal of this law! Of course, I am satisfied that, with the terrific lobby and the propaganda that is going on for the repeal of this provision, it will pass the House. Unfortunately there are very few men in the House who have time to study the underlying reason for the demand to repeal this provision, but I know the demand comes from those who do not desire that income returns should be published, especially for the reason that it will disclose that there are thousands of business men, manufacturers, and others whose return will show substantial profits in 1934, who in 1930, 1931, and 1932, under the Republican administration, suffered tremendous profits. It is these gentlemen who have been the beneficiaries of the new-deal legislation, who, under this provision, will be compelled to make true returns showing that conditions have improved under the present administration and by reason of legislation enacted on the recommendation of our great President, Franklin D. Roosevelt. It is they who were on the brink of bankruptcy in 1931 and 1932 that naturally dislike very much to have the public have knowledge of the progress that has been made for recovery and, notwithstanding the benefits they have derived, are continuously criticizing and finding fault with President Roosevelt's policies and with the action of the Congress.

Yes, Mr. Speaker, there are hundreds upon hundreds of corporations and thousands of business men who have made large sums of money and who will pay substantial income taxes for 1934 due to the improved conditions in business. They, I fear, in conjunction with some of the big taxpayers, may feel they may evade the payment of just taxes, and their real concern is that it will not be as easy to do if this publicity provision remains in force.

My friends on the other side dislike to admit, yes, even deny, that conditions have improved. It is for that reason that the Republican leader and the Republicans regard this publicity provision with disfavor, or rather that the publicity of returns be brought to the attention of the country, because the country would recognize and appreciate how much good has been accomplished by President Roosevelt and the Democratic Party for the Nation and for business. [Applause.]

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SABATH. I yield.

Mr. BLANTON. The distinguished gentleman from Illinois is making an interesting speech and I am with him and he ought to have the entire membership present to hear him. I want to ask him a question. The gentleman at one time was one of the big farmers of this Nation, one who in years gone by has raised 100,000 bushels of potatoes and 100,000 bushels of onions in 1 year. I want to ask the gentleman if, when the gentleman pays his taxes to the State of Illinois and every other citizen pays his taxes to the State of Illinois, is it not a fact that anyone can go to the court house and find out exactly the amount of taxes that every one of them paid?

Mr. SABATH. Yes; it is easy for one to ascertain the amount of taxes one pays in my county or State. A list is made public and printed and any citizen is entitled to obtain it. Never, to my knowledge, has any one been injured by the publication of this list, but I do know that it has enabled my State and county to obtain hundreds of thousands of dollars of taxes that before the publication of such returns the State and county were deprived of.

As to being a big farmer and raising the crop the gentleman describes is far-fetched. He should have prefaced that and said "was." I assure him it would not have been embarrassing to file a return on profits derived therefrom. Fortunately, or unfortunately, I have been obliged to deny myself the luxury of farming.

Mr. BLANTON. Right at this point I want the balance of the Members to hear the gentleman from Illinois, and I make the point of order that there is no quorum present. I am with the gentleman on his position, but I want the Membership to hear him. This is a big fight going on in this House.

Mr. MILLARD. Mr. Speaker, a point of order. [Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order | months and even years of effort by Government experts who there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Two hundred and twenty-one Members are present, a quorum.

Mr. RANSLEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HALLECK].

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Speaker, I am sure I want to thank the gentleman from Texas for at least making an effort to get all of the folks over here to hear my first talk. [Ap-

Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of this legislation to repeal the publicity feature of the income-tax law. I come from a district in the State of Indiana in which I do not believe there is living a single millionaire. I have heard it suggested several times that the only people who desire the repeal of the publicity feature are those people who are making a lot of money. The country doctors in my district have been writing me asking that this section be repealed. The small business men have been writing me to this same effect. In my short experience I have observed that very often we get communications which simply reflect some high-powered propaganda. That is not my experience in this particular matter, however. Rather is it my idea that the people of my district who are in the lower brackets desire that this matter of publicity be done away with.

We have heard a lot of propaganda, and there has been going through the country that line of thought which would make it appear that if a man has $1,000 in the bank or is making a little money that he is an enemy of society. I do not believe that this should be true, and I do not think that we ought further to embarrass the people who are the backbone of our country by subjecting their report as to the amount of money they are making to the scrutiny of everyone who might want to have that information.

Another thing which has occurred to me is that if there is any forgotten man in the United States it is the taxpayer; and I am led to inquire whether we should add insult to injury by requiring that the amount of tax that he pays and the money that he makes be made public? It seems to me it can serve no good purpose.

Fundamentally I believe that this thing is attacked because it is an invasion of everything that we have heretofore believed to be a matter of American liberty, independence, and private concern. I listened with interest to the theory of the gentleman from Illinois that we are ashamed to admit that we are making more money under the new deal than we did before. That is a matter of opinion to which I do not subscribe. There are many people who are now wondering whether the Boston Tea Party has been such a success, and whether the efforts of those who gave so much to make the world safe for democracy have been in vain. We ought not to disturb the fundamental liberties and rights that are guaranteed to the people of America.

Mr. CANNON of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HALLECK. I yield.

Mr. CANNON of Wisconsin. If one of the gentleman's constituents were a successful business man and made an honest and truthful report, how could he be embarrassed?

Mr. HALLECK. Let me answer that. I have in my file a letter from a small business man running a small manufacturing concern in the city of La Fayette. He said:

It is bad enough to have my big business competitors counting my employees as they come out of the door and stepping off my floor space in order to get at my financial standing and my ability to compete, without handling over to them the very facts as to my financial position.

[Applause.]

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HALLECK. I yield.

Mr. DONDERO. There has never been, and there is not now, any objection to any officer or agent of the Government who has the right to this information being given it, is there?

Mr. HALLECK. I think that is correct. It has been my observation that in the matter of ferreting out failure to pay income tax, those things have come as a result of have worked it out. I would like to know what good purpose can be served by making it possible for every probe in the country to see what a man makes.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. RANSLEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 additional minutes to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. HALLECK. I am not particularly concerned in this talk about kidnapers. I am inclined to believe that the kidnapers have available more information than they would get from this publicity matter. But beyond that it subjects every taxpayer to the approaches of those people, for instance, who want to borrow money or sell goods. Why, I might ask when you go home next summer and John Jones or Bill Smith comes to you to borrow $200, what are you going to tell him if he knows that your income has been $2,000 or $10,000 and that you have the money? What are you going to tell the man who is after you trying to sell insurance or any other commodity or goods. These are some of the things, in my opinion, which make people favor the repeal of this provision. As I view it they have a right to be protected in their individual liberties or rights.

I was not here when this bill was passed, but I am happy to be here to vote for its repeal. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TRUAX].

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, the propaganda in favor of repeal of the "pink slip" provision is one of the oldest rackets we have in this country and it is typical of the usual raid upon the common people of the country. It is a raid upon the 98 percent of our people who do not make enough money or have enough property or enough earnings to even file an income-tax report.

Mr. Speaker, in 1934 there were 1,968,170 returns closed in the Treasury Department. Of that number only 1,509,030 were returned by individuals, 459,140 being returned by corporations. So we have less than 2 percent or, in other words, less than 2 men out of 100 in this country who even filed returns.

What does this mean? Unless you make $1,000 net in a year if you are a single man or $2,500 if you are a married man, you do not have to file a return, and unless you make a gross income of $5,000 you need not return any statement at all. Why, Mr. Speaker, this silly, futile argument that this pink-slip provision helps racketeers and gangsters is nothing but pure bunk. This argument in favor of repeal only helps the rich gangsters, the multimillionaire gangsters, to get by and evade and defraud the Government of its just taxation. It is merely another charge of the "Light Brigade" of the plutocrats. We have a communication, a copy of which is out in the lobby, from the so-called "Sentinels of the Republic", headed by Raymond Pitcairn. Every one of the Members received a letter urging repeal of the "pink slip" provision. What is this organization? Instead of calling them the "Sentinels of the Republic" I have a better name for them. I call them the listening posts for the predatory, pusillanimous plutocrats of this country. [Applause and laughter.]

Mr. Speaker, they want us to repeal this provision. This feature of the income-tax law was enacted in the Seventythird Congress. An opportunity has not been had to try it out or to work it out, yet they want it repealed. Every Morgan wants this provision repealed as well as every Mellon and every Rockefeller. They are for the repeal of this pinkslip provision. Who else is for it?

Let us stand up and count noses. Let us see who is for it and against it. Are the farmers of this country, who did not make enough to pay an income tax, in favor of repeal of this provision? Are the 20,000,000 people who are on the relief rolls in favor of repeal? Are the 11,000,000 unemployed for repeal? Are the 40,000,000 wage earners and independent small business men in favor of repeal? No. They like myself want all of the pitiless publicity that can be given to this matter thrown upon the incomes of the rich, the superrich, and the idle rich. Who else requests repeal? Why, every utility magnate of this country and all of the racketeer bankers favor repeal; yet you compel your American farmer to file a complete statement of his business every year, and if he participates in the adjustment crop program he must file every last acre and its productivity.

The farmer, that Atlas upon whose broad shoulders the world rests, does not favor repeal. His taxable and mortgaged property are open at all times for public inspection of both the money lenders and the 36-percent loan sharks. If the farmer desires to avail himself of the Government's crop-reduction program, he must list to the last acre which is producing or is not producing, and if he makes a mistake of one single acre in filing his return, he is penalized by the Government and will not receive one cent of the amount due him. Moreover, every 5 years the farmer must fill out and sign and swear to a statement of his crops, his financial standing, and how deep he is in debt. Three farmers in Illinois revolted against this "inquisitorial" requirement of the Government and refused to sign the returns. Now the Government intends to prosecute them, to have them indicted, and sent to jail for noncompliance with this "inquisitorial" procedure.

Is the small business man and independent producer for repeal? No; he is against it. His income is so limited that revenue collectors do not worry him. His great worry is the chain-store buccaneers, headed by Col. Robert Wood, president of Sears, Roebuck Co., and recently appointed chief of the President's Advisory Committee to spend $4,880,000,000 of taxpayers' money for public relief. Colonel Wood is heartly for repeal of the pink slip.

Practically all the bankers of the country are for repeal and especially the big racketeer banks who lend something to borrowers they have not; namely, money. Their racket is to collect interest on $10,000 whereas they only have $1,000 of actual currency. All of the public-utilities magnates are for repeal. Henry L. Doherty is for repeal. His depredations and casualties among the common people are numbered by the hundreds of thousands. If pitiless publicity for income-tax payers has slain its thousands as these prosperous "repealers" contend, then men like Doherty, Morgan, Mellon, and Rockefeller have slain their tens of thousands by their swashbuckling pillage of the masses who work for a living—the farmers, wage workers, small business men, and soldiers who do not object to income-tax publicity.

Every robber of an orphan, every despoiler of widows, every crooked stock-and-bond salesman who stole the peoples' savings is for the repeal of the pink slip. Al Capone is for repeal. A notorious brigand who was so clever and so powerful with officials of the law that the Government was unable to apprehend him for illegally selling beer and whisky, but was able to send him to the penitentiary for evasion and fraud in his income-tax returns. And today Al Capone rests securely behind the Federal prison bars on the rock-bound coast of that modern island of St. Helena.

Andrew Mellon, the greatest refunder of plutocratic income taxes in the Nation's history, who refunded $4,000,-000,000 to the rich during his incumbency as Secretary of the Treasury, strongly favors the repeal of the pink-slip clause. He, like his fellow bluebeard, Morgan, objects to having the pitiless light of publicity thrown upon his tremendous wealth and holdings. Nearly 80 years old and somewhat senile in all mental processes except that of grabbing and holding and retaining money and bonds, he now spends his declining years in what I hope is an abortive and ill-fated attempt to rob the Government of $3,000,000, which the Government contends that he owes. He is one of the plutocrats who will move heaven and earth and stop at nothing to hold his slimy heaps of gold. One of his favorite tricks is to hand millions to his progeny, his sons and daughters, under the thinly veiled guise that he is teaching them how to become good business men and women. But all of these illicit deals are in fact and in truth successful attempts to unload his vast wealth upon the future holders of Mellon wealth and aristocracy and, at the same time, burden the already bowed backs of the farmers and industrial workers with a load of taxation that crushes them to the ground.

The ingenious plan by which Mellon divested himself of title to $10,520,495 of disqualified bank stock to become Secretary of the Treasury in 1921, but in which transaction Mellon did not lose a penny of income from the stock, was told to the Board of Tax Appeals by his aged 79-year-old financial secretary, Howard N. Johnson.

These fellows are all repealists, who not only want to repeal the pink-slip clause and prohibition but they want to repeal soldiers' pensions, the child-labor law, the labor provisions of N. R. A., and the processing tax on farm commodities.

They want to repeal all laws, all regulations, and all methods which do not work for their own special benefit and enable them to continue as burglars of wealth, idle holders of idle capital, lounge lizards of the blue-blooded, and pink-toed aristocracy of wealth. They are against all people, all things, and all conditions that do not add to their monstrous fortunes and huge incomes—which are no more nor less than a heavy toll exacted from the pockets and wrung from the hearts of the common people.

The simple statement that 98 percent of the people of this country do not pay income taxes speaks eloquently of the tragedies and pathos that mere words can neither paint nor picture. When the plain truth is told we must admit the Nation is bankrupt. The total bonded, mortgaged, and unsecured debt, public and private, is $235,000,000,000; yet, being generous and conservative in making an estimate of national wealth, none will declare that all of our wealth, all of our resources, and all of our mechanistic equipment is today worth more than $250,000,000,000.

The 98 percent—the one hundred and twenty-five millions who have not enough property, who have not a sufficiency in wages or income to even file returns—this 98 percent of our people have a $15,000,000,000 equity in a $250,000,000,000 corporation owned by the plutocrats, the trusts, massed industry, the bond grabbers, and coupon clippers. Industry is bankrupt and mortgaged, and a heartless moneyed aristocracy rules, with the people being enslaved. The ironshod heel of ruthless wealth grinds deeper into the everyielding cheek of an unoffending farm citizenship and wage workers who must earn their living by the sweat of their brows.

A wholly nefarious organization that I am again pleased to mention is the Sentinels of the Republic, by Raymond Pitcairn, national chairman. This organization of the rich and near rich proudly pats itself on the back and arrogantly proclaims to have—hitherto successfully opposed such measures in aid of bureaucracy and irresponsible government as the so-called "child labor amendment", which would give to Congress the power "to limit, regulate, and prohibit the labor of persons under 18 years of age." The very wording of this measure should be abhorrent to true Americans, and the fact that three-fourths of the States rejected it within 3 years after its proposal by Congress in 1924 confirms this judgment—

Says Mr. Pitcairn.

I repeat that the "sentinels" of wealth boast of their opposition to the child-labor amendment. They not only would crush mature labor, men and women, but they would crush the little children. They would make them tramp the brutal treadmill of massed industry. They oppose the President's Public Works bill with an appropriation of $4,880,000,000 to relieve the unemployed. They call the sum "astronomical." They want this appropriation "safeguarded" by a provision "prohibiting its use in competition with private business enterprises." They are against the President's social security legislation. They do not want to take any chances with the "money of the taxpayers" to adopt "highly complex" and "experimental schemes of unemployment insurance, old-age pensions, help for mothers and infants, child welfare, and local public health programs."

When it comes to gall, arrogance, and pure unadulterated brass, "The Sentinels of the Republic" measure up well with the American Liberty League, the Economy League, and other predatory organizations of idle holders of idle capital. They hypocritically cant through their mouthpiece, Mr. Raymond Pitcairn, national chairman:

The taxpayer has no opportunity to show the proportion of his income he is using to employ self-respecting citizens who would otherwise be on the dole, nor does it reveal his contributions to

No, we have no desire to expose the private affairs of the rich to satisfy the morbid curiosity of their less brethren, as Pitcairn claims. We demand, however, that the public who have a right to know the amount of incomes be satisfied in the securing of knowledge that Congress says they are entitled to.

Your cool assumption, Raymond Pitcairn, that income taxpayers, represented by less than 2 percent of our population, are preventing the unemployed from being on the dole and that the contributions to charity are saving people from Federal relief funds, is the cap sheaf on your shock of deliberate untruths and misstatements. The answer to that damn-fool statement is Relief Director Hopkins' figures of 20,000,000 people on State and Federal relief lists and the statement of William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor, of 11,000,000 unemployed.

You further state, "This act will encourage mendicants and high-pressure collectors "-as if these unfortunate beggars in a land of plenty would be so optimistic and hopeful as to expect anything from the income-tax dodger. One would think that these tax evaders whom you represent would pay their bills so promptly that collectors would never call on them. You babble on, "Untold injury will be done not only to citizens of large means, but citizens of modest means will suffer even greater hardships and many of them eventual ruin." What about the hundreds of thousands of farmers who have been not only eventually ruined but finally and completely devasted by your money lenders and mortgagees, whose farms have been foreclosed and the owners thereof turned out in the road, and who haven't paid income taxes for 15 years? What of the additional hundreds of thousands of home owners who have lost their homes and have been set out in the street by the sheriff to beg, starve, or steal through no fault of their own but because of a government of the rich, by the rich, and for the rich?

You ("Commodore" Pitcairn) appear to be solicitous that "the man who has a small business will reveal his modest income." In contradiction to this statement. I beg to state that the small business men with whom I am familiar, and there are thousands of them in the State of Ohio, are hanging on by the skin of their teeth and their incomes are so modest that they have none to report to the Federal taxing authorities. You express fear about doctors, engineers, lawyers, and other professional men whose incomes "vary." Paradoxically, you say "They may appear as failures, although in fact they may be successful." Why display so much solicitude about this group of our citizens, who taken as a class are by and large successful, have never known poverty and depression and who are listed in the 1934 Treasury Report as having paid 60 percent of all of the income taxes of the country in that year?

Here is a gem, a masterpiece! You now express "concern " about the welfare of the elderly people. You solemnly aver, "The publication of income-tax returns of elderly business and professional men will show up to their clients and patrons their small incomes." That is exactly the condition that the millions of people who are signing the Townsend-bill petitions are raising hell about. The incomes of these deserving people have shown a steady and progressive diminution to that point which is represented in algebra by the quantity known as "minus x", which means the tail end of nothing. Again you declare. "Young men will be embarrassed in the development of new undertakings by the exposing of their limited income." Well, brother, if you had traveled out into the great open spaces as I have, if you had as honestly and diligently attempted to represent the people who have to work for a living as I do as Representative at large for the State of Ohio, you would know that we have about 100,000,000 people in this grand and glorious country of ours who are in erans who are embarrassed unto death because they have no jobs, no incomes, and such "patriots for dollars" as you and your organization knock and pound the soldiers' bonus bill in and out of season.

No; we are fed up on this pink-slipped, silk-stockinged propaganda. We have a bellyful of this sort of hogwash. Your abortive attempt to tickle my heart strings for the benefit of the overfed and underworked millionaires does not register with me. My sympathies, my devotion, and my efforts shall be directed for the distressed farmers, wageworkers, soldiers, small business men, and producers, who, in the end, create all wealth and pay all taxes. I am fighting for 123,000,000 people who do not pay income taxes. [Applause.]

INCOME-TAX COLLECTIONS—TABLE NO. 1 TAKEN FROM ANNUAL REPORT OF THE COMMISSIONER OF INTERNAL REVENUE FOR THE FISCAL YEAR ENDED JUNE 30, 1934

Collections of internal-revenue taxes during the fiscal year 1934 amounted to $2,300,816,308.88, compared with $1,619,-839,224.30 for the fiscal year 1933, an increase of $680,977,-084.58, or 42 percent. In addition, collections of agriculturaladjustment taxes totaled $371,422,885.64 during the fiscal vear 1934.

Income-tax collections for the fiscal year 1934 amounted to $817,025,339.72, compared with $746,791,404.11 for the fiscal year 1933, an increase of $70,233,935.61, or 9 percent. Collections of miscellaneous internal-revenue taxes during the fiscal year 1934 amounted to $1,483,790,969.16, as compared with $873,047,820.19 for the fiscal year 1933, an increase of $610,743,148.97, or 70 percent. This increase is accounted for in round numbers of $175,000,000 from the new taxes imposed by the National Industrial Recovery Act on capital stock, dividends, excess profits, and additional tax on gasoline; $215,000,000 from liquor taxes as a result of prohibition repeal, the Liquor Taxing Act of 1934, and a full year of returns from beer taxes; $79,000,000 from estate and gifts taxes under the provisions of the Revenue Act of 1932; $110,000,000 from manufacturers' excise taxes, and taxes on communications, pipe-line transportation, and checks, the increase being attributed to better business conditions and a full year of returns; $22,000,000 from tobacco and $9,000,000 from stamp taxes, attributed to better business conditions. The detail of the administration of these taxes appears in the text following and the detail of receipts appears in the statistical tables appended to this report. Summary comparison of internalrevenue tax receipts by quarters follows (see attached

Agricultural adjustment tax collections, not included in attached figures, were $39,676,530.50 for the quarter ended September 30, 1933, $100,886,718.11 for the quarter ended December 31, 1933, $112,527,834.84 for the quarter ended March 31, 1934, and $118,331,802.19 for the quarter ended June 30, 1934, a total of $371,422,885.64 for the fiscal year 1934. The taxes declared were on wheat, effective July 9, 1933; cotton, effective August 1, 1933; tobacco, effective October 1, 1933; field corn, effective November 5, 1933; hogs, effective November 5, 1933, with increased rates effective December 1, 1933, February 1, 1934, and March 1, 1934; paper and jute fabrics competing with cotton, effective December 1, 1933; and sugarcane and sugar beets, effective June 8, 1934. Collections from the taxes on each of these commodities appear in the statistical tables appended to this

COST OF ADMINISTRATION

The amount expended and obligated in administering the internal-revenue laws for the fiscal year 1934 was $28,826,-225.73, as compared with $30,031,722.98 during the fiscal year 1933. The cost of collecting each $100 of internal revenue was $1.25, as compared with $1.85 for the fiscal year 1933. (The amounts expended by the Bureau of Industrial Alcohol in administering the liquor laws prior to consolidation with the Bureau of Internal Revenue, May 10, 1934, are not included in these figures.) This sum does not include the amount expended for refunding taxes illegally or erroneously collected and for redemption of stamps, which is the same boat. We have nearly 4,000,000 World War vet- in no sense an administrative expense. The amount expended and obligated in administering the agricultural adjustment tax laws was $2,544,178.39, or 69 cents for each $100 of agricultural adjustment taxes collected. The total amount expended and obligated by the Bureau of Internal Revenue in administering tax laws during the fiscal year 1934 was $31,370,404.12. The total revenue collected was $2,672,239,194.52, of which $2,300,816,308.88 represented internal revenue and $371,422,885.64 agricultural adjustment taxes. Therefore, the cost of collecting each $100 of the total revenue was $1.17.

INCOME-TAX UNIT

Important changes were made in the law relating to income taxes under the Revenue Act of 1934. The most significant of these changes are discussed under appropriate headings below.

RETURNS CLOSED

The number of returns examined and closed during the fiscal year 1934 was 1,968,170, of which 1,509,030 were filed by individuals and partnerships and 459,140 by corporations.

Mr. RANSLEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. Bacon].

Mr. BACON. Mr. Speaker, it is natural that I should endorse the passage of this measure because it was my privilege to first introduce the bill on this subject, which I did on February 8. My bill is identical in purpose and practically identical in language with the one we are discussing today, which was introduced on March 7.

It is impossible today to discuss this question as comprehensively as I should like owing to the limited time of debate. but also this may not be necessary because of the fact that Mr. O'Connor of New York and others have already fully and persuasively covered the subject. I do, however, wish to touch on a few points that I believe to be fundamental and essential.

Mr. Speaker, my appeal to the House is for a dispassionate, nonpartisan, nonpolitical consideration of this question. I emphasize particularly the nonpolitical and nonpartisan feature of this proposal because the President of the United States did not recommend this provision in 1934, nor was it recommended by his Secretary of the Treasury.

I have seen in the press, and I am informed it is true, that about 10 days ago the Bureau of Internal Revenue made a report to the Treasury Department strongly recommending the repeal of this section.

Mr. Speaker, may I point out that if section 55 (b) is repealed many other safeguards will remain in the law that will not in any way be touched. It will still be possible for a committee of the House or a committee of the Senate to inspect the returns. It will still be possible for any State, municipality, county, or political subdivision within a State to get all of the information from the Treasury Department concerning the citizens of each particular subdivision. These provisions still remain in the law. So full information will still be available to all those who have a legitimate and a rightful excuse for having it. Furthermore, there will still be a provision in the act which will permit the President, if he deems that public necessity demands, to give full publicity at any time he sees fit.

The repeal of this section, therefore, does not remove the safeguards that we all want to have thrown around the publicity feature as far as it concerns proper officials. It seems to me that all of us should bend every effort to go after the tax evader and the man who submits a fraudulent income-tax return. I do not believe that there can be two thoughts in reference to this matter. It seems to me that the information on these so-called "pink slips" if published in newspapers will not in any way aid the Bureau of Internal Revenue in exposing the tax evader.

This has been the testimony of many different officials in the Bureau of Internal Revenue, not only now, but during

The gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL] quoted in full the report of the Wisconsin Income Tax Commission of 1930 and I shall not repeat that here, but it seems to me if we want to strengthen our laws against the tax evader and the fraudulent income taxpayer we should strengthen the powers of the Bureau of Internal Revenue. The efficient way to get the tax evader is by having competent internal revenue agents inspect the returns, audit the returns, and review the returns as they are doing and will continue to do, and it is only through efficient agents of the Treasury who have the right to go into every man's books, who have the right to examine into all his personal business affairs, that you are going to check the tax evader and not through any man who may read the information on these pink slips in his morning newspaper.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. RANSLEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from New York.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is recognized for 41/2

Mr. BACON. It seems to me the person who is most concerned with repeal of publicity, in spite of what some gentleman has said, is the small taxpaper. I want to reiterate the fact that any single person who has a net income of $1,000 a year or over, or any married man who has an income of $2,500 a year or over, must fill out this pink slip whether he pays a tax or not, and expose himself to the full glare of publicity in the press. The question of whether he pays a tax has nothing whatsoever to do with the situation and I am informed that the Treasury Department, to carry out the provisions of this section, intend to make available to the press of the country alphabetical lists by counties, by villages, by towns, by cities, and by States to anybody who wishes to get the information. Therefore, the person, it seems to me, who is going to be most concerned is the smaller business man who is facing strong competition from a larger competitor, and the smaller business man who. during the last 2 years of depression, may possibly have been running in the red, skating on thin ice, who does not want to proclaim to his competitor and to the world the precarious situation in which he may find his business.

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BACON. Yes; I yield. Mr. KELLER. Where does the gentleman get the information that this will be given out for publication?

Mr. BACON. The Treasury Department has told members of the press and Members of Congress that to carry out the spirit and letter of this act, unless it is repealed, they will make it public to the press and to anybody else who wants it.

Mr. KELLER. I got entirely different information, which is the reason I asked the gentleman the question.

Mr. MAY and Mr. DONDERO rose.

Mr. BACON. I yield first to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. MAY. Undoubtedly, the last Congress in enacting this provision, which requires publicity of these reports, had in mind securing such information as would add additional revenue to the payment made in accordance with the reports. Therefore, the man who has a small income would not necessarily be particularly hurt by the repeal of the provision, and the congressional committees will always have access to the larger returns.

Mr. BACON. The businessman of small income will be hurt if his financial affairs are paraded in the press. The congressional committees will have access to the larger returns, but I want to make a plea for the small business man, the lawyer, the doctor, the merchant in the country, who, as I said before, during the last 2 or 3 years has been struggling to keep his head above water. He has been skating on thin ice. He does not want to disclose his intimate business and private affairs to his competitors or to his creditors; and many men who are beginning to come back, who are struggling to come back, do not want to go through the public humiliation of having their private business affairs spread on the front page of their country weeklies.

Mr. MAY. In other words, the small business man in a small town, for instance, who had an income 2 or 3 years ago and would have to show now that he has no income might be put in an embarrassing attitude with respect to his banker.

Mr. BACON. There is no question about it. It may mean bankruptcy for many of the small businessmen when this information is published to his competitors and creditors.

Mr. DONDERO. The honest people of this country do not want this information and the dishonest people ought not to have it.

Mr. BACON. Of course, the honest citizen of this country is too busy with his own affairs to go snooping around looking for such information. The only people who want it are the curious minded, the gossips, and the snoopers.

Mr. DONDERO. The "pink slip" which shows the net income does not portray the real condition of the taxpayer, because there are a great many things which the taxpayer has to bear by way of obligation that he cannot deduct.

Mr. BACON. There is no question about that. The information on the pink slip does not give the true picture, and the facts given are very misleading and unfair to the man giving them. [Applause.]

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Blanton].

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, this effort to repeal is not a Democratic measure. This is not a Democratic administration measure. Repeal is exactly what the Republicans want. This "pink slip" law was never passed by any Republican administration. If you will get the record you will find that upon the urgent insistence of Democrats we finally succeeded in passing an income-publicity law, and you will find that the leading Republicans voted against it and finally repealed it. You will find all of the Republicans now trying to kill this new publicity law we passed last year. You heard me get the minority leader to admit that he is now leading his Republicans on the other side to kill it.

Why, all your State, county, and city tax matters back in your State are matters of public knowledge. Anybody has a right to go to the courthouse and city hall and find what your taxes are at home. The court matters in your States are open to the public and are matters of public record. The divorce proceedings of your constituents involving the most sacred domestic relations are open to the public. All the litigation you have in your districts is public. Every criminal case tried is open to the public, and you will find the proceedings in the newspapers. Why should big incomes of big multimillionaires be secret and confidential? Secrecy begets fraud. Defrauders do not want the light of day.

I will tell you what is going to happen. You are going to find a few leaders on the Democratic side following a Cabinet officer, and the minority leader leading his Republicans solidly to help repeal this law, and you are going to send it to the Senate, and you are going to see the Senate kill it, and then you will be left suspended in the air. And when your constituents demand an explanation all you can say is, a Cabinet secretary requested it, and the committee supported it, and we followed along. And it may be that your constituents will leave you still suspended in the air.

Do you want that to happen? I am not going to vote to repeal this salutary law passed last year. I am not afraid of the racketeers overreaching my intelligent constituents. That kind of talk is buncombe. It is brought in here to scare you into voting for repeal. Cannot your constituents handle bond and insurance agents? Mine can. They do not see them when they do not want to see them.

The people have a right to know about all income matters. and in this day of unrest I am speaking in the interest of every American citizen. By voting this repeal would add ammunition to these wild men who speak over the radio and arouse the passion and the prejudice of the people against the Government. It is just such unwisdom that brings on revolutions. I do not want to add fire and flame to that kind of propaganda being carried on through the United States today. I want to see it stopped. I want to see that kind of demagoguery stopped. I want the people of this country to know that they can have confidence in their Government. I want the people of this country to know that they can have confidence in their Congress, not only in the Senate but in the House of Representatives, which has always stood closer to the people than any other legislative body

I am not going to vote for this proposal and undo the good work of years. It is iniquitous. I have been with our committees for all orders from the President, to put into effect the plans of his administration and to carry out the recovery policies of the President. But this is not the policy of the President, he has not sent any request for the repeal of this law, and it is no part of the Democratic platform. It is not a part of the administration's recovery program. So, why do you do it?

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I yield to my old pal over there across the aisle.

Mr. TABER. Is the gentleman going to follow the orders of the administration on the bonus?

Mr. BLANTON. I expected that. No; I am not. That is something that I have pledged my constituents about before there was this administration; and when a Member is pledged to his constituents, he is free to do what he likes. For several years I have pledged my vote for the bonus. I am free in this House to do what I like and vote my honest sentiments on something that I think right and proper, or is detrimental to the best interests of the Government and detrimental to the people of the United States. [Applause.]

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Shannon].

Mr. SHANNON. Mr. Speaker, I have just listened to my good friend from Texas [Mr. Blanton]. I could not make out exactly whether his remarks, as to what the Senate will do to this bill, were meant as a threat or a promise. He said that when we got through here the Senate would take care of this measure. I have not heard any protest from him concerning what the Senate is doing to the Public Works relief bill that was run through here about 6 weeks ago in 2 or 3 hours' debate. The pending "pink slip" bill is a very serious measure. It should not be approved or disapproved by a threat of what the Senate will do or will not do concerning it. It reaches into the family circle. There never was a family well organized or properly taken care of where the man at the head did not give thought to the finances of the family. I do not speak for the plutocrats. I speak for the man whose income is five or ten thousand dollars a year. Let the amount of his earnings be known to those nearest and dearest to him, and they will destroy his savings. [Laughter.] If they have been getting along with a Ford, then, the minute they learn from a return of the income taxes that he has had a good year, although the record shows that for years he has been making two or three thousand dollars a year, if he suddenly makes five or ten thousand dollars for 1 year, then from the littlest member of the family up to the old girl herself, they will start out to buy automobiles, fur coats, and so forth, and no prudent head of a family living can take care of his family properly and safeguard their future if he does not practice a certain amount of deceit. [Laughter.]

Mr. KVALE. Mr. Speaker, I take it that the gentleman is speaking from personal experience.

Mr. SHANNON. I certainly do, because this income-publicity feature was a law at one time; and when it was put on the books and the publications were carried in our community, I remember quite distinctly when I got home every member of the family said, "Why, you had a great year last year, did you not?" [Laughter.]

Mr. DONDERO. And if they cannot spend it all in the family, then some relative will come along and get you to endorse a note.

Mr. SHANNON. That is correct, too. [Laughter.]
The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has expired.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Dunn].

Mr. DUNN of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I respect a man whether he agrees or disagrees with me if he is sincere and conscientious in what he says and does. I am going to vote against the repeal of this law because I believe if it is repealed it will be more of a detriment to the people of the United States than a benefit. If this law is repealed, it will be a very difficult task for the Government to check up on the men who make fabulous incomes. For example, we know there is an investigation going on in the Senate concerning munition makers. It would be difficult for the Federal Government to find out what the incomes of those munition makers were last year had it not been for the law which is now in existence. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I hope that the Members of the House will vote this bill down and keep the "pink slip" in existence.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Connery].

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Speaker, originally I voted to make these income taxes public. Today I am going to vote for the repeal of this law. [Applause.] My friend the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Dunn] calls attention to the fact that they are having an investigation in the Senate. Any information about the income tax which any congressional committee desires to possess it can get, and could get before this law was passed; and if it can be gotten easily by committees of Congress, after observing the results of tax-return publicity, I think that is sufficient. I was impressed by the statement of the gentleman from Indiana, who spoke about the small business man who is trying to get along having his larger competitor count the number of people coming out of the store, spying on him, trying to find out what his costs are, and by this "pink slip" we give this big competitor additional opportunity to put the small man out of business. I do not favor that. I am not worried about these returns being made public as long as Congress can get the facts. I should like to do away with this proposition of racketeers and speculators having an opportunity to go in and look over these income-tax lists and then start to work on the men who have made tax returns. My good friend the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Blanton] brought up the question about what is an administration bill and what is not an administration bill. I believe that it is the duty of the House of Representatives to legislate as set out in the Constitution of the United States and not to be drawing red herring across the trail by saying the President wants this or the President does not want that.

I refer specifically to two measures; for example, the Wagner-Connery labor-dispute bill and the Black-Connery 30-hour work week bill. The President has made no official statement to Congress on either of these bills, and I believe that this House should take up both of these bills and pass them in order to bring peace between labor and capital, and by shortening hours and increasing wages in industry bring back prosperity to the country by putting back to work 11,000,000 unemployed. So I say let us do our constitutional duties as legislators and not be passing the buck continually to the President. I am going to vote for the repeal of the "pink slip" statute because I believe it serves no useful purpose and leaves openings for many harmful purposes.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Massa-chusetts [Mr. Connery] has expired.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. White].

Mr. WHITE. Mr. Speaker, I believe we are all familiar with the fact that there have been a great many fraudulent things done in dealing with income taxes. I distinctly recall that the gentleman from New York, who is sponsoring this bill, pointed out in his speech made on the floor of this House some time ago that the Steel Trust was refunded $45,000,000 in 1927, which had been paid in as income tax in 1917. I think it is just as necessary to Government business that the income-tax returns should be made public as that the taxes collected as imposts or taxes and assessments on private property are made public. It is my understanding that public business is the citizen's business. We are dealing with public business, and I think the filling of income-tax returns is public business. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Idaho has expired.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. McFarlane].

WE SHOULD HAVE MORE, NOT LESS, PUBLICITY FOR INCOME-TAX RETURNS

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Speaker, the question is, Are we now going to march back down the hill and repeal the "pink slip" law that we enacted last session which requires limited publicity for income-tax returns? At the last session of Congress it was my duty as a member of the House Naval Affairs Subcommittee investigating naval-aircraft procurement to seek information on income-tax returns. After the committee had unanimously selected me to secure the income-tax information of all concerns selling the Navy equipment, I presented the facts to the President, who immediately dictated an Executive order authorizing me for the committee to examine all of these income-tax returns for the information of the committee. After securing the President's approval it took me more than 2 weeks to finally secure the Executive order and to get access to the tax records in the Internal Revenue Department. Every Member of this House is interested in knowing how far we, as Members of Congress, have authority to investigate these tax returns. There is not a Member of Congress who can go down to the Internal Revenue Bureau and check these income-tax returns, except by these methods:

First, by duly authorized resolution passed by one of the Houses of Congress permitting that or by a duly authorized committee of this House, the Ways and Means Committee, which has that privilege. It may also be done by Executive authority of the President. You, as a Member of Congress, cannot get this information. It is denied to you. I say to you frankly and candidly, we are making a backward step if we close the door and repeal the "pink slip" proposition, which would give to everybody who is interested, under proper safeguards of regulations issued by the Secretary of the Treasury, the right to receive this information. What harm can be done? Every one of us has filed our tax renditions, State, county, city, and school, in our own jurisdiction. These tax renditions are all open to the public, and rightly so. None of the greatly magnified injuries or supposed injuries we have heard here this afternoon have happened to anyone because of this information being made public; and these tax renditions contain full and complete information of all property owned—real, personal, and mixed; these renditions require a statement of all cash on hand as well as a complete inventory of all stocks, bonds, or other property owned. And all this information must be given under cath. No one has ever complained that this information should be kept secret, or that it being made public caused snooping, kidnaping, hijacking, or other crimes of racketeering.

Mr. BEITER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McFARLANE. I yield.

Mr. BEITER. The gentleman says he was a member of an investigating committee investigating for the Naval Affairs Committee last year?

Mr. McFARLANE. Yes.

Mr. BEITER. Would the information contained on the "pink slip" have given the gentleman the desired information? The gentleman knows, too, that the publicity may have a strong tendency to drive capital into tax-exempt bonds and out of taxable investments, which are so necessary to industrial development and increased employment. Such a tendency would further handicap business recovery and reduce the amount of Government income. Is it not true that income-tax returns are filed under oath with penalties for misstatement and that salaries paid by employers, dividends by corporations, and many other payments above a certain amount are reported to the Government, giving revenue officials comprehensive data for checking returns? I again ask the gentleman from Texas, Would not the information contained on the "pink slip" have given him the desired information?

Mr. McFARLANE. No; it would not, but it is a step in the right direction, and we should not repeal a law before we have even had a chance to observe the effect of its operation. Publicity on income taxes has proved beneficial in Wisconsin; it will prove so for the Nation. All of our taxrendition laws require publicity in our own local communities. All the complaints you have heard today as a basis for repealing this law would apply to all the other information made public by everyone for all taxes we pay at home. I know and you know, our people at home would not permit all our tax renditions at home to be kept secret—and they will not permit secrecy on this when they know the facts.

None of those objections are found to have any merit. It is all a smoke screen sent up by the sentinels of the Republic and other well-financed lobbyists' organizations that have been flooding Congress with unfair and untrue propaganda, trying to hide their ill-gotten gains, as recent investigations have shown the moneyed crowd have been doing.

Mr. MILLARD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McFARLANE. No. I have not the time. I am sorry. I think we should well consider this matter. We ought to give it a chance. We should not repeal the law before it has even had a chance to operate. These propagandists are recommending all income-tax payers not to file this "pink slip" and not give this information. They recommend that right now to all income-tax payers, in open violation of the law.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. McFarlane] has expired.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I yield one-half minute to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Hook].

Mr. HOOK. Mr. Speaker, I am against the repeal of the "pink slip" law. I have just had a letter from my district asking that I obtain from the Internal Revenue Department the income-tax returns of a large corporation for the reason that we want to find out for the State tax commission what their valuation would be. The answer was that we could not go back of the 1934 law. Therefore I am for the "pink slip" law. I am opposed to its repeal.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous ques-

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the adoption of the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 6359, to repeal certain provisions relating to publicity of certain statements of income.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 6359, with Mr. Nichols in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 55 (b) of the Revenue Act of 1934 relating to filing and making public certain income statements is repealed.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. Doughton] will control 30 minutes and the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. Bacharach] will control 30 minutes.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 6 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. Cullen].

Mr. CULLEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. CULLEN. Mr. Chairman, the discussion on the adoption of the rule, of course, was very interesting, and yet in all that discussion there was not any real information given in regard to the "pink slip" law. As a matter of fact, the "pink slip" amendment to the Internal Revenue Act of 1934 was adopted in conference with the Senators last year, as a sort of compromise principle for publicity, notwithstanding the fact that the law today gives you all the publicity that is necessary to have access to in regard to income-tax returns.

By repealing the "pink slip" provision of the income-tax law we are not repealing any publicity provision; what we are doing is taking out of the revenue act the "pink slip" portion of the law. What does the "pink slip" portion provide? It provides simply for the gross income, the deductions, and the tax payable. This does not give any information to anybody; hence the uselessness of it, hence the non-sensical thing of having it incorporated into the tax returns of the taxpayers of the country.

I am not standing before the Membership of this House today advocating evasion of tax returns, because in my experience on the Ways and Means Committee our job is to get all the returns we can into the Government from revenue-producing sources; and, as far as tax evasions are concerned, we plugged those holes up so tight in the 1934 Revenue Act that you could not get a pinhead into any further loopholes in the law. This was done as a result of investigations that were going on throughout the country at that particular time.

The Chairman [Mr. Doughton] of the Committee on Ways and Means worked sincerely and honestly with his colleagues on that committee to plug up these holes so that there would not be any evasion of taxation and so that nobody would be given a chance to get out from under in so far as the income-tax law was concerned. When the bill was in conference between the two Houses the Senate wanted a publicity clause; they were not satisfied with the publicity clause that was written into the law at that time but they wanted something to go out to the country suggesting to the people of the country that they were doing something a little better than what had been done heretofore. As a matter of fact we did not do that, because the "pink slip" is incorporated in your tax return and you have got to sign it and show what your gross income is, what your deductions were, and what tax was payable. That is only duplicating the information you give in your return. So, in the final analysis, we are not repealing any publicity clause because the Secretary of the Treasury, the Governor of any State, or any official of any State has access to these | individual taxpayers by the thousands are united in their returns on application.

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman

Mr. CULLEN. I yield.

Mr. McFARLANE. Is it not true that the only Members of Congress having direct access to the income-tax returns were the members of the Committee on Ways and Means; and that prior to the pink-slip law, by Executive order was the only way in which even Members of Congress could secure information concerning income-tax returns and that if we repeal this clause we will be right back in the situation we have been up to the present time?

Mr. CULLEN. The gentleman is entirely misinformed. Mr. McFARLANE. I will be very glad to be correctly

Mr. CULLEN. The Committee on Ways and Means has access to the returns, and the gentleman has by going to the Committee on Ways and Means, and a Senator has by going to the Finance Committee of the Senate, and the Secretary of the Treasury, and every Governor of every State in this Union, as well as other State officers, has access to the returns.

Mr. McFARLANE. I believe every Member of Congress ought to have that right; and I believe that local communities should have that right to see if these big taxpayers are paying their just part of the taxes.

Mr. CULLEN. Local communities, let me inform my dear friend, have access to the local tax rolls of the States. That is a matter of local purposes insofar as it relates to property. I am content with the publicity insofar as it relates to income-tax returns today without this pink slip, because in the final analysis there is very little suggestion of the confidential relations between the man who files an income tax and the Government itself.

Mr. McFARLANE. Why should they not have the same right to inspect income-tax returns they have as to all other tax records that are filed by the people?

Mr. CULLEN. They have the same right. Let me read the law.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 2 additional minutes.

Mr. CULLEN. Mr. Chairman, I cannot in 2 minutes read the statement I have here, but I will incorporate it all in

Mr. BLANTON. Why does not the gentleman use his time answering questions and insert the balance of his remarks in the RECORD? Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. CULLEN. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. There should be no difference between the rights and privileges of Members of Congress. Why should all the other Members of Congress not on the Ways and Means Committee have to go to that committee to get this information? As a matter of right they are entitled to it just as much as is the Ways and Means Committee.

Mr. CULLEN. Answering my dear friend from Texas, the Ways and Means Committee is the revenue-producing committee of this House; it must study this problem and must have access to the returns for the purpose of its study.

Mr. BLANTON. The prerogatives of every Member of Congress ought to be equal.

Mr. CULLEN. Mr. Chairman, I do not yield further.

Mr. Chairman and Members of the Committee, permit me to invite your support of the pending legislation to repeal certain provisions relative to publicity of income-tax returns. I think that the extent of the opposition to this publicity is greatly underestimated. An article in the New York Times of February 24, 1935, said the publicity provision "has precipitated what is probably the most ardent campaign for repeal of legislation since the drive to expunge the eighteenth amendment." Other newspapers of the country, political commentators, the United States Chamber of Commerce, local chambers of commerce, trade associations, and demands for repeal.

In my opinion the publicity provided by section 55 (b) of the Revenue Act of 1934 will not expose loopholes in the law or prevent tax evasions.

The law of 1926 will still remain which gives authority to the Secretary of the Treasury to the Ways and Means Committee of the House and the Finance Committee of the Senate as well as Governors and other officials of the States under rules promulgated by the President to have access to income-tax returns.

In that connection let me say that all the loopholes in the revenue act were well plugged in the 1934 act.

It has been definitely shown on a number of occasions that the information contained in the pink slips exposes nothing. No one, not even a trained accountant, or an internal-revenue investigator can tell from the facts disclosed by the pink slips whether a man has made a correct or honest return, or whether he has taken advantage of some loophole in the law. The things actually exposed by the pink slip are as follows: (1) Name and address of the taxpayer; (2) total gross income; (3) net income; (4) total deductions; (5) total credits for purpose of normal tax; and (6) tax payable.

Furthermore, the true way to discover the loopholes in the law and the weak points in the administration of the incometax law is not to set busybodies and snoopers at work to spy upon their neighbors and build charges of tax evasion upon suspicion, but to improve the administration of the revenue laws. All income-tax returns over a certain figure are now automatically audited by revenue agents, and field investigators examine the books of the taxpayers and have the privilege of interviewing the taxpayers themselves, their agents, or attorneys. Properly managed, this system will reveal accurately and swiftly any wrongs committed by taxpayers and loopholes in the law. I am certain that Government investigators, well-trained and experienced men, certainly are more to be trusted to bring to light the weaknesses in the revenue laws and the misdeeds of taxpayers than an army of gossips or selfish complaints of competitors which are generally based on misleading and meaningless information contained in the pink slips.

There is no doubt in my mind that the cost to the Government of making the pink-slip information available to public inspection will be enormous; and the cost of running down idle tales-suspicious complaints-will be equally great. Frankly, is it worth the cost to the Government during these times of storm and stress to be the instigator of so much ill-will, malice, and revenge in return for such valueless assistance from the public?

I am informed that the only State having an income-tax law which provides for publicity is Wisconsin, and in that State publicity has not helped to prevent tax evasion. I now quote from the 1930 report of the Wisconsin Tax Commission.

I would like to reiterate the principal arguments against publicity have not been answered. It will have the following very dangerous and harmful results:

First. Taxpayers will be subject to so-called "whispering campaigns", instigated by envious persons.

Second. Such publicity will result in a harvest of information for promoters and others, who will use it in harassing and harangueing taxpayers, both large and small.

Third. Competitors will have an unfair advantage in business transactions.

It is obvious from the facts stated that the American public gains no advantage or benefit from this publicity provision; it serves no useful purpose whatever; in short, it is an abomination; and I sincerely hope that the Congress will see the folly of the continuation of such publicity and repeal section 55 (b) of the Revenue Act of 1934.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from New York 2 additional minutes.

Mr. CULLEN. Mr. Chairman, speaking further with regard to the Wisconsin experience, a report of the Wisconsin Tax Commission was made to the Governor and legislature of that State by Edward L. Kelley, W. J. Conway, and Charles D. Rosa, commissioners, in 1930. I shall make one or two brief references to it. Under the head of public examination of returns these statements are made:

The repeal of the secrecy clause by the 1923 legislature opened all income-tax returns to public inspection. The repeal was urged and passed upon the supposition that public inspection would result in fewer incorrect returns and in discovering much unreported income. These expected results have not materialized in any degree in the administration of either the individual or the corporation returns.

A survey shows that public examination is almost wholly without any public motive or significance, but that advantage is taken of it to serve purely private and personal interests. Our filed returns are used by credit organizations which have men on hand almost constantly digging into the files. Returns are examined to prepare lists of prospective purchasers of stocks and bonds and for other soliciting and advertising purposes. A common use of returns is to secure information in negotiating for the purchase of business properties, and very frequent use is made of them in delving into the intimate concerns of business competitors. of business properties, and very frequent use is made of them in delving into the intimate concerns of business competitors. Many such examinations are by competitors from without the State who offer the Wisconsin business no such reciprocal information or advance. Income-tax files are also frequently used for information in court actions and many examinations are made out of curiosity, and at times for the sole purpose of annoying and harassing a reporting taxpayer.

Mr. BACHARACH. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from New York [Mr. Andrews].

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. Mr. Chairman, I merely want to place myself on record as being unqualifiedly in favor of repeal of the "pink slip" provision. As one of the gentleman from New York stated, it is apparent that the Bureau of Internal Revenue would favor repeal of this provision. I have a letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury in which it is stated that the Treasury will carry out both the letter and the spirit of whatever policy the Congress deems wise in relation to this matter and there is enclosed a brief history of section 55 (b) of the Revenue Act of 1934. It occurs to me the development of this legislation, as it is outlined in this communication, would be of interest to the Congress.

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to insert as a part of my remarks a history of section 55 (b) of the Revenue Act of 1934, which comes from the Treasury Department.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

The matter referred to is as follows:

HISTORY OF SECTION 55 (B), REVENUE ACT OF 1934

Section 55 (b) of the Revenue Act of 1934, reads as follows:
"Every person required to file an income return shall file with "Every person required to file an income return shall file with his return, upon a form prescribed by the Commissioner, a correct statement of the following items shown upon the return: (1) Name and address, (2) total gross income, (3) total deductions, (4) net income, (5) total credits against net income for purposes of normal tax, and (6) tax payable. In case of any failure to file with the return the statement required by this subsection, the collector shall prepare it from the return, and $5 shall be collected at the same time and in the same manner as amounts added to the tax. The amount so added to the tax shall be col-lected at the same time and in the same manner as amounts added under section 291. Such statements or copies thereof shall as soon as practicable be made available to public examination and inspection in such manner as the Commissioner, with the ap-proval of the Secretary, may determine, in the office of the collector with which they are filed, for a period of not less than 3 years from the date they are required to be filed."

Except for subsection (b), there is no substantial change in section 55 as respects publicity of income-tax returns over corresponding sections of prior revenue acts, beginning with the Revenue Act of 1926.

Subsection (b) was inserted in the Revenue Act of 1934 by the Subsection (b) was inserted in the Revenue Act of 1934 by the committee of conference (see Conference Report, House of Representatives, No. 1385, re amendment no. 38, at pp. 4 and 19). There was no similar provision in the House bill (H. R. 7835). However, the Senate did amend section 55 by providing for publicity of returns. The amendment, as offered by Senator La Follette and adopted by the Senate (see p. 6546 of the Congressional Record, 73d Cong.), provided:

"Returns made under this title upon which the tax has been determined by the Commissioner shall constitute public records and shall be open to public examination and inspection under rules and regulations promulgated by the Secretary and approved by the President."

by the President." The action taken by the conferees appears to have been in the nature of a compromise, which does not give publicity to income returns, but provides for publicity of the statement required to be filed with the return, which statement gives information as to the following items taken from the return: (1) Name and address, (2) total gross income, (3) total deductions, (4) net income, (5) total credits against net income for purposes of normal tax, and (6) tax

Under section 55 (b) the publicity of the statement required thereunder seems to be mandatory as far as the Treasury is concerned:

" * Such statements or copies thereof shall as soon as practicable be made available to public examination and inspection in such a manner as the Commissioner, with the approval of the Secretary, may determine, in the office of the collector with which they are filed, for a period of not less than 3 years from the date they are required to be filed."

Pursuant to section 55 (b) of the act, Treasury Decision 4500 was approved (Internal Revenue Bulletin, vol. XIII, no. 51, p. 2), in which form 1094 was prescribed as the form for the statement required by such action. It was also provided therein:

"Within a reasonable time after the income return is filed, the statement on form 1094, or a copy thereof, under such procedure as may be prescribed by the Commissioner, shall be available for public examination and inspection in the office of the collector for the district in which the return and statement were filed.'

Mr. BACHARACH. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. Taber].

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, the object of this bill is to repeal the publicity feature of the income-tax law; in other words, do away with the "pink slip" provision and inquisition into the ordinary fellow's income. There is not any good purpose served by the provision. As the gentleman from New York [Mr. Cullen] told us, the Congress can get all of the information it needs and it ought not to have the privilege of prying into peoples' income in order to publish it promiscuously. This is a serious embarrassment to the small merchant, to the professional man, and especially to the farmer who only occasionally has a good year when he might have to use anything of this kind. We ought to do away with this inquisition business. There is nothing to it as far as the rich are concerned, because we already have in New York State a tax of 60 percent, including the State and Federal income tax, on every single man who has an income above $100,000 a year. Where he has an income of over a million dollars it runs up to a tax of 75 percent. In the other States where they have no State income tax, it runs from 60 to 75 percent. That is all the tax that anybody ought to expect from those who have the large incomes and there is no useful purpose to be served. On the contrary it is just an annoyance and the "pink slip" provision ought to be repealed.

Mr. BACHARACH. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. WITHROW].

Mr. WITHROW. Mr. Chairman, whatever the outcome of the vote on the repeal of the publicity on Federal income-tax returns, it will have no effect upon the income taxpayers of the State of Wisconsin, because we of Wisconsin will continue to have the publicity feature in our State income-tax law. However, the State of Wisconsin has been mentioned several times in this argument, and it has been said that the income-tax law of the State of Wisconsin has been unfair and that it has not been successful.

Mr. Chairman, that is not true and is not borne out by the facts, notwithstanding that a purported report of the tax commission has been read to you. That subject will be covered by my colleague, the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. SAUTHOFFI, if he is fortunate enough to be allowed time to cover the matter.

The Legislature of the State of Wisconsin has met repeatedly since the enactment of the Wisconsin publicity feature and at every session has retained the publicity feature by an overwhelming majority.

Those who argue for the repeal of the publicity of Federal income-tax returns give two reasons. One is that it would encourage and aid racketeers, gangsters, kidnapers, and other criminals. The second is that it does not protect fourflushers who seek to palm themselves off as men of means.

Mr. Chairman, the argument that publicity of income-tax returns would encourage kidnaping is extremely ridiculous. In Wisconsin our income-tax returns have been available to the public for many years, still we have never had a case of kidnaping in our splendid State nor have we ever had any other crime in which the publicity of income-tax returns was a factor. Only a fool would believe that a criminal would submit to the registration and identification necessary in Wisconsin before he would be permitted to examine any income-tax return. Similar requirements for registration and identification are possible to the Secretary of the Treasury under the present Federal statute.

As to the second argument, I want to say that our honest, patriotic, taxpaying citizens should be entitled to protection from fourflushers who pose as men of means and seek to deceive their neighbors by subterfuge and trickery.

No honest individual or corporation with good credit has anything to fear from publicity of income-tax returns. Publicity can do them nothing but good. Who is it, then, who seeks to keep income-tax returns secret?

From all I can discover this repeal agitation has been generated almost entirely by an organization called the Sentinels of the Republic. The activities of these self-styled Sentinels of the Republic better qualify them for the title of "sentinels over the pocketbooks of J. P. Morgan, Andrew Mellon, and every other notorious tax evader." The Sentinels of the Republic boast that they were instrumental in defeating the child-labor amendment. Certainly such valorous service to humanity qualifies them to fight in favor of the tax-dodging special interest and against every honorable and desirable enterprise.

There is no reason why any public or Government business should be conducted on a secret basis. There is no more justification for secrecy in income-tax returns than there would be for secrecy in real-estate tax assessments.

Behind the cloak of the Sentinels of the Republic all tax dodgers and flourflushers have gathered to hide from their neighbors those facts which all are justly entitled to know. It will not help our honest taxpaying citizens to allow J. P. Morgan, Andrew Mellon, and others to continue their tax-evasion tactics.

It has been stated that Mr. Alvin Johnson, of the Wisconsin Tax Commission, believes the Wisconsin publicity features to be undesirable. In my opinion, Mr. Alvin Johnson is not in any way qualified to express an opinion on the success of any feature of the Wisconsin income-tax laws. Mr. Johnson is the youngest member of the commission. He has had very little experience on which to base his judgment, and his statements have been repudiated by the other two members of the commission in telegrams to Wisconsin Members of Congress.

The experience of the State of Wisconsin is referred to because Wisconsin is the only State which requires that income-tax returns be available to the public. The State of Wisconsin can be pointed to with pride as an example of many other laudable things. Let me remind you that in the State of Wisconsin, where the Sentinels of the Republic would have you believe crime is encouraged by income-tax publicity, we have one of the lowest crime rates in the Nation. The city of Milwaukee stands head and shoulders above other cities of the Nation in its freedom from crime, its splendid civic conditions, and civic pride and spirit.

In Wisconsin we believe in making it difficult for criminals and fourflushers to impose on honest citizens. The Wisconsin law providing for publicity on income-tax returns is one of the means by which we make it difficult for criminals and fourflushers to exist in Wisconsin.

It would be most wholesome if the Federal Government would follow the Wisconsin law, not only on income-tax publicity, but also on many other subjects. In my opinion, we have had enough of secrecy and trickery in the manipulations of the Federal Government. The people of this Nation will never get a new deal or a "square deal" as long as secrecy and double dealing is allowed to continue by the Federal Government. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Keller].

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield one-half minute to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. Withrow] to answer a question?

Mr. KELLER. Yes; I yield.

Mr. RANDOLPH. May I ask the gentleman from Wisconsin just what has the Wisconsin Tax Commission actually recommended?

Mr. WITHROW. That will be covered by a gentleman from the State of Wisconsin. As a matter of fact, that report is entirely in error. Two of the three Commissioners whose names appear on that report have sent telegrams to the effect that the publicity feature is entirely desirable, that it is not unfair and that it has been a success in the State of Wisconsin. If we get the opportunity—and by the way, we have not yet been allowed the time to do so, we will show that to be the case.

Mr. KELLER. I just want to call your attention to a few simple facts. We have never tried out the pink slip. The law was enacted last year. There has been no pink slip handled by the Government so far, unless we count those that have been sent in within the last few days.

I have here the ordinary form of income-tax return that we are all filling out, and I also have here the pink slip that gives the information required under section 55 (b) of the law of 1934.

We do not know what is going to happen to this. We do not know whether it is good or whether it is bad, and any man who stands up here and gives an opinion knows no more about it than I do when I express an opinion. I am going to give my opinion that none of us know anything about it until we try it out.

Apparently the gentlemen would have us believe that the kidnapers and racketeers have been conducting a bureau of information down here, using the information on pink slips when there are no pink slips yet in use. I presume that the kidnaping done heretofore has been done on the strength of the future coming in of this kidnaping pink slip. Quite remarkable to say the least, is it not? What foresight these child stealers must possess. I reckon the Secretary of the Treasury is expected by these same gullible souls to operate a special bureau to get these informative pink slips to our kidnapers, if Congress fails to take them away from him promptly.

It is ridiculous and it makes it appear ridiculous when we stand here and put forth such an argument as this. The gentleman from Wisconsin just told us the facts and I now want to call your attention to what would be necessary and I want you to get the law itself, and here it is:

Such statements or copies thereof shall, as soon as practicable, be made available to public examination and inspection in such manner as the Commissioner, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, may determine in the office of the collector in which they are filed for a period of not less than 3 years after they are required to be filed.

In other words, they will make just such rules as they please and when you are talking about rules to give information about income taxes, I want to call your attention to regulation no. 69, which I hold in my hand, about 200 pages of rules. Go down there, some of you men who are in Congress, and try to find out something about income taxes. This is the first regulation and then I hold here regulation no. 86, about 150 more pages of rules in relation to the present revenue law of 1934. It is a volume in itself, and it is entirely impossible for any man to go down there and get information at the present time, and when I called the Department to talk about this matter they said they were having a great deal of discussion about it, but had made up no opinion on how they would give out this information.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. KELLER. Yes; I yield.

Mr. BLANTON. If the racketeers are racketeering in fixing up these rules and regulations the Secretary of the Treasury and the Commissioner of Internal Revenue could require every racketeer to furnish his fingerprints, could they not?

Mr. KELLER. Yes; and anything else they might require.

Mr. BLANTON. That would be a good way to get a few | of them caught.

Mr. KELLER. It would be the best thing in the world if you could get a racketeer in that way, because you could throw him in jail before anyone could say "scat." The truth of the matter is that this is not a matter of protecting us against racketeers or kidnapers. The truth of the matter is the big rich of this country are coming back into making a lot of money again, and I am not blaming them for it-I am not against the rich men, I am not against wealth-God knows I am for it, 100 times more than we now have. But I believe in dividing it differently.

I want to call attention to the fact that, as a matter of history, during the entire period from 1861 to 1871, our first income-tax law, the income-tax lists were printed and published, giving full information. The corporation tax law of August 5, 1909 (36 Stat. 11) provided specifically that * * shall be filed in the Office of the "the returns * Commissioner of Internal Revenue, and shall constitute public records and shall be open to inspection as such." And this provision for publicity of income-tax returns was observed. It will be observed that the payers of income tax have become finicky about publicity of income-tax returns in recent years. And be it further observed that during this touchy period the Government has been cheated and defrauded out of enough income tax due under the law to have taken care of all our deficits since the panic of 1929 to the present time. I called attention to this entire matter in an address on the floor of this House on the last day of the last session of the Seventy-second Congress.

It is universal knowledge, and is always noted in the newspapers, that during the first part of each year the stock markets are so rigged as to openly defraud the Government of the income taxes due it.

Yet this House of Representatives is rushing madly to prevent its Members and everybody else from getting the facts in relation to income taxes.

Publicity-pitiless publicity-is, always has been, and always will be the one best method of preventing fraud in governmental matters. The tender solicitude of this body for those who do not want anybody to know what their taxes are, to me is an astonishing matter. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. BACHARACH. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. MILLARD].

Mr. MILLARD. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Illinois a few minutes ago said that this is a Republican measure. The gentleman from Texas made the same statement.

Mr. KELLER. I did not say so. No; Mr. SABATH, of Illinois did.

Mr. MILLARD. I should like to inquire of these gentlemen when Bob Doughton, John O'Connor, Tom Cullen, and the rest of the Democratic members of the Ways and Means Committee became Republicans?

This is not a Republican measure, but one absolutely nonpartisan. If you believe this is a vicious act, as I believe, vote against it. If you believe, as I believe, it is not fair, it is not American, it is unjust, vote against it.

Now, just a word more about the State of Wisconsin. I have a letter here dated March 1, 1935—not 1930—referring to this report, and I will leave out the first part because I have only 1 minute left:

Experience has taught us this is not a true adjunct to the disclosure of any additional income and has become a source of nuisance by credit agencies, bond salesmen, and business com-petitors. We have had no instances where public inspection has brought forth unreported incomes, and although a matter of conjecture, we believe that it has retarded the making of complete returns. It has worked to direct disadvantage so far as the Federal Government is concerned. Our income-tax returns being open to public inspection, it has become the custom of the Federal Government is concerned. eral Government, instead of making separate audits, to accept the audits made by the Tax Commission and upon the basis of these audits of the State of Wisconsin, they can file a lien under our law on its own behalf superseding our lien.

Twenty-nine States have some form of income tax-States have no "pink slip" provision-Wisconsin has. Are the 28 States wrong and Wisconsin right?

I am strongly in favor of the repeal of this provision. Mr. CANNON of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLARD. Yes.

Mr. CANNON of Wisconsin. I wish to say to the gentleman that regardless of the recommendation that has been made by the Wisconsin Tax Commission, that law will not

Mr. MILLARD. That may be true.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. Sauthoff].

Mr. SAUTHOFF. Mr. Chairman, I want to correct an erroneous impression created about Wisconsin by reading two telegrams relating to the Wisconsin situation. This telegram, dated March 8, 1935, is a strong expression in favor of publicity of income taxes, and is from a man who has been 14 years on the Commission. It is as follows:

MADISON, WIS., March 8.

Hon. HARRY SAUTHOFF.

Hon. Harry Sauthoff,

Congressman, Washington, D. C.:

Cannot express myself too strongly in favor of publicity of income-tax returns. Fourteen years on the commission, 2 of them while a secrecy statute was in force, have convinced me that secrecy makes administrative bodies star-chamber courts. Under secrecy graft, racketeering, crookedness, favoritism, and incompetence can run riot without effective check. Publicity aids materially in effective administration and contributes in making the tax equitable and acceptable to a very large majority of taxthe tax equitable and acceptable to a very large majority of tax-payers. No reason can be advanced for secrecy of the processes imposing an income tax which cannot also with equal weight be advanced in favor of secrecy of the processes imposing any other tax. To make all tax processes secret would mean that other tax. To make all tax processes secret would mean that democracy has gone far in surrendering its most effective and salutary sovereign power.

CHARLES D. ROSA, Member Wisconsin Tax Commission.

[Applause.] Here is another:

Madison, Wis., March 11.

Congressman Harry Sauthoff,

Congressman Harry Sauthoff,

House of Representatives:

Am decidedly in favor of publicity on income-tax returns. Wisconsin, a pioneer in such legislation, has demonstrated from experience under publicity law, as well as secrecy law, that best results attained under publicity law. Am convinced secrecy clause will never be restored here. Light of publicity strongly contributes to filing of honest returns. Recent disclosures before United States Senate committees indicate abuses of secrecy clauses. If publicity permitted to any extent same should be carefully safe-guarded in the public interest. Reciprocal examination of State guarded in the public interest. Reciprocal examination of State and Federal tax returns by proper representatives of both govern-ments should not be restricted. See also section 7120, Wisconsin Statutes.

W. J. CONWAY, Chairman Wisconsin Tax Commission.

I want to add one more thing, that we repealed the secret clause in 1923 and we collected $9,000,000 of back taxes as soon as we repealed it. That is the answer. [Applause.]

What is the history of the United States in respect to publicity of income-tax returns? Here is an editorial written by Horace Greely in the New York Tribune of May 24, 1866:

The Evening Post has a Washington dispatch which says: "The Committee on Ways and Means have agreed to an amendment of the tax bill providing that lists of income shall not be published nor furnished for publication, but they shall be open to private inspection at the office of the collector."

We would like to believe this untrue. We believe that publicity given to the returns of income submitted by individuals to licity given to the returns of income submitted by individuals to tax gatherers has already put millions of dollars in the Treasury and gone far toward equalizing the payments of the income tax by rogues with that of honest men and saved thousands from being imposed upon and swindled by false pretenses of solvency and wealth made on purpose to incur debts preordained never to be paid. The knave who sought credit on assumption of wealth belied by their returns of incomes, of course, hate publicity given to those returns, but why should any honest man seek to pass for any more (or less) than he is worth? any more (or less) than he is worth?

On January 26, 1865, the New York Tribune said:

We learn that the publishing of the list of income-tax payers in this city, against which there has been so much absurd outcry, is likely to prove beneficial to the revenues as well as the consciences of some of our best citizens. Already, as we understand, considerable sums have been returned to the assessors and paid to the collectors by persons who have discovered errors in their original strumes of incomes since the number of the list formed to returns of incomes since the publication of the lists referred to, and assessors have received valuable information in reference to the incomes of some gentlemen who should but have not yet amended their returns.

A vigorous and determined fight to prohibit the publicity of income-tax returns was waged until at last the jugglers and dodgers of income taxes finally succeeded in keeping secret whatever sums they saw fit to place in their blanks.

The distinguished minority leader [Mr. Snell] is a member of the Republican Party. Let me read to the members of that party what one of their greatest and ablest leaders had to say, the late Benjamin Harrison. No one on either side of the aisle can deny that President Harrison was a great lawyer and a keen analyst of his times, a student of public affairs, and a statesman of rare ability. On February 22, 1898, President Harrison said:

We live in a time of great agitation, of a war of clashing thoughts and interests. There is a feeling that some men are handicapped; that the race is sold; that the old and much-vaunted equality of opportunity and of right has been submerged. More bitter and threatening things are being said and written against accumulated property and corporate power than ever before. It is said that, more and more, small men, small stores, and small factories are being thrown upon the shore as financial drift; that the pursuit of cheapness has reached a stage where only enormous combinations of capital, doing an enormous business are sure of returns.

stores, and small factories are being thrown upon the shore as financial drift; that the pursuit of cheapness has reached a stage where only enormous combinations of capital, doing an enormous business, are sure of returns.

The plea of business privacy has been driven too hard. If for mere statistical purposes we may ask the head of the family whether there are any idiots in his household and enforce an answer by court process, we may surely, for revenue purposes, require a detailed list of his securities.

It is not only wrong but it is unsafe to make a show in our homes and on the street that is not made in the tax return.

I have selected these various quotations, Mr. Chairman, from the address of the late Robert M. La Follette, delivered in the Senate of the United States on September 29, 1921. No man can say that Benjamin Harrison was a radical. When he warned us of our folly 35 years ago, how much truer do his words ring today.

There is another point which I wish to point out. In Wisconsin property taxes run from 65 to 75 percent of the total tax. Income taxes run about 18 percent. The records of the properties and their worth of the 70 percent are open, why not the records of the 18 percent? Is there anything sacred about them that their taxes must be immune to the vulgar gaze or are they so sensitive that they shrink from the publicity? Had it not been for senatorial investigations we should never have known that Mitchell, Mellon, and Morgan were tax dodgers. Let us have more light instead of less.

Another point, Mr. Chairman, has been advanced, to the effect that gangsters, racketeers, and kidnapers would look up returns and get valuable information as to where to strike. The best answer to that argument is the city of Milwaukee. It has a population, in round numbers, of 600,000. It is the thirteenth city in size in the United States. It is the seventh in commercial importance. Its annual industrial output amounts to one and one-quarter billions of dollars, yet its crime record is the lowest in the United States. There has been no kidnaping in Milwaukee, to my knowledge. If I am in error, I trust my colleagues will correct me. Where is there a more law-abiding State than Wisconsin, and yet we have had publicity of incometax returns since 1923. So you see that argument is not sound.

It is said that only 5 percent of the population of the United States pays any income tax. Why should these names and amounts be kept secret? We seem very deeply concerned about their being thrust into the limelight. How about the 20,000,000 that are on relief? Is anyone concerned about their distress, their misery, and want, being in the limelight? How about the bread line? No one seems to feel sorry that those in the bread line stand out in full view of passers-by.

As the late Senator La Follette said, taxes are public records, and therefore the public should have access to them. The records of the probate court are public. Anyone can look up an estate, read the testator's will, examine the inventory of what he left behind, and read the final judgment to see what became of the property. That is not secret. Neither is the criminal court record secret, nor the divorce court. You can read it all if you wish, because it is a public record. You can go to the city clerk's office and examine the city tax rolls, and you can go to the county courthouse and examine the rolls of every farmer in the county. Why not income-tax returns? This is one of the sacred cows that is taboo. You of lesser clay must not touch the sacred cow. She is beyond the pale of ordinary mortals and stands apart.

Mr. BACHARACH. Mr. Chairman, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. Bolleau].

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that the two telegrams read by my colleague [Mr. Sauthoff] pretty well answered the question as to whether or not publicity of tax returns is working out satisfactorily in the State of Wisconsin.

I want to call attention to the fact that the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL] said in his remarks a few moments ago that the report of the tax commissioner of the State of Wisconsin and the opinion of the tax commissioner pretty well settled this matter. He quoted from a report made October 15, 1930.

I call attention to the fact that the two telegrams which have just been read by my colleague were sent by members who were on the tax commission at that time and are still on that commission, and who know more about this matter than anyone else in the State of Wisconsin, and they are in favor of publicity.

Mr. MILLARD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. BOILEAU. Oh, my time is too short.

Mr. MILLARD. The letter that I received is from the third man on the commission.

Mr. BOILEAU. Yes; a gentleman who was appointed just a couple of years ago by an administration that was—

Mr. TERRY. Reactionary?

Mr. BOILEAU. The gentleman here suggests the word "reactionary."

Mr. MILLARD. Democratic?

Mr. BOILEAU. Yes; and that is one of the reasons why we have a Progressive Party in Wisconsin today. I say further that the report dated October 15, 1930, was just about 30 days after that administration had been repudiated in the September primaries. Since that time two different administrations, a Progressive administration and a Democratic administration, have actually ignored that report and have made no change in the law. That report was made while the State was under the control of a conservative Republican administration. There have been two administrations since that time, and they have not changed the law. There is not a political leader in the State of Wisconsin today who dare go on the stump and say he favors secrecy of public business or secrecy of income-tax returns. The State of Wisconsin has been the political laboratory of this country for many years, and many a piece of legislation that we have enacted into law in Wisconsin that were called "radical and unsound" by the opposition have since been enacted as the law in most of the other States, and I predict it will not be long before the American people will make the demand so clear that we will have a Federal law providing for publicity of income-tax returns. This "pink slip" provision is far from being as good a law as we have in Wisconsin.

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOILEAU. No; I am sorry. It has a few features that could be improved, but the worst of all is that it does not give enough publicity; and, instead of repealing the little concession that the people have gotten through the years from the Congress, we ought to amend it to encompass the provisions that were acted upon favorably in the Senate last year, the original La Follette amendment, that would give real publicity; that would give all the story; that would let the people of the country know something about who is paying taxes, and why the Morgans and some of the rest of them have been able to avoid paying any taxes whatsoever. The people have the right to examine public records and to know who are paying their share of the taxes.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. DOCKWEILER].

Mr. DOCKWEILER. Mr. Chairman, I rise in favor of the enactment of this bill. As I recall the purpose of the Revenue Act of 1933, and I was a Member when that was passed, it was to avoid in the future the possibility of rich men evading the payment of an income tax. That law has taken care of that situation entirely in my opinion. It was a question of the state of the law, which allowed people to have incomes and not pay income taxes. That the Democratic Party in the last Congress took care of amply. However, we attached to that law this piece of legislation that permits anybody to investigate what his neighbor's income is. There is nothing unusual about the fact that your neighbor cannot find out what you are doing in a private way. That is fundamental with the Anglo-Saxon philosophy of government. So far as public servants are concerned, the public has a right to know everything about them, but so far as the private citizen is concerned, he is entitled to cherish his own private affairs in his own family circle. If you go to the Patent Office today and try to find out what your neighbor has succeeded in getting from the Patent Office in the way of letters patent, you cannot find it out. If you go to the Department of Justice and try to find out something about an investigation of your neighbor, you cannot find it, and rightly so. You cannot go to the State Department when it is undertaking an investigation of a private citizen or a corporation in this country and find out any facts they have before them. There is nothing unusual about keeping from the public certain information.

The arguments that I have heard this afternoon are arguments that pertain to a man who has an income. Mr. Jones does not need to know the extent of his neighbors' income during the past year. But let us look at it in this way: Suppose he has no income, and he has a big business and he has credit established at his bank. He does not want the fact disclosed overnight that he has not make a profit in the last year because all those credit facilities would be withdrawn from him.

Mr. Chairman, I favor the repeal of this law.

Mr. BACHARACH. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. KVALE].

Mr. KVALE. Mr. Chairman, in view of the temper of the House I believe any expression of opposition to this bill is perhaps without any particular purpose, but I cannot permit this measure to be rushed through in this hysterical manner without voicing my protest.

I came here as a young man and served my father as his secretary, if I may be pardoned that personal note. I sat in the gallery and watched this fight year after year for the retention of the very principle of publicity of incometax returns.

I saw it reach its culmination a year or two ago in the startling and shocking revelations of many of the evasions and subterfuges that the rich of this land were resorting to to escape the payment of income tax. That was the real reason for writing this provision into the law.

I am willing to grant that this present "pink slip" system is not fair. It pillories the honest taxpayer in many instances and permits the dishonest taxpayer to escape any criticism. It does not achieve in full the purposes for which it was intended. It should be amended and corrected, but this certainly is not the manner in which to do it.

If no one else proposes to do so, I shall at the proper time offer a motion to recommit this measure to the Committee on Ways and Means, in order that we may correct some of the abuses and injustices, but in order that we may not throw this entire principle out of the legislative window, so to speak, at a time when the country can ill afford to believe that we are sheltering and pampering the wealthy and those who are able to assume their burdens of government, instead of doing as we ought to do, reach out and assess upon them a more proportionate share of the cost of government. I hope, for that reason, that we can give serious attention to some motion to recommit this measure and that the committee can give it further study.

Mr. CANNON of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. KVALE. I yield.

Mr. CANNON of Wisconsin. Does not the gentleman believe that the wealthy of this Nation, even to a man, stand in favor of the repeal of this bill?

Mr. KVALE. I would say perhaps that is true, but that does not give us any reason to believe it is proper to do so in this manner and at this time. I can see reason for the criticisms leveled against the "pink slip." I can see the reason why a mere statement of the gross income, the deductions, and the tax which the taxpayer must pay, is not sufficient information by which anybody can base a logical estimate on a man's taxability or the honesty of his return.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. KVALE] has expired.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Maine [Mr. Hamlin].

Mr. HAMLIN. Mr. Chairman, I wish to put myself on record as favoring the bill which the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. Doughton] has brought in against this "pink slip", which it seems to me should be colored yellow. [Applause.]

We are having too much publicity already. I do not know but what perhaps I may be gesturing toward the Senate now, but I think we are having too much publicity. I believe that this administration, in which I believe more than I ever did before, is moving toward private men running their own business in their own way, and that is the principal reason why I am opposed to the "pink slip." [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Maine has expired.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. Buck].

Mr. BUCK. Mr. Chairman, the protests I have been receiving from California against this "pink slip" law, as it now stands are not inspired by any propagandists. They are inspired by people who will have to have the bare facts of their income, or their lack of it, the deductions they claim, without any explanation of what those deductions are, and the tax they pay, revealed to the eyes of any inquisitor.

This morning I received a letter from a farmer in my district urging the repeal of section 55 (b), and I wondered why I had received it, because for several years past he has not been in a position to pay any income tax. When I realized that while he had no net income and so no tax to pay, his gross income was sufficient so that he would have to file a return, and therefore his present pitiable condition would be revealed to his associates and to his compatitors.

Mr. Chairman, this is one of the most unfair pieces of paper that has ever been submitted for any man to fill out for his competitors, and the public generally, to gaze upon. It requires the taxpayer to list the gross income; on the second line the deductions, but please remember these deductions are those allowed by the income-tax law and do not include many items of real expense.

If you have paid a Federal income tax the previous year, you cannot deduct that on your income-tax return, so that it would not show up on your "pink slip." If you have paid taxes for local benefits, they would not be deducted on your income-tax return, and so would not show on your "pink slip"; yet they are real items of expense.

If you have had living expenses in excess of the exemptions allowed by the income-tax law, however modest they be—and I do not think anyone claims our exemptions are overgenerous to the head of a family—they will not show up. So in numerous other matters of expense which are paid out, but which are never reported in the income-tax return because they cannot legally be "deducted" and never will show up in this "pink slip." It is an untrue picture.

If such a picture ever goes to the public, the farmer who, as the gentleman from Ohio pointed out, has to fill out an individual statement for each of his farms, for example, would never be understood by the public. In most cases he has sustained losses for years past. If by virtue of our recovery program and returning prosperity he has actually made a profit in 1934, it is probably being used to pay up old debts. Yet every high-pressure salesman will be sure to attack his pocketbook because of the report of what has been his gross income in 1934. Under no circumstances at the present time can the farmer have a fair picture rendered by this "pink slip" return.

Mr. Chairman, it is not only the farmer or the small man in business whom I desire to picture to you who will have an unfair situation revealed, but it is the doctor who may one year receive a great deal of income and the next year may have no paying patients and therefore may be thought to be losing ground. Young men who are just starting out in life will be embarrassed in any undertakings they may start on, because their small income will be revealed to those who are older and who are their competitors.

Mr. BEITER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUCK. I yield.

Mr. BEITER. The gentleman knows it is absolutely impossible to arrive at a fair judgment morally, much less legally, without detailed information of the deductions and credits which are hidden by the "pink slips."

Mr. BUCK. I thank the gentleman for his contribution. The whole proposal is unfair. This is one of the most unfair pieces of legislation that were ever adopted in Congress, because an untrue and impossible picture of what the actual situation of a man's real income is, is all that will be gathered.

Mr. DONDERO. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUCK. I yield.

Mr. DONDERO. Can anyone take the floor of this House and show what good purpose this serves to the Government?

Mr. BUCK. I have listened to the debate all afternoon and I have not heard anyone show that yet.

Mr. DONDERO. And the gentleman has not heard one?

Mr. BUCK. I have not, sir.

In conclusion, I wish to say that those who have been hearing from home have not been hearing from a mass of propagandists, but from the tiller of the soil and the small business men. Not one of the letters I have received has been from any man of wealth. Your salary and my salary as Members of Congress are known to the public. So are most of the salaries paid by large corporations. In fact, under the new securities legislation they are all known. But it is the man just getting back on his feet who is afraid of prying snoopers who has written to you and to me to have this law repealed. I only wish it were possible to secure a unanimous vote this afternoon in favor of repeal.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California [Mr. Buck] has expired.

Mr. BACHARACH. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. Pierce].

Mr. PIERCE. Mr. Chairman, I am certainly in favor of leaving the "pink slip" law, though it is a mighty poor substitute for real publicity. I remember a few years ago a play on the American stage built around the plot of a young man who bet all he had that he would truthfully answer every question asked him for 24 hours. The first question asked him was: "Did you tell the truth in your last income-tax report?"

"No," came his reply. "Did you?" I often think of it. No one can estimate the many evasions in income-tax reports.

In 1923 I forced the enactment of an income-tax law in the State of Oregon. I was Governor then; and as chairman of the commission which enforced that law I saw its good effect. When passed no one estimated that we would be able to collect $1,000,000. The first year, however, we collected $3,000,000; and that year's experience as the chairman of the tax commission convinced me that pitiless publicity was necessary to bring about the filing of reasonably honest returns. Nothing the wrongdoer fears more than publicity. Think of the salaries and subsidies taken by the officers of great companies like the Steel Trust, the tobacco company, and similar companies. If there had been pitiless publicity of income-tax returns such practices would have come to light long before they did. We are on too dangerous ground as a Nation to be putting in time on this matter here in Congress with 11,000,000 people today out of work. All that is asked for in the "pink slip" is a statement that any honest man or firm should be willing to make. What can the harm be? Nothing. Had real publicity been given to all tax matters there would have been millions more paid in each year. Had we had publicity the big boys would have been able to draw back out of the United States Treasury but a small part of the four thousand million that they did filch out of the Treasury of the United States in a period of less than 10 years. If you want a really honest incometax law, give publicity, yes, real publicity, to the tax returns.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. BACHARACH. Mr. Chairman, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GIFFORD].

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I made a few remarks on this subject some weeks ago, and I then reminded the House that on reading the debates carried on at the time when the constitutional amendment providing for the income tax was first presented, I learned that assurances were given the public that the income tax would never be applied except in time of war or dire distress; and secondly, that publicity would not be tolerated. In 1912, when the matter came before the Massachusetts Legislature, of which I was then a member, and one of a strong Republican majority, the fight was led, of course, by the Democrats, it being a Democratic measure. We were assured by those Democratic speakers in no uncertain terms that it would never be permitted to become an annoyance, so far as publicity was concerned. I very well remember that debate, since I was exceedingly interested in the whole subject. We had this publicity feature in 1924. Are we to be forgetful of its effect at that

One of the two largest Boston newspapers took great delight in publishing the information, and the first names presented to the view of the public were those of the State's 16 Congressmen. Of course, I, like others, probably enjoyed reading about the incomes of my own colleagues, but I did not get so much pleasure in seeing the publication of my own. I can speak freely today, because the only thing I feel ashamed of this year in relation to the "pink slip" is the little amount I shall be called upon to pay this year: I do not want it to be seen. I am not afraid of racketeers or salesmen, but do not wish to see it published, nevertheless. Is our memory lacking that in 1924, when it was tried out, it properly enraged the public to such a degree that it was speedily repealed? Let us allow that lonesome political party in Wisconsin, whose members here have never been either Democratic or Republican, as we now see it, to pursue this inquisitorial procedure if they desire. They engage in much criticism of both the major parties, and I congratulate them on having this sort of an issue.

Mr. KVALE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GIFFORD. I am glad to yield.

Mr. KVALE. Will the gentleman include the Farmer-Labor Party also?

Mr. GIFFORD. I know but little about that party. [Laughter.] I am sure the members of that party are all very delightful personalities, but they are mistaken in judgment in their attempt to force this publicity. How do you enjoy having the local newspapers in your county go to the registry of deeds and look up your mortgages and each week parade to public view the fact of the mortgage you have placed upon your property? Some newspapers regard this as news, but the vast majority of newspapers do not consider it quite ethical to publish this sort of information. Those who have good reason to know and who ought to know can go to the registry of deeds and find out, and those officials who really need to know about your income-tax returns, the proper officials of the Government, will still and passed upon the supposition that public inspection would have access to these returns: that should be all the pubhave access to these returns; that should be all the publicity necessary, all to which the taxpayer should be subjected.

Mr. KVALE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. GIFFORD. I yield.

Mr. KVALE. Does the gentleman want to discontinue the practice of publishing property-tax returns in the city and the country weeklies throughout the United States?

Mr. GIFFORD. I do not mind that; everyone knows the rate of tax; everyone knows what the property is worth; it is not comparable at all with income publicity. The extent to which some person is successful or unsuccessful is not necessarily the business of his neighbors.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. BACHARACH. Mr. Chairman, I yield the balance of my time to my colleague on the committee, the gentleman from New York [Mr. REED].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York is recognized for 4 minutes.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Chairman, I think one of the serious mistakes we make in this legislative body is not to be guided by past experience. This is not the first time this experiment of tax publicity has been tried and found

Back in the days of the Civil War, Congress at the urgent request of some of the leading newspapers of the country put a publicity feature into the then existing income-tax law. After it had been in operation for a short time there developed a rising tide of public indignation against the provision. The same newspapers that previously advocated the publicity feature pointed out the futility and the danger of the publicity clause, and they urged its repeal. Men writing of that period said that undoubtedly one of the chief contributing factors to the repeal of the income-tax law itself was the publicity given to the tax returns. The law was finally repealed. Never since that time until 1924 has this controversial question been brought to the floor of this House.

The publicity feature was again tried in 1924. After an opportunity had been had to see how it worked, the Ways and Means Committee made a recommendation that it be repealed, giving as a reason in its report that it had served no useful purpose. The Senate Finance Committee made a similar recommendation. The result was that the provision was repealed.

Mr. Chairman, much has been said here about the Wisconsin law and its publicity feature. The Members of this House are too experienced not to know just exactly what has happened. I believe in laying the cards on the table. The Wisconsin law was put on the statute books in 1923. After 7 years' experience with that law the tax commissioners made a report in which they condemned the publicity provision. They gave, apparently, their best judgment as to how that law had worked in order that the world might read and know what their experience had been. Why should the commissioners in Wisconsin now reverse their position?

What great power or influence suddenly inspired these men who held their political jobs at the sufferance of some great political power to wire in at this last minute repudiating their solemn statements as to how the law had operated in the State of Wisconsin? They have reversed themselves now, but they had 7 years' experience with the operation of the law when they condemned it in 1930. Certainly no group of intelligent men with long experience could have condemned the publicity feature more than they did in that annual report. There is no mystery as to why they have frantically sent wires to be read here on the floor of the

Let me quote from the report made by the tax commissioners of Wisconsin before political pressure was applied:

[Excerpt from report of the Wisconsin Tax Commission, 1930] PUBLIC EXAMINATION OF RETURNS

The repeal of the secreey clause by the 1923 legislature opened all income-tax returns to public inspection. The repeal was urged ported income. These expected results have not materialized in any degree in the administration of either the individual or the corporation returns. There have been no instances where public inspection has brought forth unreported income, and as to its anticipated effect in producing more correct income returns, experience has shown that it has had the opposite effect. Knowing that the text returns are a transfer or the individual of the corporation of the individual of the corporation returns the individual of the corporation returns the individual of the individual of the corporation returns the individual of the individual of the corporation returns. rience has shown that it has had the opposite effect. Knowing that their returns are open to inspection, taxpayers consolidate and condense their reports to make them as unintelligible as possible to those inspecting them, thus making their auditing by the commission or by the income-tax assessor more arduous, necessitating additional work, considerably more correspondence, and consequent expense and delay.

In most of the income-tax assessors' offices public examination of returns is infrequent and of little consequence, but in five or returns is infrequent and of little consequence, but in five or of returns is infrequent and of little consequence, but in five or six of such offices and in the office of the tax commission such examination is attended by considerable annoyance and expense. A survey shows that public examination is almost wholly without any public motive or significance, but that advantage is taken of it to serve purely private and personal interests. Our filed returns are used by credit organizations, which have men on hand almost constantly digging into the files. Returns are examined to prepare lists of prospective purchases of stocks and bonds and for other soliciting and advertising purposes. A common use of returns is to secure information in negotiating for the purchase of business properties, and very frequent use is made of them in of business properties, and very frequent use is made of them in delving into the intimate concerns of business competitors. Many such examinations are by competitors from without the State who offer the Wisconsin business no such reciprocal information or advantage. Income-tax files are also frequently used for information in court actions, and many examinations are made out of curiosity and at times for the sole purpose of annoying and curiosity and at times for the sole purpose of annoying and harassing a reporting taxpayer.

In the Milwaukee office the time of an employee for 2 hours of every day is taken in waiting upon persons who are using the files for private purposes. In the period between November 1, 1929, and September 22, 1930, over 3,000 files were examined in the office of the tax commission. The crowded filing room is frequently occupied by six or seven persons going through the files and crowding the desk room of regular employees. The entire time of one clerk is employed in serving these purely personal investigators, and at times other clerks are called upon to assist her.

The indiscriminate examination of returns is not only an imposition upon the reporting taxpayers but is also an imposition upon the State and upon its tax-administration officers and employees. the State and upon its tax-administration officers and employees. The commission does not favor any secrecy of returns that would bar examination in the public interest, but it does suggest that the promiscuous misuse of files for private purposes to the great inconvenience and annoyance of officials and the expense of the State ought to be discontinued. No other State or country having such files in custody permits such misuse of them. These state ought to be discontinued. No other state or country having such files in custody permits such misuse of them. These files contain the record of the lifeblood and register the pulse of the person and private business affairs of our own taxpayers and should be accessible only when the public interest is

Mr. REED of New York. Let us examine the Wisconsin situation further. The publicity feature of the Wisconsin statute was so obnoxious because of its abuse that an act was passed by the legislature in 1933 making it a crime to commercialize the information obtained under the publicity provision. I insert the 1933 Wisconsin act:

CHAPTER 449

An act to create section 71.20 of the statutes, relating to circulating for revenue information relative to income-tax returns or income taxes, and providing a penalty

The people of the State of Wisconsin, represented in senate

The people of the State of Wisconsin, represented in senate and assembly, do enact as follows:

Section 1. A new section is added to the statutes to read:

"71.20. Circulation for revenue of information from income-tax returns: No person shall divulge or circulate for revenue or offer to obtain, divulge, or circulate for compensation any information derived from an income-tax return: Provided, That this shall not be construed to prohibit publication by any newspaper of information derived from income-tax returns for purposes of argument nor to prohibit any public speaker from referring to such information to prohibit any public speaker from referring to such informations. tion in any address. Any person violating the provisions of this subsection shall, upon conviction, be punished by a fine of not less than $100 nor more than $500 or by imprisonment in the county jail for not less than 1 month nor more than 6 months, or by both such fine and imprisonment." or by both such fine and imprisonment.

SEC. 2. This act shall take effect upon passage and publication, Approved July 25, 1933. Published July 26, 1933.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, I introduced the bill which is now under consideration by the committee some days ago in response to what I conceived to be an overwhelming demand, and I may say an insistent demand, from a very large majority of the taxpayers of this country, the people upon whom we must rely for the money with which to support our Government. Mr. Chairman, none of us has a monopoly on patriotism, and I am sure none of us would want to claim a monopoly on wisdom, although to listen to some of the remarks here today by those opposing this bill you would be constrained to believe that all knowledge and all wisdom abide in the brains of those who oppose this legislation.

The gentleman from Wisconsin, for whom I have a very high and profound respect, speaks of the hysteria of those of us who favor this legislation. To the gentleman may I say that I will not talk about hysteria, but all of the emotionalism that has been manifested here today has been upon the part of those who have opposed this legislation.

Mr. Chairman, there is one man in this country who has had more to do with the origin and enactment of the income-tax law than any other one man. May I call the attention of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Blanton] to the fact that that man is the Honorable Cordell Hull, now Secretary of State? He has written a long opinion with reference to this matter, and if anyone in this country is qualified to express an intelligent opinion it would be Secretary Hull. I quote from a letter from him stating that the publicity provision in the income-tax return has not justified itself. I quote from him:

What is, or at least should be, the main ground on which the what is, or at least should be, the main ground on which the policy of publicity of tax returns is urged, is to secure fuller and more accurate returns of taxable income. The controlling purpose of any tax statute designed to secure a large revenue yield should be such satisfactory and effective administration as would secure the maximum yield, and no other plan or purpose should be allowed materially to hamper or handicap the law operating to this

I have investigated and reached my individual conclusion with respect to the proposed general publicity of income-tax returns, solely from the standpoint of the most satisfactory and successful administration of the income-tax law and the securing of the largest possible yield of revenue. Viewed from this standpoint I have been unable to bring myself to the conclusion that publicity would secure the most desirable revenue results. I may first refer to the experience of some governments which have tried out income taxation for the longest periods. England after 75 years' experience with her present income-tax law retains her policy of come taxation for the longest periods. England after 75 years' experience with her present income-tax law retains her policy of keeping the results secret. There is no demand from any source, so far as I am advised, for publicity of English income-tax returns. Holland retains secrecy under her income-tax law, which has been in operation some 25 years. Denmark pursues the same policy of secrecy under her income-tax law, in operation for 14 years; Austria pursues the same policy under her law, enacted some 75 years ago; Canada's recent income-tax law contains the same provision; France in her recent law has some form of secrecy, the exact nature and extent of which I am not definitely informed. This policy of these different countries, after many years' trial is the exact nature and extent of which I am not definitely informed. This policy of these different countries, after many years' trial, is controlled entirely by the question of the most satisfactory administration and the largest revenue yield of their respective laws. They evidently have not felt justified in allowing considerations of collateral or other Government policies, however strongly and plausibly urged, to effect a change of this policy.

Let us now turn to the United States. The first Civil War income-tax acts did not prohibit publicity. The Commissioner of Internal Revenue early recommended a provision of secrecy to Congress. This was disregarded, however, until the Income Tax Act of 1870 was enacted. A lengthy debate on this act occurred in Congress, during which Garfield referred to one feature of the income tax "which has made it very odious in many parts of the country", namely, publicity of returns. The outcome of the disincome tax "which has made it very odious in many parts of the country", namely, publicity of returns. The outcome of the discussion was the insertion of a provision in section 11 requiring secrecy, and it became a law. The view on which this provision was inserted was that it would meet the complaint that incometax laws are inquisitorial and also that publicity often discloses secret trade processes, methods, etc., even though ever so legitimate, and that therefore a taxpayer would be more encouraged to make a full and complete return when he had the assurance that his trade secrets, processes, etc., would not be exposed to his competitors.

his trade secrets, processes, etc., would not be exposed to his competitors.

The strength, stability, and perpetuity of the income tax is based on the rather fixed opinion among the people generally that in both theory and practice it accomplishes relative fairness among the taxpayers more accurately than any other tax method thus far devised. Both now and after the war it is extremely vital that a tax method productive of a larger revenue than any other should be safeguarded by the most effective means. Whatever may be thought or said to the contrary, there is a phase of human nature which, entirely willing to make full and complete return of income and pay taxes accordingly in the belief that all taxpayers are receiving equitable treatment, is at the same time utterly adverse to the idea of general publicity of private business methods and private business affairs. * *

I strongly favor any and every kind of publicity needed with respect to all phases of our financial, commercial, and industrial activities, but I think it unwise in the light of almost universal experience in the past to discredit or break down the income-tax system or seriously jeopardize it by utilizing that law instead of some separate law or laws for publicity purposes.

There is only one precedent, and that is the example of Wisconsin, in which State neither of the major parties is good enough, and they have found it necessary there to start a new party. That is the only place on the face of the earth where they have a similar publicity feature, so far as I am advised.

Mr. Chairman, there is no good that can come from the publicity provision. They talk about the racketeer. They say there is no danger insofar as the racketeer and criminal is concerned. Perhaps there is not the slightest danger, but many good people in the country are lying awake at night in constant dread and constant fear of that criminal element, and anything that may be of assistance to that bunch should not be placed upon the statute books of the Nation.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOUGHTON. I yield to the gentleman from Texas. Mr. BLANTON. The Republicans are consistent; they have always been against it, but are the Democrats consistent when we have been fighting for this provision for years and now that we have it passed we want to repeal it?

Mr. DOUGHTON. Let me say to my good friend that this is not a measure about which we should raise party questions or draw party lines. The gentleman spoke about the administration. I will compare records with him for consistency in supporting the administration since the day it took control. I may say to him now, anybody who has a better record than I have in supporting the President can criticize me, but no man whose record is not as consistent as mine has any right to criticize me.

I shall not take the time to read the law relating to publicity of income-tax returns which will remain in effect and in force after the repeal of the "pink slip" section, but shall ask unanimous consent to insert the same in the Record at this point. These provisions of law, in my opinion, provide the fullest publicity for all legitimate purposes.

The question of publicity of income-tax returns has long been in controversy, and during the history of income taxation in this country such publicity has been tried on numerous occasions and was subsequently repealed as it failed not only to meet with the approval of the American people but also failed to be of any appreciable benefit to the Treasury. [Applause.]

Provisions of law relating to publicity of income-tax returns remaining in force after the repeal of "pink slip"—Revenue Act of 1926.

RETURNS TO BE PUBLIC RECORDS

SEC. 257. (a) Returns upon which the tax has been determined by the Commissioner shall constitute public records; but, except as hereinafter provided in this section and section 1203, they shall be open to inspection only upon order of the President and under rules and regulations prescribed by the Secretary and approved by the President. Whenever a return is open to the inspection of any person a certified copy thereof shall, upon request, be furnished to such person under rules and regulations prescribed by the Commissioner with the approval of the Secretary. The Commissioner may prescribe a reasonable fee for furnishing such copy.

(b) (1) The Secretary and any officer or employee of the Treas-

REVENUE ACT OF 1934

Section 55. Publicity of returns: (a) Returns made under this title shall be open to inspection in the same manner, to the same extent, and subject to the same provisions of law, including pen-alties, as returns made under title II of the Revenue Act of 1926; and all returns made under this act shall constitute public records and shall be open to public examination and inspection to such extent as shall be authorized in rules and regulations promulgated by the President.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all Members who have spoken on the bill in Committee may have 5 legislative days within which to extend their remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 55 (b) of the Revenue Act of 1934, relating to filing and making public certain income state-

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment. The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Sabath: Strike out the word "repealed" in line 5 and insert the following:

"(b) Every person required to file an income return shall file "(b) Every person required to file an income return shall file with his return, upon a form prescribed by the Commissioner, a correct statement of the following items shown upon the return:

(1) Name and address; (2) total gross income; (3) total deductions; (4) net income; (5) total credits against net income for purposes of normal tax; and (6) tax payable.

"In case of any failure to file with the return the statement required by this subsection, the collector shall prepare it from the return and $5 shall be added to the tax. The amount so added to the tax shall be collected at the same time and in the same manner as amounts added under section 291. Such statements manner as amounts added under section 291. Such statements or copies thereof shall, as soon as practicable, be made available to examination and inspection to duly elected and sworn assessors or legally authorized tax-levying officials in their respective counties, in such manner as the Commissioner, with the approval of the Secretary, may determine, in the office of the collector with which they are filed, for a period of not less than 3 years from the date they are required to be filed."

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order the amendment is not germane to the bill.

Mr. SABATH. Does the Chair wish me to argue the point of order?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Illinois on the point of order.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, this simply amends the section we are trying to repeal.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the point of order. It will take less time to vote it down than to argue the point of order.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, because I fear that after the strong argument that has been made by the Chairman of the Ways and Means Committee [Mr. Doughton], the House may make a mistake and repeal this section, I have offered this amendment. It provides that instead of making these returns available to the general public, which many gentlemen are apprehensive may create conditions that will be detrimental to the taxpayers, that the returns be available to the assessors in the respective counties or of aiding them in the performance of their duties with respect to levying and collecting taxes.

I fear, Mr. Chairman, we are unduly alarmed from the number of letters we have all received. This is purely propaganda. A lobby has been working in Washington now for several years, and it is growing more and more powerful, and, I regret to say, more influential. If some of you gentlemen had had experience with these lobbyists as well as the propaganda going through the mails, you would not pay so much attention to them and would follow the dictates of your conscience and the dictates of your heart. I repeat, never before has there been such well-organized propaganda or such a lobby as there has been at this ses-They are here in full force to repeal this section, to kill the bonus bill, and to kill any piece of legislation that is beneficial and helpful to the masses of our Nation.

Mr. BEITER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. SABATH. In a moment.

I feel that if this amendment prevails we will eliminate the fear in the hearts of the taxpayers and at the same time will make it possible for the county officials, having as their sworn duty the collection of taxes, to ascertain whether these men have evaded county and State taxes as they have been guilty of in years gone by.

I think this is an amendment in the right direction and notwithstanding the strong appeal of my friend, the Chairman of the Ways and Means Committee, I hope my amendment will be adopted, because I think it is in the best interests of all and will not in any way injure the honest taxpayers in whom some of my friends are so much interested at this time.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I offer a substitute for the gentleman's amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Substitute amendment offered by Mr. Blanton for the amendment offered by Mr. Sabath: Page 1, line 5, after the word "repealed", strike out the period and add the following:

"Respecting all income statements embracing incomes under $25,000 per annum."

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, every Democrat who has earnestly worked during the last 15 years and fought for an income-tax publicity, and finally last year, over the protests and votes of the entire Republican Party on the other side of the aisle, against placing this in our law, is now asked to turn completely around and reverse his position.

When he votes to repeal it he now ought to get up and admit that he made a mistake last year and has been mistaken throughout the years. He ought to admit that he did wrong last year in allowing the law to be passed last year, when he does this somersault.

If we had had such a provision in our law during the last few years you would not find now your Government, our Government, trying to collect from Andrew W. Mellon, former Secretary of the Treasury, and former Ambassador to Great Britain, an income tax amounting to $3,000,000. of which Mr. Mellon tried to evade payment and is now trying to defraud the Government out of. Whenever you make public business secret, and public business confidential. you will have such frauds. If we had had such a law you would not find such a prince of criminal lawyers as Frank J. Hogan, now defending Andrew W. Mellon against the United States Government, throwing everything in the way possible that a skillful lawyer can do to prevent the Government from collecting the $3,000,000 evaded income that Mr. Mellon owes the United States. Naturally, when Mr. Mellon was called on to disgorge, he employed the shrewdest criminal lawyer in the United States, who, it is reported, received a million dollars for defending Doheny and Sinclair for stealing millions of dollars from the Government in the Teapot Dome scandal—the same expert criminal lawyer, Frank J. Hogan, who defended McCracken, who allowed important evidence wanted by the Government to be destroyed when he refused to testify before the Senate committee, although, thank God, he was forced by the Supreme Court to serve his sentence, the same skillful Frank J. Hogan who other officials having the power to levy taxes for the purpose | for several weeks, when I was trying to remove Commissioner

Frederick A. Fenning, sat across the table defending Colonel | Fenning for weeks, doing everything he could to hamper us, and throwing everything in the way possible to keep us from removing Commissioner Fenning, who had been robbing several hundred shell-shocked soldiers of the World War he had gotten into his clutches, and was holding them behind bars in an insane asylum. This is the same great criminal lawyer, Frank J. Hogan, who defended the former Secretary of the Interior, Albert B. Fall, when he accepted a bribe of $100,000 paid to him in cash out of a little black satchel, and succeeded in getting for his client only 1 year in the

Just as soon as Andrew W. Mellon employed this great criminal lawyer, I knew that he was guilty and that he justly owed this $3,000,000 to the Government. I say to you that the Republicans have been consistent. They have always opposed this publicity. They want such matters kept secret. They want incomes to be confidential.

This is not a Republican measure. The Republicans have resisted every effort which has been made from this side of the aisle to pass such a law. This pink-slip law was not passed by their administration. It was not passed by the Harding administration, it was not passed by the Coolidge administration, nor the Hoover administration, because they would not permit it. They had the evidence of many frauds but they would not permit it. We Democrats passed it in this administration last year. I am not one of those who is going to turn tail now and run because a little millionaire propaganda comes here demanding it. I am not one of those who, because the big newspapers asserted yesterday and this morning that it has been arranged to vote repeal today, must carry out their mandate and cast my vote to repeal it. I am not going to follow their lead when it is against the interest of the American people. This is a step

I wish I could follow the gentleman from North Carolina, the chairman of the committee [Mr. Doughton], one of the finest characters in this House. [Applause.] I have followed him on some important fights that he made, fighting to keep the sales tax from being put on the shoulders of the people. and I wish I could follow him now. Every time any one of the Cabinet officers gets up and says that he wants so-andso-he is not the administration, he is not one who can tell Congress what to do. If you begin to follow Cabinet officers you may find yourself going in 10 different directions, as there are 10 of them, and they do not always agree. Because one Cabinet officer has suggested this bill is no reason for passing it when it is not for the best interest of the American people. It took us Democrats a long time to get this law passed, and if we now repeal it we may never pass it again. Look at the vote tomorrow and you will see a solid Republican vote for repeal. I am going to vote against all these Republicans

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment in the nature of a substitute.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Ohio that there is a substitute already pending, so that the gentleman's amendment is not now in order.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, I hope both the substitute of the gentleman from Texas and the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois will be voted down. We are told to beware of the Greeks bearing gifts. There is no purpose in these amendments other than to kill the bill. Those who are opposed to the bill, of course, can consistently support the amendments. It means nothing except to retain the present law and to further open the returns to all local taxing authorities. That is all it means. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. Blanton] refers to the fact that he does not follow Cabinet officers, and intimates that the statement I made with reference to Secretary Hull indicated some interference by a Cabinet officer. That did not come here in connection with this bill. That was a statement made by him years a profound study of it. He is not interfering. No head of any department in this Government has interfered or said anything about this one way or the other. This is not a partisan measure. The Secretary of the Treasury said that it is not a matter for him to comment upon at all. He simply said that he was there to enforce the law. There has been no effort to coerce or influence the House, so far as this matter is concerned.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman vield?

Mr. DOUGHTON. Yes.

Mr. McCORMACK. I also call attention to the fact that anyone who voted for the repeal of this provision is not inconsistent with his vote of last year, because last year it was a conference report with 15 or 20 different items, and we did not have a direct vote on whether or not we wanted this provision in the revenue act.

Mr. DOUGHTON. That is very true. The House did not put this provision in the act of last year. It came in as a compromise. The publicity amendment was put on in the other body, and in conference this "pink slip" provision was agreed to. If this is repealed, all the publicity necessary is still on the statute books. The Ways and Means Committee of the House and the Finance Committee of the Senate and the taxing bodies of the various States, under the direction of the governors of the States, all have access to the returns.

Mr. GILCHRIST. Is there any provision in the present law whereby the authorities of any State can examine the tax returns except the incomes of corporations?

Mr. DOUGHTON. Certainly; the President issued an Executive order in 1932 placing individual returns in the same category as corporations.

Mr. GILCHRIST. Has the President issued the order? Mr. DOUGHTON. He issued it December 13, 1932. Gentlemen need not be uneasy about that. I ask for a vote.

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment. I for one am not worried by fears of being in the minority today. Experience and observation have taught me that if I am in the minority today, and in the right, eventually I shall be in the majority, and the minority today will ultimately be in the minority if it is wrong. I have received literally hundreds of letters urging this repeal, and I say to you that every one of them is an inspired letter, inspired propaganda, written by those who favor a government of the rich, by the rich, and for the rich. The amendment that I was offering is to exempt all incomes of less than $9,000. Why make it $9,000? I say to you that none of you gentlemen are supporting repeal because it affects you.

I assume that you are all perfectly willing as I am to have the whole damned world know what my income is. When you vote for repeal for whom are you voting and what are you voting for? You are voting for secrecy of income-tax returns of the rich of this country. No man or woman with an income of $10,000 a year, of $15,000, or $20,000, or $25,000 a year need ask for the arm of protection of this Government to save them from the racketeers and the kidnapers. It is the men and women with incomes of $50,000 a year, $100,000 a year, and $1,000,000 a year that need worry, and lose sleep because of the kidnapers and the racketeers. There is a simple remedy for those fellows. All you need to do is to scale down every fortune to $1,000,000. All you need to do is to limit every income unless it be that of the President of the United States to $50,000 a year, and these fellows will not need to lose any more sleep. It is merely another attempt of the plutocrats. The plutocrats of the country are revolting against the existing order of things. They are fighting what they call "the new inquisition." They ask me if I want the inquisitorial publicity law repealed. They boldly state that minorities get their way against larger numbers because they demand what they want and make a fuss about it"; and acting upon this theory the "pink slip" and silk-stockago upon the subject of publicity of income-tax returns after | inged minority of the plutocrats wants the publicity feature of income-tax returns repealed. I call your attention to this. | mines and have captured control of the relief rolls. They These modern descendants all emanate from the ancient mythical god named Pluto.

Mr. DIES. That is water. [Laughter.]

Mr. TRUAX. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. Dies] said, "That is water." Now, that is true. There is a so-called "mineral water" named, after that god of wealth, Pluto Water. Pluto Water [laughter] is intended as a purge. So you take Pluto Water for a physical purge, and the plutocrats take you for a financial purge. In either event you are cleaned through and through physically and financially. [Laughter and applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TRUAX] has expired.

Mr. HOOK. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word of the Sabath amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I happen to be one of those animals they call "a new Member of the House." I happen to be one of those who has been fighting ever since I came here to be recognized to say at least something in behalf of the constituents I represent at home. This is the first time I have been able to get here, and it was through the parliamentary guidance of my good friend, Tom Blanton. [Applause.]

Now, let me tell you something about what happened with regard to your "pink slip" affair. I am in favor of this pink slip." I am going to tell you just why. I am not only in favor of the "pink slip" but I am in favor of the principles advocated by the gentleman from Wisconsin and the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. Kvale]. We have in our territory corporations known as "mining companies", operating copper mines and iron mines. Those corporations have gone down into the depths of the earth and taken the riches out of that territory and have left nothing behind but a hole in the ground and a bunch of steel. Now they come forth and say they are going to close their mines, and they want a reduction in the valuation of those mines. The city commission and the city attorneys from that territory wrote me and asked me to get the income-tax returns of those corporations, and I attempted to do it. I took it up with the Internal Revenue Department, and what was their answer? Their answer was, "If you hold 1 percent of the stock of that corporation or if you are an officer in the corporation, you can get those returns, but you cannot get them otherwise unless you were on a special congressional committee investigating the income.'

Now, what we wanted were the honest facts so that we could go out and properly evaluate those mines, properly bring to the forefront the very things that those mining companies have been doing for so many years. They have been stealing the constituents of my district blind and have thrown about half of them on the relief rolls, and now they are trying to cover up behind that rule of secrecy. I say that what we can do in the open we should not be afraid of. When you do something in secrecy there is something you are hiding. What are people afraid of? Are they afraid to let anybody know what their business is? Oh, they talk about "racketeers", and they talk about "snoopers." I would like to know of bigger racketeers than those who have been hiding behind the secrecy of their incomes. They are the biggest racketeers this country has known.

I know in my district that the General Motors Corporations has purchased timberlands with money that should have been paid to the Federal Government as income tax. In other words, they evaded the income tax by claiming exemption by way of investment in timberlands, so that this corporation now holds timber that by right belongs to the Federal Government. I believe an investigation of that condition would probably bring out the true facts, and when those true facts are known, the General Motors timberlands will probably be included in the forest purchase project recently approved for Gogebic and Ontonagon Counties without cost to the Government.

I would like to know who are bigger racketeers than those Republicans who have taken charge of the relief rolls in my district, those Republicans who are in charge of these went down the line and played politics with human misery and suffering.

I would like to know bigger racketeers than those who have made our relief organizations a political football. I am introducing a resolution to investigate the conditions prevailing in the relief organization of the twelfth district of Michigan, and especially the actions of Walter S. Berry, director of relief for the Upper Peninsula of Michigan, whom I charge with playing politics in that organization, which is against the principles of President Roosevelt and the Democratic Party. It was the intention of our glorious leader that all should be entitled to relief regardless of race, creed, color, or political affiliation. I emphasize that any man who will play politics with the relief rolls is the worst type of racketeer.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Hook] has expired.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on the pending amendment and all amendments thereto close in 5 minutes.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. BOYLAN. Mr. Chairman, I did not care to interpose myself in this debate, but I must take exception to the remarks made by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Blanton]. The gentleman from Texas has accused a leader of the District Bar, Mr. Frank J. Hogan, a lawyer of the highest standing in this community, not only here but throughout the entire country, not by direct charge, but by innuendos of various character. The gentleman well knows, as a member of the bar, that if he has anything against the professional character of Mr. Hogan, there is a time and place where he can present any charges he may have.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield to me, since he mentioned my name?

Mr. BOYLAN. I will in a moment. The gentleman knows that Frank J. Hogan is not entitled to the privileges of this floor; that he cannot come in here and reply to the innuendos of the gentleman. It is unfair to take advantage of a man of his type and character and standing in this community by uttering such remarks.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield to me now?

Mr. BOYLAN. I yield.

Mr. BLANTON. So far as this great criminal lawyer is concerned, he and I sit down together at banquets when high functions are held in Washington. [Laughter and applause.] What did I say about him that was not fair? Is he not a great criminal lawyer? Did he not represent Sinclair? Did he not represent Doheny? Did he not represent Albert Fall? Did he not represent MacCracken? Did he not represent Commissioner Fenning? Did he not get big fees for that? I was simply advertising him. [Laughter.]

Mr. BOYLAN. Let me ask the gentleman if it is to be held against him because of his great professional skill, and his ability, that he was able to secure these men as clients?

Mr. BLANTON. Why, certainly not. Every statement I made about him was the truth, and based on the record facts.

Mr. BOYLAN. Is there any reason in the world then why his name should be held up to this House in a manner suggesting that he was guilty of some sort of impropriety in the practice of his profession? [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the substitute amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Blanton] to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr.

Mr. BLANTON. In order that the Members of the House may know what they are voting on, I ask that the substitute amendment be again reported.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

The Clerk again read the substitute amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. Dunn of Pennsylvania) there were—ayes 25, noes 175.

So the substitute amendment was rejected.

B

The CHAIRMAN. The question recurs on the amendment | offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Sabath].

The amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule the Committee rises.

The Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. Nichols, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill H. R. 6359, pursuant to House Resolution 155, had reported the same back to the House.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule the previous question is ordered.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed, read a third time, and was read the third time.

Mr. KVALE. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion to recommit. The SPEAKER. Is the gentleman opposed to the bill? Mr. KVALE. I am.

The Clerk read as follows:

A motion to recommit offered by Mr. Kvale: Mr. Kvale moves to recommit the bill H. R. 6359, to repeal certain provisions relating to publicity of certain statements of income, to the Committee on Ways and Means.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion to re-

The motion to recommit was rejected.

The SPEAKER. The question is upon the passage of the bill.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, on the passage of the bill I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 301, nays 99, answered "present" 1, not voting 31, as follows:

Mr. McLEOD changed his vote from "nay" to "yea."

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded. A motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

PUBLICITY OF INCOME-TAX REPORTS

Mr. GRAY of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GRAY of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, human experience has shown that publicity is a cure and remedy for many of our political evils and affairs of peace and public life.

If Members of Congress or State legislators are not discharging their duty or misrepresenting their constituents, the remedy is to throw on the light and make their record public.

If public officials are misappropriating the taxes and funds of the people, the cure is to throw on the light of publicity and to show how and where the public funds are being expended.

If taxpayers are evading the payment of their just share of taxes and leaving others to bear an unjust burden, throw on the light of publicity and show the evading taxpayers and the amount of taxes that are being evaded and relieve the honest taxpayers from more than their just portion and

Good and just men will not object to have their acts and record stand out before the world in the glare of the noonday sun, and no man who wishes to comply with the law and pay his just portion of taxes should claim the right to remain in the shadows in the darkness of nighttime, covered and concealed with that kind of people.

When the new administration of Congress convened in March 1933, Members found an empty Treasury, a Treasury without funds for the payment of their own salaries, without funds for the payment of public employees and without funds for the payment of pensions, which had been adjusted and allowed them by law.

And to meet the emergency found existing, and to save the Nation from bankruptcy, the economy bill was passed reducing salaries of Members of Congress, reducing the wages of Federal employees and cutting down soldiers' pensions, closing hospitals to patients, reducing the public service and throwing many people on State charity and benevolence.

After the passage of the economy act, reducing salaries, pensions, and wages, a Senate committee was appointed to investigate tax-income payments and after months of examining witnesses and compelling the production of books and papers, it was found that Morgan and Mellon and the great financiers of the country had paid no income taxes in 1930, that they had paid none in 1931, and had paid no taxes in 1932

On such information obtained, suits were instituted against these financiers to compel them to pay their income taxes, and a law was passed, now referred to as the "pink slip" law, to compel publicity of income-tax payments and prevent a repetition of income-tax defaults.

These facts were all explained to the people and assurances were given that the way had been barred to escape the further nonpayment of income taxes by the law we had passed.

It is difficult to explain why we should make a distinction between taxes assessed upon tangible and intangible property and compel publicity for the one and exempt publicity for the other.

I supported this law in good faith. I explained the reason and necessity for the economy act, and assured the people that this failure of the payment of income taxes could not be repeated under this statute, and the one consistent course remaining for me is to uphold and defend the law that was claimed imperative and necessary to protect the honest taxpayers of the country from being compelled to bear an unjust and unequal burden of taxes.

THE PINK SLIP

Mr. HAMLIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HAMLIN. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD on H. R. 6359, relative to the so-called pink slip" income-return data, I desire to insert these letters from constituents of mine of the First District.

This bill will, in my judgment, repeal a feature of the Revenue Act of 1934 which has never been tried out, but is undemocratic, unworkable, unduly officious, and should and, in my judgment, will be repealed by this bill. I have done as I told my people in Maine I would do-speak and vote against the "pink slip."

PORTLAND, MAINE, February 4, 1935.

Hon. Simon M. Hamlin,

United States Representative, Washington, D. C.

My DEAR REPRESENTATIVE HAMLIN: As a business man in Portland, I wish to enter a protest against the intended plan of making public figures on the amount of tax and income filed by individuals to the Internal Revenue Department. I refer, of course, to form 1094 of the Treasury Department Revenue Act of 1934.

This plan opens a broad avenue through which can tread the host of parasites who depend on fleecing those who, for the most part, work for their living. Picture a kidnaper's paradise where he can demand $50,000 instead of a paltry $10,000. Visualize the army of solicitors, both legal and illegal, who can annoy and persecute a citizen who, through his fortune or perhaps his misfor-tune, pays an income tax in the support of the Government. Consider the radical or communistic element who desire returns far greater than can be measured by their own efforts, but who in general can break down the morale and peace through embittered implications. Is it right and fair that all measures of success and effort be scrutinized by unscrupulous people?

I feel that my protest coincides with that of many who have given this matter careful thought. I therefore ask your serious consideration in voting against the act.

Yours truly.

M. K. Cox, 92 Baxter Boulevard.

GARLAND MANUFACTURING CO., Saco, Maine, January 23, 1935.

Hon. SIMON HAMLIN,

House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: We wish to enter a protest against part 5, section 55, of the 1934 Revenue Act as it pertains to publicity of returns. We believe this article is entirely un-American, and we do not see how it can possibly produce any of the results which the Government expects of it in revealing more unpaid taxes.

In addition to this focal it is an expression to the principle.

In addition to this fact it is an encroachment upon the private affairs of every citizen and opens to kidnapers, racketeers, and sucker lists, and all such rackets a wonderful opportunity to further their work.

We understand that there is a very general opposition to this section of the law, and we sincerely hope that you can help to have this section repealed before the present tax returns are entered.

Yours truly,

C. P. GARLAND, Treasurer.

PEPPERELL MANUFACTURING CO. Boston, Mass., February 19, 1935.

Hon. SIMON M. HAMLIN.

House Office Building, Washington, D. C.
DEAR MR. HAMLIN: We earnestly protest against section 55 (b) of the Revenue Act of 1934 whereunder citizens are compelled to give written statements of their private incomes to be posted for public scrutiny. These public records will show an incomplete, unfair, a temporary, and consequently untrue picture of citizens' financial status. The required publication will serve the ends of competitors, business enemies, private enemies, and blackmailers of citizens whose private means are thus publicly and periodically disclosed, and will expose citizens to be victimized by criminal racketeers, kidnapers, and gangs of the underworld. This mischlevous law was passed hastily by a former Congress without thought of its fearful consequences, and we trust that you are opposed to it. We respectfully request your aid and best efforts in securing relief from such an outrageous invasion of personal and business privacy.

Respectfully yours.

R. H. LEONARD, President.

Hon. SIMON HAMLIN,

House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.
DEAR ME. HAMLIN: With this I enclose my protest to the law making public income-tax returns as provided under section 55 of the Revenue Act of 1934.

My vocabulary is not extensive enough to properly attempt to register the feeling which I have toward this law and the injustice which it will do to the taxpayers of this country. I consider it an unwarranted intrusion upon the rights of the taxpayers and without benefit in any degree to anybody. I earnestly advocate the repeal of the law. Yours very truly,

S. W. GOODWIN.

SOUTH PORTLAND, MAINE, March 5, 1935.

Hon, SIMON HAMLIN,

United States House of Representatives, Washington, D. C. DEAR SIR: Pardon me for taking your time, but this "pink slip" outrage is too much to endure silently.

I protest against this outrageous invasion of my right of privacy granted to me by the Constitution of the United States of America.

The Supreme Court has passed upon this right in several cases before it confirming this right.

I make an honest return upon my small income, and I protest strongly against the snooping of any Paul Pry who may wish to pry into my private affairs for no good purpose.

The American people are honest as a whole, and the sins of the few should not be used as a menace to the rest of us, or this injustice allowed in order to satisfy the vanity and spleen of a demagogic Senator. Please vote to repeal this act.

Very truly yours,

(Miss) ADA F. GARDINER.

OUR INLAND WATERWAYS

Mr. BEITER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BEITER. Mr. Speaker, inland-water carriage, which has been so extensively developed as an integral part of the transportation systems of Europe, and which was once generally used by us, is again coming into its own in our country. Modernization of river transport and of interchange facilities and the improvement and standardization of river channels insure low-cost transportation, which agriculture, commerce, and industry so sorely need. With the completion of the upper Mississippi 9-foot channel project, a great trunk inland-waterways system has been established in this country from Pittsburgh on the East to Kansas City and beyond on the West, from the port of New Orleans in the South up the great Mississippi, dividing into two branches, one through the Illinois to Chicago and into the "American Mediterranean", the Great Lakes, and the other up the mother stream into the heart of the Midwest to the Twin Cities. No other nation or continent has been so endowed by kindly Providence with a great network of Nature's own transportation highways.

The possibilities of inland-water transportation in this country are graphically indicated by its development in Europe. While methods of boat or barge operation may vary from the standardized practices developing in this country today, the great lesson we can learn from Europe is that water transportation is inherently cheap and can be coordinated with other forms as an integral part of a great national transportation system.

Therefore, let us briefly survey the use of rivers as a means of transportation in Europe. The western part of Europe has about 15,000 miles of rivers and canals, nearly all intercommunicated. In Germany alone 9,000 miles are now profitably navigated by as small as 1,000-ton barges. The sea is reached from all the streams-for example, from the Danube to the Black Sea, from the Rhine to the Mediterranean; the English Channel is reached from the Seine, the North Sea from Rotterdam. A connecting canal is now being completed whereby the Rhine will be able to make deliveries over inland waterways with every port in Germany, Poland, and the Baltic from Luebeck to Koenicksberg.

It is of interest to note that the barges in Europe are very different from those we are now using. Abroad they are all made with a rudder. This, of course, means that someone must steer. This, again, means living quarters. Again, the contracts they enter into provide that barges shall at all times be in charge of two or more able-bodied persons; often the owner or part owner of a barge is its commander and his wife is the second in control. This explains the necessity for living quarters on the barge. It is quite common to find them very comfortable, and these living quarters in many cases provide a place of birth and subsequent homes for a new generation to again carry on the transportation for the family or to establish themselves in similar barges, building up a business as their parents conducted.

Rotterdam is the greatest port in Europe, the tonnage handled exceeds any other place. It is a surprise to most of us that 90 percent of this business is received and forwarded by barges. At all of the coast points north and east of Rotterdam the greater part of the tonnage handled moves by barges. Much of this movement is made under annual contracts between producers and barge owners. In no way, however, is any effort made to control the rates. The charges are, therefore, only controlled through supply and demand. Indeed, in most of the cities in western Europe there is a transportation market in which one may bargain for rates of carriage, as we do in our exchanges for wheat, flax, potatoes, and so forth. The shipping public would rebel, as would the barge owners, at any effort of a control in their rates, as is the case in our country at the present time.

The United States has been endowed by nature with wonderful possibilities for waterway development. We have a coastline upon the Atlantic of 11,674 miles, upon the Pacific of 3,765 miles, and upon the Gulf of Mexico of 6,418 miles. Our coastline in Alaska is 15,132 miles, and our shoreline of the Great Lakes is more than 8,300 miles. This total coastline is 20,000 miles greater than the circumference of the earth at the Equator.

The area of the Great Lakes is 95,160 square miles, of which 60,950 square miles, or approximately 64 percent of the total surface area, is within our international boundary line. These Lakes, with adequate improvement of their ports and connecting channels, are capable of the systematic movement of the largest ships afloat.

The rivers of the United States are unsurpassed by those of any other country, both for purposes of power and navigation. About 15,000 miles of these rivers have been improved to a greater or less extent, and probably 10,000 miles additional may be suitable for future improvement.

Upon the Atlantic coast we have 83 improved ports, of which 7 have depth of 35 feet or more, 14 between 30 and 35, 5 between 25 and 30, and 57 with depth of less than 25 feet.

On the Pacific coast we have 26 ports, 4 of which have depth of 35 feet or more, 6 between 30 and 35 feet, 5 between 25 and 30, and 11 with depth of less than 25 feet.

On the Gulf coast we have 22 ports, 1 of which is 35 feet deep, 8 between 30 and 35 feet, 5 between 25 and 30, and 9 have less than 25 feet in depth.

In Hawaii we have four ports, all 35 feet deep and capable of accommodating the largest ships engaged in the trans-Pacific trade.

In Puerto Rico we have two recognized ports, each 30 feet deep.

In Alaska we have four ports of less than 25 feet and several improved inlets.

Upon the Great Lakes we have 72 improved ports, of which 32 have depth of 21 feet, to correspond with that of the connecting channels, the other Lake ports having depth of less than 20 feet. The connecting channels are now being dredged from 21 to 24 feet, and the major ports are also under consideration for corresponding depth.

Along the Atlantic coast an inland waterway is nearing completion from Boston Harbor to the Florida Keys. The general depth is 12 feet, and the width ranging from 90 feet on inland cuts to 300 feet in open bays. This waterway unites into one connected system all the navigable rivers flowing into the Atlantic south of the New Hampshire line.

On the Gulf shore an intracoastal waterway is nearing completion from the coast of Florida to Corpus Christi, Tex. The channel is of uniform width of 100 feet and 9 feet deep, to correspond with the Mississippi, with which it connects. This intracoastal waterway unites into one continuous system all the navigable rivers flowing into the Gulf of Mexico, including the Mississippi, with all its branches. | Connection of this great system with the Great Lakes at Chicago is also nearing completion.

In net result we would have a real transportation system, with about 3,000 miles of what we might call the "main line", and some 6,000 miles of laterals.

There are, however, two proposals receiving current consideration which, if applied, will adversely affect the fullest use of our inland waterways. One is the proposal to regulate or control rates on commerce moving wholly by water. Experience has shown that such a proposal would only have the effect of raising the level of water rates to that of more expensive forms of transportation, thereby destroying the cheaper type of transportation. Here, again, we can learn from Europe. Again it is proposed to levy a transport tax upon tonnage moving over our inland waterways. It is but necessary to remark that this is based upon the claim that all public improvements must be self-liquidating; certainly this is a positive negation of the theory of popular government. The provision for public highways is one of the basic functions for which government is formed.

Under the Constitution our rivers were created Federal highways. This was the very logical outcome of the limitation inherent in the States. The navigable waters transcend the limits of State authority and jurisdiction, but the theory of self-liquidation can be as justly applied to public improvements by the States and their subdivisions. If public transportation using Federal highways must, through tax, liquidate these improvements, it is as logical to demand that sewage be metered, admissions charged to visitors in our parks or tuition collected for attendance in our public schools. Under this theory it is just as logical to erect toll gates along newly paved streets in order that the traffic using them might directly liquidate the cost of such improvements.

Time does not permit a more extensive discussion of this revolutionary proposal. Briefly, I can say, regardless of any theories advanced, that a water-transport tax is objectionable in practice because it reverses a salutary policy of government, which has worked satisfactorily throughout our national history, namely, that our navigable waters are free highways of commerce owned by and open to all of our citizens without imposts of any kind. These water highways have repaid their cost to the citizens of our country many times over in reduced transportation charges. water-transport tax, once established, would soon lose all semblance of a maintenance tax and, like the tariff, would degenerate into a medium of political expediency. Thus it would increase the cost of water transportation, an undesirable result from the public standpoint at any time, and particularly at a time when all efforts are being made to raise the price of commodities without unduly embarrassing a consuming public burdened with debt.

We, as a nation, are soon to have at our disposal the greatest system of internal waterways in the world. To insure their greatest usefulness, we must be careful to pursue sound policies toward water-borne transportation thereon. By so doing, these modernized water highways will bring untold blessings to our great Midwest inland empire and to this Nation as a whole.

WORLD COURT DEBATE

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks and to include therein a few statements with regard to the World Court debate and Senator BORAH'S part therein.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following:

[Allegan (Okla.) News, Feb. 7, 1935]

WORLD COURT DEBATE SHOWS UNITED STATES SENATE STILL HAS IN-TELLECTUAL GIANTS—JOHNSON, BORAH, AND GORE MAY BE COM-PARED WITH ORATORS OF THE PAST

They talk and they write of the intellectual giants of the Senate of the olden days—of a Webster, a Clay, or a Calhoun; but those who listened to the closing senatorial debate on the question of adherence to the World Court have no need to regret their failure to have heard any of the statesmen of bygone days.

to have heard any of the statesmen of bygone days.

Neither the incisive, energetic argument of a Johnson, the stormy eloquence of the logical Borah, nor the quiet, soul-stirring and convincing appeal and marshaling of facts of Senator Gore will be in any measure dwarfed by comparison with the eloquence of any of the Senate's historic heroes.

Like the irresistible powers of some great surging army Johnson drove home, by sheer force, the dangers involved in adherence to the Court. The fire of Borah's utterances was equaled by his appeal to the intelligence of hearers; the tones of Senator Gore's voice, as well as his words, calling Senators to their duty, appealing to their sense of patriotism, to the loyalty which they owed to those who died on the fields of France, his vivid characterization of the utterances of those who would have us join the Court, left no human emotion untouched.

All too often debate consists of words, sentences, and paragraphs, nothing more, strung together on a continuous thread of graphs, nothing more, strung together on a continuous thread of sound, many times meaningless as a whole, convincing to no one. To those accustomed to saying or believing that oratory is a forgotten art, eloquence a thing of the past, logical argument useless, and appeal to patriotism unheeded, we suggest the reading of the day's debate found in the Congressional Record of January 29, ending on page 1212. Those who were privileged to hear it will never forget those appeals to American loyalty and patriotism. Paying tribute to his colleagues, William Borah and Hiram Johnson, to his former colleague, James Reed, of Missouri, Senator Gore had read the lines of Horatius when he said:

Gore had read the lines of Horatius when he said:

"Hew down the bridge, Sir Consul,
With all the speed ye may;
I, with two more to help me,
Will hold the foe in play. In yon strait path a thousand May well be stopped by three: Now who will stand on either hand, And keep the bridge with me?

Then out spake Spurius Lartius-A Ramnian proud was he:
"Lo, I will stand at thy right hand, And keep the bridge with thee."
And out spake strong Herminius—
Of Titian blood was he: "I will abide on thy left side And keep the bridge with thee."

"Horatius", quoth the Consul,
"As thou sayest, so let it be."
And straight against that great array Went forth the dauntless three.

Went forth the dauntless three.

Listening to the Senator, each hearer must have felt that, like Horatius of old, the blind Senator from Oklahoma, a Democrat wishing to be loyal to his party, but firm in his belief that country must come first, was willing to sacrifice his office—himself if necessary—to protect its liberty.

With hair silvery white, thin, intellectual face, his manner mild, his voice at all times gentle, persuasive and thrilling, physically hale and vigorous, though blind, not a word uttered by him, nor a line read by the Senate clerk at his direction, was lost to his listeners. Each was carried along by his sincerity as well as by the convincing force of his statements. Each knew that his heart, yes, his soul, as well as his mind and intellect, were in his words.

"New dealers" may rush about from place to place; they may utter and print millions of words, spend billions of dollars, but this debate disclosed to the world, certainly to those who heard these three great patriotic, intellectual giants, that their long fight for the principles first enunciated by Washington was, on the 29th day of January 1935, crowned with victory. If, of the three, one is to be advanced by a half pace before his fellows, the other two would be the first to agree that to the blind Senator should go the glory. the glory.

Let us not make the same mistake as did those who heard Lincoln and Everett at the dedication of the battlefield of Gettysburg, nor of those carried away by the address of Everett, who failed to realize the true eloquence of Lincoln.

There was another orator in the Senate this day, quiet, unassuming Senator Bulow, of South Dakota, who made this brief but comprehensive and powerful statement:

"Heretofore I have been in favor of the Lagran of Nations and "Heretofore I have been in favor of the League of Nations, and of the World Court, but the reflections of the last year or two have caused me somewhat to change my mind. I have listened to this debate, heard most of it, and most of that which I have not heard I have read; and I find, so far as I now remember, that every Senator here who is in favor of going into the World Court is only in favor of going into it, provided certain reservations are made. That leads me to the conclusion that perhaps it is a dan-made. That leads me to the conclusion that perhaps it is a dangerous thing to go into the Court.

"During the more than 60 years of my life, in an humble way, often questions have come to me upon which action had to be taken; and from that experience I have realized that my Creator endowed me with a something which, for the want of a better name, we have seen fit to call a conscience. That conscience has always pointed out the road to me. If there were two roads to take, that conscience has always told me the right and the wrong road. I have not always obeyed it, but every time I have violated its dictates, apologies and regrets have been necessary. When I have followed its dictates, I do not now remember of a single apology that was necessary.

"I sincerely dislike, and it is with deep regret, that I am forced to part company with my administration. It is with deep regret that I cannot follow my leader upon this side of the floor. To me that leadership is voluntary, and I can do as I please, but my conscience is not voluntary, and I must walk with my conscience constantly until the end of my days.

"Under the view I now entertain, much as I regret it, I cannot support the pending resolution of adherence. I thank the Senate for its kindly consideration."

This statement of Senator Bullow lays down a safe rule for

This statement of Senator Bulow lays down a safe rule for statesmen as well as for youth.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for one-half minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from West Virginia?

There was no objection.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, the Chairman of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads has informed me that that committee has made a favorable report on the new air-mail bill, which he hopes will come before the House on next Monday. The Second Assistant Postmaster General of the United States, Mr. Harlee Branch, made an address in my home town 1 week ago today, when air mail and passenger service was inaugurated, in which he set forth certain administration figures and facts that I believe will be of vital interest to the Membership of the House even before the legislation comes before us next week.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I may at this point insert as a part of my remarks certain statements made by Mr. Branch.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from West Virginia?

There was no objection.

The matter referred to follows.

In part, Mr. Branch said:

Upon this occasion it is appropriate and may be interesting for me to refer to the remarkable development of commercial aviation in the United States. In so doing I also wish to keep the record straight, because there has been and is now a great deal of confusion in the public mind as to the real facts. Much misinformation has been circulated.

No other country in the world possesses an air transport system which is in any degree comparable with the great system that covers the entire United States. It is in a class by itself, both as to the mileage embraced, the unsurpassed equipment employed, and the frequency of the schedules flown.

While there has been a steady improvement in equipment ever since the first air mail route was established between Washington and New York in 1918, the greatest strides in commercial aviation have been made during the past year.

Last June Congress enacted a law which prohibits any holding or manufacturing company from owning or controlling a company holding an air mail contract. This law also prohibits any oper-ating company from paying any officer a salary of more than ating company from paying any officer a salary of more than $17,500 a year.

The divorcement of the operating companies from holding and manufacturing companies put a stop to wild stock promotions and made it possible for the operating companies to buy their airplanes and other equipment in the open market.

There was a time—and that was before this administration came into office—when the greater portion of the funds appropriated by Congress for the support and development of commercial aviation went to three great holding companies which controlled 92 percent of the companies flying the air mail.

Those were the days when a manufacturing company, affiliated with an operating company and organized with a capital stock of $750, boasted a net income of one and one-half millions dollars for a single year; when an investment of $259.14 could climb to a value of fifty-one and one-half million dollars; and when two $20 bills quickly grew into stock valued at $5,000,000 and more than $1,000,000 in cash.

Those were the days when contracts were privately negotiated at secret conferences and money appropriated by Congress to build up a national system of air transportation was parceled out to swell the fortunes of favored companies.

well the fortunes of favored companies.

Those days are gone. Collusion between carriers has been stopped, and free and open competitive bidding for air mall contracts is now assured. The law prevents air transport monopolies and protects employees of companies carrying the air mail.

All these provisions of the law are being strictly enforced by the Post Office Department, and this enforcement has brought about the most healthful condition that the aviation business has ever known.

It is now possible, as it was not in the past, for air-mail contractors to devote their time and money to building up service institutions, rather than lobbying for increased rates or other favors, and to center their attention on airline operations and not on the stock market. As a result the aviation industry is today rendering the finest service in its history. The operating companies are now officered by men who are interested only in accessful operations.

The present air mail law contains a number of other funda-The present air mail law contains a number of other fundamental and constructive provisions, among them being the provision which vests in the Interstate Commerce Commission the power to fix the rates of air-mail pay, the provision which authorizes the Department of Commerce to prescribe the maximum flying hours of pilots, and the requirement that the salaries of pilots shall conform to decisions of the National Labor Board.

A year ago, there were 25,248 route miles in the air mail system, while today the system embraces 28,967 route miles, an increase of 3.719 miles.

of 3.719 miles.

A year ago the total authorized annual flying miles over these routes was approximately 35,000,000 miles, while at present the total authorized annual flying mileage is approximately 40,000,000, an increase of approximately 5,000,000 miles per year.

For the fiscal year 1932 the air mail appropriation was $20,000,000; for the fiscal year 1933 the appropriation was $19,460,000; for the fiscal year 1934 the appropriation was $15,000,000; and for the the fiscal year 1934 the appropriation was $15,000,000; and for the fiscal year 1935 the appropriation was $12,000,000.

It is estimated that the cost of the largely expanded Air Mail Service during the fiscal year 1935, which ends June 30 of this calendar year, will be approximately $10,000,000. This is about half of what was being paid in 1933.

The Post Office Department does not contend that in every instance the present rates are adequate. As a matter of fact the Department is convinced that in some instances the rates are too low and has recommended that Congress amend the law so as to empower the Interstate Commerce Commission to raise as well as lower rates, in which event the Department expects that the Interstate Commerce Commission will, in a number of cases. the Interstate Commerce Commission will, in a number of cases, allow increases

However, the Department does not anticipate that the total increases which may be allowed by the Interstate Commerce Commission will run the total air mail pay to a figure higher than twelve or thirteen million dollars a year.

or thirteen million dollars a year.

Even if the increases allowed were to go as high as $14,000,000, there would still be a large reduction in the per mile mail pay as compared with the pay of a year ago, when the average per mile pay was 42 cents for 25,248 route miles and approximately 35,000,000 annual scheduled flying miles. At that time the appropriation was $15,000,000 and the Department was expending $14,000,000.

With an increase of 3,719 route miles, which is a 15-percent increase, and with an increase of approximately 5,000,000 annual scheduled flying miles, which is also an increase of approximately 15 percent, a total mail pay cost of thirteen or even fourteen million dollars would be proportionately much less than the cost was a year ago.

The present contracts were let in April and May of last year. They were awarded after open competitive bidding and in some cases the bids were extremely low. For instance, the bid rate on one contract was 8 cents per mile, on another 13 cents, and on another 14% cents. Several were below 20 cents, and the others ranged between 20 and 39½ cents per route mile.

Since the letting of these contracts the companies have encountered a considerable increase in their expenses. Some of this increased expense is due to the new air mail law, which was enacted subsequent to the letting of the contracts. This law requires the companies to pay the salaries fixed by the National Labor Board, which, for a number of the companies, is a higher salary scale than prevailed a year ago.

prevailed a year ago.

With few exceptions, the companies have purchased new and up-to-date airplanes, which cost more than the old types of airplanes. These companies have also been required to install improved safety equipment, which is expensive, and, in addition, a law was passed at the last Congress making them responsible for mail lost or destroyed and for which the Department is now collecting. In addition to these increases in expense the companies have, in many instances, been compelled to pay higher rates for the use of airports and airport facilities.

have, in many instances, been compelled to pay higher rates for the use of airports and airport facilities.

The great expansion in the air mail system, which now gives direct service to 46 States and indirect service to the other 2 States, and which provides interisland service in the Hawaiian Territory, has increased the number of cities directly served from 152 to 193. Stops at the additional 41 cities have also brought about a considerable increase in expense to the companies for the reason that at each of these stops the companies must maintain ticket offices, radio and weather reporting stations, and a ground personnel.

personnel.

The total population of the cities now served by air mail exceeds 36,000,000.

In administering the Air Mail Service the Post Office Department has constantly borne in mind that the purpose of Congress in providing a subsidy for air mall was to develop American aviation, and the Post Office Department, under Postmaster General Farley, and the Department of Commerce, under Secretary Roper, have constantly pressed for the utilization of every possible improvement in equipment.

At least 10 types of planes employed on the air mail routes in 1933 had by the beginning of 1935 been superseded by improved flying equipment. During the past year 3,586 miles of airways were located or relocated and improved.

Additional lighting systems are constantly being installed, and beacons flare to guide the planes tonight where there was only darkness in 1933.

Communication linking the plane in the air with the ground is constantly being improved. All of this is a part of the Government program to foster and expand the system of air transport in the United States.

In October 1934 all previous records were broken when 916,416 pounds of air mail were carried. It may be mentioned in passing that the cost of moving this mail was less than half the cost of moving smaller amounts of mail in October 1931, October 1932, and October 1933. During the last 6 months of 1933 the passenger miles flown totaled 108,989,640 as compared with 112,569,194 during the last 6 months of 1934. There has also been a large increase in the volume of express transported.

Beginning last July 1, the air mail postage rate was reduced from 8 cents for the first ounce and 13 cents for each additional from 8 cents for the first ounce and 13 cents for each additional ounce to a flat rate of 6 cents per ounce. This lower rate has brought a great increase in the volume of air mail, and this increased volume has now reached a point where the postal receipts about equal those received under the former higher rate.

With authority given to the Interstate Commerce Commission to authorize fair and reasonable mail pay rates to the companies and with the constant increase in the volume of mail and express and number of passengers carried, the Interstate Commerce Commission will not only be in position to afford the necessary Govmission will not only be in position to afford the necessary Government aid to the companies during the period when their revenues are insufficient to pay their necessary operating expenses, but it will be in position to gradually reduce Government aid until the revenue from passengers and express, plus a mail pay rate for service rendered, will enable the companies to operate without any Government subsidy.

Along with its recommendations that Congress amend the air mail law so as to authorize the Interstate Commerce Commission to increase air mail pay rates where they are unreasonably low, the Department is also recommending an amendment which would require air mail companies to obtain the approval of the Interstate Commerce Commission before they can inaugurate a nonmail schedule or an off-route operation.

With no limitation placed upon the nonmail schedules and off-route operations an air mail carrier could incur losses regardless.

with no inflication placed upon the holiman schedules and onroute operations an air mail carrier could incur losses regardless of the amount of air mail pay authorized.

Within the past few days a statement has been broadcast over the country to the effect that between May and December 1934 the air mail operators incurred a loss somewhat in excess of $2,800,000. This statement is misleading, for it infers that this loss was incurred in flying the air mail. The truth is that much of this loss was the result of nonmail carrying operations.

Further, in 1934 some of the operators were paying tribute to their predecessor companies in the form of excessive rentals of equipment used. In some cases this annual rental was equal to 50 percent of the value of the rented equipment.

According to the operating companies the revenues on flights which carry no mails are approximately 28 cents per mile as compared with expenses slightly exceeding 57 cents per mile, which shows that a loss of approximately 29 cents a mile has been incurred by operations over which the Government has no control.

As an example, at one time, during the past year, a company operating between Chicago and New York flew 3 mail-carrying round trips and 7 nonmail carrying round trips per day. It is clear that by such nonmail carrying operations an operator can build up, and in the past many operators have built up, losses for which they could not possibly be compensated by any reasonable amount of air mail payments.

The air mail payments.

The air mail makes possible the great transcontinental lines which pick you up by the Atlantic at midday and land you for breakfast by the Pacific the next morning. The air mail makes it possible for the Chicago business man to breakfast with his family at home and attend a conference in New York on the same afternoon. Because the air mail files, you can travel from New Orleans to New York between sunset and sunrise. It is the air mail that keeps in our skies the luxurious air liners which flash between our northern and southern borders and from coast to between our northern and southern borders and from coast to coast with a speed which in 1933 would have been called incred-

Mr. RANDOLPH. The foregoing remarks give valuable information for us. Personally I feel that there are many companies now carrying air mail for the Government at a contract rate which is driving them into bankruptcy. In this sort of a situation we must come to the aid of the air transport system in America. An increase in rates is absolutely essential. The Federal Aviation Commission has put Congress on notice, and we should take steps to continue our leadership.

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, I call up the Senate bill 408, to promote safety on the public highways of the District of Columbia by providing for the financial responsibility of owners and operators of motor vehicles for damages caused by motor vehicles on the public highways in the District of Columbia; to prescribe penalties for the violation of the provisions of this act, and for other purposes, and ask unanimous consent that it be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentlewoman from New Jersey asks unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole. Is there objection?

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I may state to the gentlewoman from New Jersey that I have been given notice if this bill is brought up there will be an effort made to attach to it a taxicab-liability bill. I have made an investigation, and I think such an amendment would be in order. That being true, I am sorry I cannot agree that it be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole. I think we are going to have to fight this thing out, and we will have to have some time to do so. We cannot be unduly restricted. We have not had any hearings on that phase of the legislation this year, and it certainly would not be right to restrict debate. We had hearings last year. It will take a little time to get this information, and since I have been given notice this fight is going to hinge on the taxicab liability, I do not see how I can agree to permitting it to come up without having all rights protected.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Would it not be proper to hold up the bill and have some hearings on the matter?

Mrs. NORTON. May I say to the gentleman that we have no objection to any Member of the House offering a taxiliability bill if they so desire. This bill has nothing to do with the taxi-liability bill. I consider that this bill should stand on its own bottom. Let us either pass it or vote it down.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Does not this bill include taxicabs?

Mrs. NORTON. It includes all motor vehicles.

Mr. O'CONNOR. That would include taxicabs.

Mrs. NORTON. Hearings have been held on this bill. It passed the House a year ago. It passed the Senate this year, and, so far as I have been able to learn, there has not been any objection made to the bill except by one particular person, and that gentleman, as I understand it, has been influenced by certain insurance interests in the District.

Mr. O'CONNOR. In most jurisdictions the vehicles that are used for public hire are treated differently than the privately owned pleasure cars.

Mrs. NORTON. I agree with the gentleman, and there is no reason why we should not have a bill to take care of them here in the District, but this bill has nothing to do with that matter.

Mr. O'CONNOR. As I understand it, this bill does cover them rather than making a separation. If this bill just applied to pleasure vehicles which were not used for hire, that would be a different matter. I think hearings ought to be had on this matter.

Mrs. NORTON. Ample time was given Mr. Patman, the chairman of the subcommittee, to hold hearings. I may say to the gentleman that we have this law in my State, and the law also applies in the State of New York.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Oh, no.
Mrs. NORTON. The State of New York does have a compulsory-insurance law in addition to this financialresponsibility bill.

Mr. O'CONNOR. There is a separate law for taxicabs in New York.

Mrs. NORTON. There is no reason why we should not have a separate bill here. This bill does not interfere.

Mr. O'CONNOR. This bill includes vehicles for public

Mrs. NORTON. New York has financial-responsibility law for motor vehicles for hire and also this law.

Mr. O'CONNOR. No. In New York we do not have a general bill.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, if the regular order is demanded, I object.

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (S. 408) to promote safety on the public highways of the District of Columbia by providing for the financial, responsibility of owners and operators of motor vehicles for damages caused by motor vehicles on the public highways in the District of Columbia; to prescribe penalties for the violation of the provisions of this act, and for other purposes, and pending that motion, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that general debate be limited to 1 hour.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from New Jersey?

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, if the gentlewoman from New Jersey will get some assurance from those who are contemplating offering the amendment in regard to taxicabs that the amendment will not be introduced, I shall not object to the limit of time, but it is not right to bring in an entirely separate matter at the end of the day that will involve probably a whole day's discussion. We fought this out last session, and it required a whole day with a roll call and the vote was about 2 to 1 against it. Now, to bring it in at this time I do not think is proper. It will take considerable time to discuss it, and if it is insisted upon I shall be compelled to object to the limitation of time also. I do not object to considering the bill.

Mrs. NORTON. The gentleman has had this bill in his committee for sometime past. He had all the time to hold as many hearings as he desired. He reported the bill to the full committee favorably.

Mr. PATMAN. I am not objecting to this bill, I expect to sponsor it. I am anxious for this bill to be passed if I have assurances that there will be no effort to attach the other matter.

Mrs. NORTON. How can any Member give assurance of what another Member intends to do. Has the gentleman the idea of introducing a compulsory bill?

Mr. PATMAN. No; I have no thought of doing that, because I am opposed to it.

Mr. DIRKSEN. May I say to the gentlewoman from New Jersey that no one can give that assurance.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, I shall be compelled to object to the limitation of time so that we will have plenty of time to discuss these matters.

Mr. MICHENER. How late does the gentlewoman contemplate remaining in session tonight?

Mrs. NORTON. That is rather a difficult question. May I say to the gentleman that I supposed everybody in the House was interested in this bill. We are having a large number of accidents every day on our city streets with absolutely no responsibility. There is no law here covering the situation. The bill provides a law which, while it may not be a perfect one, although I contend it is a very good law, is one that is similar to one that has been adopted by 21 States and 6 Provinces in Canada. I cannot understand why any Member of this House should object to passing this bill. If it is found inadequate for any reason it can be amended at another time. It is a step in the right direction.

Mr. MICHENER. My inquiry was how long does the gentlewoman contemplate remaining in session this evening?

Mrs. NORTON. I could finish in 10 minutes. Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentlewoman yield?

Mrs. NORTON. I yield to the gentleman from Texas. Mr. BLANTON. To get the present apparent obstacles out of the way, I would suggest to the gentlewoman from New Jersey that she put this particular bill off until the end of the calendar and call up the other bills to which there is no objection, for likely there are several of them she can

Mrs. NORTON. I may say to the gentleman from Texas that the Chairman of the District Committee has rarely found any bill to which objection is not raised.

Mr. BLANTON. On this particular bill there seems to be some objection from the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Pat-MAN]. He indicates he would not want this bill taken up at this time. Hence, let it come last, and take up the other bills first.

Mrs. NORTON. May I say to the gentleman, and he is a fair-minded man-

Mr. BLANTON. I am trying to help the gentlewoman.

Mrs. NORTON. I know it and thank the gentleman. Does he not think it would be in order and come with much better grace from the gentleman on the committee that reported the bill if he had brought up these objections in the committee so we might have amended the bill to suit him instead of bringing the matter up today? He was not forced to report the bill when he did; in fact, could have held hearings for any length of time desired.

Mr. BLANTON. I have found out that sometimes Members have to proceed in their own way.

Mrs. NORTON. I have found that out, too. Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, I am not objecting to this bill. I want sufficient time to discuss an amendment that I know will be brought up.

Mrs. NORTON. That is all we want. Mr. PATMAN. But I have been put on notice there will be an amendment offered that will require liability insurance for all taxicabs.

Mrs. NORTON. The gentleman is not afraid of that amendment-I am not.

Mr. PATMAN. I certainly am if we have a gag rule whereby I cannot discuss it.

Mrs. NORTON. We will give you as much time as necessary.

Mr. PATMAN. Next Monday, I believe, is suspension day. It can be passed then without an amendment.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, if we are going to discuss the matter, let us take time to discuss it, and if we are not going to discuss it, let us have the regular order.

Mr. PATMAN. I object, Mr. Speaker.

Mrs. NORTON. The gentleman objects to what? Mr. PATMAN. To 1 hour's debate.

Mrs. NORTON. We will make it 2 hours. Mr. PATMAN. If you will get a promise not to amend the bill, or give me 1 hour of the time-

Mrs. NORTON. I have never known a committee to come into this House and be treated in this fashion. I have never known a committee to be required to get a promise from Members that there shall be no amendment offered to a bill. It is the privilege of every Member of the House to offer amendments to any bill.

Mr. PATMAN. I am not objecting to the amendment. I merely want time to discuss it, and it is my privilege to object and I am exercising my privilege.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentlewoman from New Jersey that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, I should like to object to this entire proceeding, because this bill came up a week ago and at that time there was an understanding about it at least I thought, and I think other members of the committee thought the same way about it, that the bill would be referred back to the committee for hearings. It does seem to me this is in violation of that understanding.

The SPEAKER. The motion is not debatable, the Chair will state to the gentleman.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. Hull) there were-ayes 89, noes 80.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order there is not a quorum present, and object to the vote on that ground.

The SPEAKER. Evidently there is not a quorum present. LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. KLEBERG, indefinitely, on account of important business.

To Mr. Gehrmann, for today, on account of illness.

To Mr. Hancock of North Carolina, for today, on account of sickness in his family.

To Mr. Kopplemann, for 1 week, on account of important

To Mr. MITCHELL of Illinois, for tomorrow, on account of important business.

To Mr. Robertson (at the request of Mr. Darden), indefinitely, on account of illness.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED

Mr. PARSONS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that that committee had examined and found truly reenrolled a bill of the House of the following title, which was thereupon signed by the Speaker:

H. R. 330. An act for the relief of Sophie de Soto.

BILL PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT

Mr. PARSONS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that that committee did on this day present to the President, for his approval, a bill of the House of the following title:

H. R. 330. An act for the relief of Sophie de Soto.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. MAVERICK. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. Connery) there were—ayes 92, noes 64.

So the motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 32 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned to meet, in accordance with its previous order, tomorrow, March 12, 1935, at 11 o'clock a. m.

COMMITTÉE HEARINGS

COMMITTEE ON THE POST OFFICE AND POST ROADS

(Tuesday, Mar. 12, 10:30 a. m.)

CHANGE OF REFERENCE

Under clause 2 of rule XXII, committees were discharged from the consideration of the following bills, which were referred as follows:

A bill (H. R. 6576) to authorize the presentation of a Distinguished Flying Cross to Maj. Francis T. Evans, United States Marine Corps; Committee on Military Affairs discharged, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

A bill (H. R. 1464) to correct the military record of Edward Reidell; Committee on Military Affairs discharged, and referred to the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

A bill (H. R. 6574) for the relief of the dependents of Max Grady Sullivan, deceased; Committee on Military Affairs discharged, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 3 of rule XXII, public bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. McREYNOLDS: A bill (H. R. 6612) authorizing the appropriation of funds for the payment of claims of certain foreign governments under the circumstances hereinafter enumerated; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

By Mr. STARNES: A bill (H. R. 6613) to create the Farm Tenant Homes Corporation, to promote more secure occupancy of farms and farm homes, to correct the economic instability resulting from some present forms of farm tenancy, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. CONNERY: A bill (H. R. 6614) to provide for the construction of a post-office building at Revere, Mass.; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. PETERSON of Georgia: A bill (H. R. 6615) authorizing the payment of an indemnity to the Spanish Government on account of the death of Juan Neira, a Spanish subject, killed at Savannah, Ga., by a United States truck; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

By Mr. ROBINSON of Utah: A bill (H. R. 6616) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to accept from the State of Utah title to a certain State-owned section of land and to patent other land to the State in lieu thereof, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

By Mr. HIGGINS of Massachusetts: A bill (H. R. 6617) to provide for the removal of the monument to Casimir Pulaski from the triangle at Pennsylvania Avenue, Thirteenth Street, and E Street NW., to the east end of the triangle formed by Pennsylvania Avenue, E Street, and Fifteenth Street, in the city of Washington, D. C., and to authorize the appropriation therefor; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. HUDDLESTON: A bill (H. R. 6618) to regulate and maintain an open market for the sale of goods in interstate commerce, to supplement existing laws against combinations in restraint of trade and discrimination in prices, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. IGLESIAS: A bill (H. R. 6619) to authorize the Secretary of War to dispose of certain real estate of the War Department; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland: A bill (H. R. 6620) to provide for the construction of two vessels for the Coast Guard designed for ice breaking and assistance work; to the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Ninety-one Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

The message from the President of the United States will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

To the Congress of the United States:

I am transmitting to you herewith a report submitted to me by the National Power Policy Committee. I named this committee last summer from among the departments of the Government concerned with power problems to make a series of reports to coordinate Government policy on such problems. This report I am submitting to you is the recommendation of the committee with respect to the treatment of holding companies in the public-utility field. It deserves the careful attention of every Member of the Congress.

The so-called "public utility holding company bill" (title I of House bill 5423 and of Senate bill 1725), which was drafted under the direction of congressional leaders, incorporates many of the recommendations of this report.

I have been watching with great interest the fight being waged against public utility holding company legislation. I have watched the use of investors' money to make the investor believe that the efforts of Government to protect him are designed to defraud him. I have seen much of the propaganda prepared against such legislation—even down to mimeographed sheets of instructions for propaganda to exploit the most far-fetched and fallacious fears. I have seen enough to be as unimpressed by it as I was by the similar effort to stir up the country against the securities exchange bill last spring. The Securities Exchange Act is now generally accepted as a constructive measure, and I feel confident that any fears now entertained in regard to proposed utility holding company legislation will prove as groundless as those last spring in the case of the Securities Exchange Act.

So much has been said through chain letters and circulars and by word of mouth that misrepresents the intent and purpose of a new law that it is important that the people of the country understand once and for all the actual facts of the case. Such a measure will not destroy legitimate business or wholesome and productive investment. It will not destroy a penny of actual value of those operating properties which holding companies now control and which holding company securities represent insofar as they have any value. On the contrary, it will surround the necessary reorganization of the holding company with safeguards which will in fact protect the investor.

We seek to establish the sound principle that the utility holding company so long as it is permitted to continue should not profit from dealings with subsidiaries and affiliates where there is no semblance of actual bargaining to get the best value and the best price. If a management company is equipped to offer a genuinely economic management service to the smaller operating utility companies, it ought not to own stock in the companies it manages, and its fees ought to be reasonable. The holding company should not be permitted to establish a sphere of influence from which independent engineering, construction, and other private enterprise is excluded by a none too benevolent private paternalism. If a management company is controlled by related operating companies, it should be organized on a truly mutual and cooperative basis and should be required to perform its services at actual cost demonstrably lower than the services can be obtained in a free and open market.

We do not seek to prevent the legitimate diversification of investment in operating utility companies by legitimate investment companies. But the holding company in the past has confused the function of control and management with that of investment and in consequence has more frequently than not failed in both functions. Possibly some holding companies may be able to divest themselves of the control of their present subsidiaries and become investment trusts. But an investment company ceases to be an investment company when it embarks into business and management. Investment judgment requires the judicial appraisal of other people's management.

The disappearance at the end of 5 years of those utility holding companies which cannot justify themselves as necessary for the functioning of the operating utility companies of the country is an objective which congressional leaders I have consulted deem essential to a realistic and far-sighted treatment of the evils of public utility holding companies. For practical reasons we should offer a chance of survival to those holding companies which can prove to the Securities and Exchange Commission that their existence is necessary for the achievement of the public ends which private utility companies are supposed to serve. For such companies, and during the interim period for other companies, the proposal for a comprehensive plan of public regulation and control is sound.

But where the utility holding company does not perform a demonstrably useful and necessary function in the operating industry and is used simply as a means of financial control, it is idle to talk of the continuation of holding companies on the assumption that regulation can protect the public against them. Regulation has small chance of ultimate success against the kind of concentrated wealth and economic power which holding companies have shown the ability to acquire in the utility field. No Government effort can be expected to carry out effective, continuous, and intricate regulation of the kind of private empires within the Nation which the holding-company device has proved capable of creating.

Except where it is absolutely necessary to the continued functioning of a geographically integrated operating utility system, the utility holding company with its present powers must go. If we could remake our financial history in the light of experience, certainly we would have none of this holding company business. It is a device which does not belong to our American traditions of law and business. It is only a comparatively late innovation. It dates definitely from the same unfortunate period which marked the beginnings of a host of other laxities in our corporate law which have brought us to our present disgraceful condition of competitive charter mongering between our States. And it offers too well demonstrated temptation to and facility for abuse to be tolerated as a recognized business institution. That temptation and that facility are inherent in its very nature. It is a corporate invention which can give a few corporate insiders unwarranted and intolerable powers over other people's money. In its destruction of local control and its substitution of absentee management it has built up in the public-utility field what has justly been called a system of private socialism which is inimical to the welfare of a free

Most of us agree that we should take the control and the benefits of the essentially local operating utility industry out of a few financial centers and give back that control and those benefits to the localities which produce the business and create the wealth. We can properly favor economically independent business, which stands on its own feet and diffuses power and responsibility among the many, and frowns upon those holding companies which through interlocking directorates and other devices have given tyrannical power and exclusive opportunity to a favored few. It is time to make an effort to reverse that process of the concentration of power which has made most American citizens, once traditionally independent owners of their own businesses, helplessly dependent for their daily bread upon the favor of a very few, who, by devices such as holding companies, have taken for themselves unwarranted economic power. I am | against private socialism of concentrated private power as thoroughly as I am against government socialism. The one is equally as dangerous as the other; and destruction of private socialism is utterly essential to avoid governmental socialism.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations:

To the Congress of the United States:

I commend to the favorable consideration of the Congress the enclosed report from the Secretary of State to the end that Public Resolution 118, Seventy-first Congress, be amended so as to authorize an annual appropriation to pay the pro rata share of the United States in the expenses of the International Technical Committee of Aerial Legal Experts and to authorize an annual appropriation in the sum of $6,500, or so much thereof as may be necessary, for the expenses of participation by the Government of the United States in the meetings of the International Technical Committee of Aerial Legal Experts and/or of the commissions established by that Committee.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, March 12, 1935.

CLAIMS OF SIOUX INDIANS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Secretary of the Interior relative to the claims of individual Indians enrolled at the various Sioux agencies for loss of personal property and failure to receive allotments of land to which the applicants were entitled, etc., which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

CREWS OF FISHING VESSELS IN FOREIGN PORTS

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate a letter from the Chairman of the United States Tariff Commission, submitting a report on an investigation with respect to "The employment of crews in foreign ports for temporary service on United States fishing vessels, including the practice of dispatching United States fishing vessels with socalled 'skeleton crews'", which, with the accompanying report, was referred to the Committee on Finance.

WORK RELIEF IN PUERTO RICO

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a telegram from Hon. Miguel A. Garcia Mendez, speaker of the House of Representatives of Puerto Rico, on behalf of that house, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SAN JUAN, P. R., March 8, 1935.

Hon. John N. Garner,
President of the United States Senate,

Washington, D. C .:

The House of Representatives of Puerto Rico endorses House Joint Resolution No. 117 that gives power to the national administration to carry out an ample program of public works and plans for economic social rehabilitation in the States, Territories, and insular possessions, and it likewise requests that any rehabili-tation plan established by the national administration in Puerto Rico be implanted through the legislature and the executive departments of the insular government determined by the organic act in order to avoid duplication of government or the creation of a supergovernment in the island.

> MIGUEL A. GARCIA MENDEZ Speaker House of Representatives.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following resolution of the Senate of the State of Kansas, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs:

A resolution memorializing Congress to enact legislation providing for the payment of travel pay to certain Spanish-American War

Whereas during the Spanish-American War the troops who were serving in the Philippine Islands in 1899 and their period of enlistment was about to expire, request was made from the War Department to have them remain in service for 6 months or longer

partment to have them remain in service for 6 months or longer until the troops could be sent over to replace them; and

Whereas these troops were promised by the officers in charge in the Philippine Islands at said time that if they would reenlist or remain in service during the emergency then existing they would be given the regular travel pay of soldiers whose enlistment expired and reenlisted in the service of the United States which was authorized by section 15 of the Army bill then in force; and

Whereas these troops were held to service for approximately 6 months or longer under said agreement and the promise made to them, thus saving the United States millions of dollars, and were so held without being formally mustered out and mustered in, it being a physical impossibility to go through the formal act of muster at that time; and muster at that time; and

Whereas these troops were never paid the money promised them by their superior officers, it taking an act of Congress to appropriate the money, although the men have been repeatedly promised this money since being mustered out, and committees in Congress have recommended the passage of an act appropriating Whereas numerous citizens of the State of Kansas would be greatly benefited by this bill; and Whereas the Court of Claims of the United States has held that this was a moral obligation to these soldiers, and in previous Congresses the war claims committee has recommended the bill do pass, and there is now pending in Congress, before the Committee on War Claims in the House of Representatives, H. R. 2024, which will provide for the payment of this obligation; and will provide for the payment of this obligation; and

Whereas under present financial conditions this money would immediately go into circulation and help relieve the present financial distress, and pay an obligation which the Government has owed these soldiers for 36 years: Therefore be it

Resolved by the Senate of the State of Kansas, That the Congress of the United States be, and hereby is, respectfully memorialized to enact with all convenient speed such legislation as may be necessary to pass this measure which will thus pay the obligations which the Government has owed to these soldiers for 36 years; be it further

Resolved. That certified copies of this resolution, duly certified.

Resolved, That certified copies of this resolution, duly certified, be transmitted to the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives in Congress and to the Senators and Representatives in Congress from the State of Kansas, and that the latter be urged to use their best offices to procure the enactment of such legislation as will accomplish the purpose of this resolution.

Adopted March 6, 1935.

CHAS. W. THOMPSON. President of the Senate. CLARENCE W. MILLER, Secretary of the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution of the Legislature of the State of Iowa, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry:

A concurrent resolution memorializing the Congress of the United States to amend the rules and regulations of making loans by the Federal Land Bank of Omaha, Nebr.

Whereas the Federal Land Bank of Omaha, Nebr., under its present rules and regulations, has refused to make loans on lands which are located in drainage districts where the lands situated therein are subject to special assessment for the drainage system installed in the said districts, and have also refused to make loans on lands which have been established as permanent pasture land;

Whereas due to the said rules and regulations there are numer-ous farmers located in the said districts who are in financial dis-tress at the present time, and are unable to get financial aid; and

Whereas the said lands on which the said Federal Land Bank of Omaha, Nebr., has refused to make loans under its rules and regulations, are valuable, tillable lands, and taxed on the same basis as other lands located in the State of Iowa: Be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives, State of Iowa (the Senate of the State of Iowa concurring), That we petition and pray the Congress of the United States to amend the law relating to loans made by the Federal Land Bank of Omaha, Nebr., and to liberalize the rules and regulations of the said Federal land bank so that the owners of land as enumerated in this resolution may receive the same advantages as owners of other Iowa farm lands; and be it further

Resolved, That the chief clerk of the house be and he is on the passage of this resolution directed to forward a printed copy of this memorial resolution to the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the Congress of the United States, at Washington, D. C.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution of the Legislature of the State of North Dakota, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry:

Senate Concurrent Resolution A

Senate Concurrent Resolution A

Be it resolved by the Senate of the State of North Dakota (the house of representatives concurring)—

Whereas during the present depression the original cost of producing meat and grain products is greatly in excess of the price now realized by the sale of the same, and that by reason thereof farmers are unable to pay their bills and debts, and each year find themselves further behind with their debts and obligations, and if the above situation continues for any additional length of time the farmers will lose their homes and all; and

Whereas during the time farmers are operating at a loss they cannot be purchasers of other manufactured products, and such industries will in turn fail for lack of business; and that all business of every kind and nature will be affected by this injustice to agriculture; and ness or every kind and nature will be allected by this injustice to agriculture; and

Whereas it follows that every kind of business located in the agricultural communities must rise or fall with the farmers, and that the important and absolutely essential industry of agriculture cannot be stricken down without causing disaster to the country as a whole; and whereas the placing of an embargo on the products mentioned would stabilize the prices thereof and bring such prices more in harmony with the production costs, together with a fair margin of profit, and bring the farmers out of the dire and distressing depression which now affects them: Now, therefore, be it Resolved by the Twenty-fourth Legislative Assembly of the State of North Dakota, That we respectfully petition the Congress of the United States to pass laws and provide rules and regulations to place an embargo on flax, wheat, hogs, cattle, and sheep, and upon pork, beef, and mutton products until such time as the prices of said grains, livestock, and meat products shall cover the cost of said grains, livestock, and meat products shall cover the cost of production, and we further petition that the law now permitting wheat to be milled in bond be repealed; be it further wheat to be milled in bond be repealed; be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be forwarded to the President of the United States, to both Houses of the Congress of the United States, and each Member thereof from this State, to the Secretary of Agriculture, and to each house of the legislative assembly of those States whose legislatures are now in session.

Whereas the Frazier-Lemke remarke bin, being S. 212 and H. R. 2066 in the Congress of the United States, provides for the liquidating and refinancing of agricultural indebtedness at a reduced rate of interest, through the Farm Credit Administration and the Federal land banks; and

Whereas the Frazier-Lemke bill has the endorsement of 22 State legislatures, and in addition the lower houses of the States of New York and Delaware, and of many commercial clubs, chambers of commerce, bank organizations, and of business and professional men and women, as well as the great majority of the farmers of this Nation; and

Whereas the enactment of this bill will have a vital effect not only upon agriculture, but upon all classes of industry; and Whereas agriculture is the basic industry of this country, and there can be no recovery until agriculture is put upon a sound basis: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That it is the sense of your memorialists, the Legislature of Texas, the senate and the house concurring, that the Congress of the United States should enact the Frazier-Lemke bill without further delay; and be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this memorial, duly authenticated, be sent by the secretary of state to the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the United States, and to each Senator and Representative in Congress from this State, to the President of the United States, and to United States Senator Lynn J. Frazier and Congressman William Lemke.

Walter F. Woodul,

Senate Concurrent Resolution A

Be it resolved by the Senate of the State of North Dakota (the house of representatives concurring):

Whereas the United States Constitution under article I, section s, providing for powers granted to Congress, among other things, specifically provides "the Congress shall have power to coin money, regulate the value thereof and of foreign coins, and fix the standard of weights and measures"; and

Whereas this function and governmental power has been turned over to the national banks and thereby placed in the practical control of such banks; and

Whereas the use and abuse of this power has placed the economic direction and control of our country in the hands of a few men, and thereby determining its destiny; and

Whereas by reason of the delegation of this governmental power a few men own the great mass of wealth and property in this country; and country; and

Whereas the result of such system was foretold by Jefferson, who said, "Already they have raised up a money aristocracy that has set the Government at defiance. The issuing power should be taken from the banks and restored to the Government and the people, to whom it rightfully belongs", and Lincoln said, "The money power of the country will endeavor to prolong its reign by working upon the prejudices of the people until all wealth is aggregated in a few hands and the Republic is destroyed. I feel at this time more anxious for my country than even in the midst of war", and Woodrow Wilson said, "The great monopoly in this country is the money monopoly. So long as that exists our liberty and freedom and individual energy of development are out of the question.

* * This is the greatest question of all, and to this statesmen must address themselves with an earnest determination to serve the long future and the true liberties of men"; and

Whereas it is necessary that this great power be restored to the Government and its people, even though the hour is late:

Now, therefore, we urge upon Congress the passage of all necessary laws to reestablish the issuing of money as a monopoly of Government, and that there be established a system of Government banks exclusively owned, to the end that a bank system be provided for the people at cost; be it further

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution of the Legislature of the State of Indiana, which was referred to the Committee on | Interstate Commerce:

concurrent resolution memorializing Congress to extend to the States the privilege of imposing a nondiscriminatory tax upon retail sales in interstate commerce

Whereas necessity for property tax relief is imperative in Indiana, as well as in other States throughout the Union; and Whereas more than half of the States in an effort to afford propperty tax relief and to provide revenue for essential functions of government have enacted laws imposing taxes based upon or measured by sales or tangible property purchased and delivered in such States: and

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution of the Legislature of the State of Minnesota, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce:

concurrent resolution memorializing Congress to authorize the States to tax sales and gross income and/or gross arising from transactions in interstate commerce

Whereas the tax burden upon real estate and tangible personal property is at this time the heaviest in the history of the State of Minnesota and in many instances amounts to confiscation, and a similar situation exists in many other States in the Nation; and Whereas by reason of economic conditions and of the necessity

whereas by reason of economic conditions and of the hecestry of appropriations for relief in the State of Minnesota and throughout the Nation, it has become imperatively necessary for the State of Minnesota and other States to seek new sources of revenue, such as the sales tax and the gross-income tax, and to use the revenue thus received in part to relieve the unconscionable burden now resting upon real estate and tangible personal property; and property; and
Whereas neither sales taxes nor gross-income taxes may be im-

Whereas neither sales taxes nor gross-income taxes may be imposed upon transactions in interstate commerce and thus many billions of dollars of income from sales and gross receipts entirely escape such taxation by the State: Now, therefore, be it Resolved by the Senate of the State of Minnesota (the house of representatives concurring), That we earnestly urge the Congress of the United States to pass appropriate legislation so that the several States may have power to tax sales and gross income arising from interstate commerce; Be it further

Resolved, That the secretary of state is hereby directed to send a duly authenticated copy of this resolution to the President of the United States, Vice President of the United States, Speaker of the House of Representatives, and to each Member of the Senate and Congress from the State of Minnesota.

Concurrent Resolution 14

A concurrent resolution memorializing the Congress of the United States to enact a Federal antilynching law

Whereas more than 15 citizens of the United States in widely scattered sections of the country have been lynched during the past year, though a great decrease over the previous year, yet sufficient to cause public expression of condemnation thereof to be made throughout the land; and

Whereas lynching is an unleastful depression of the land;

made throughout the land; and Whereas lynching is an unlawful deprivation of the rights of the citizens to the protection of article VI of the amendments to the Constitution of the United States which reads as follows:
"In all criminal prosecutions the accused shall enjoy the right to a speedy and public trial, by an impartial jury of the State and district wherein the crime shall have been committed, * *

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following resolutions of the General Court of Massachusetts, which were referred to the Committee on Finance:

Resolutions memorializing Congress in favor of the immediate cash payment of the adjusted-service certificates of veterans of the World War

Whereas it appears that present national economic conditions warrant the extension of adequate relief to a large number of those who served in the armed forces of the United States Government who served in the armed forces of the United States Government during the recent World War; and

Whereas it appears that adjusted-service certificates were issued to those mentioned above by the Director of the United States Veterans' Bureau in compliance with section 501 of title V of the World War Adjusted Compensation Act; and

Whereas it appears that it is the consensus of opinion and the desire of a larger number of those who have received the above-mentioned certificates to realize the immediate cash value of their adjusted-service certificates: Therefore be it Resolved, That the General Court of Massachusetts respectfully represents to Congress and the President of the United States the advisability of providing for the immediate payment to war veterans of the face value of their adjusted-service compensation cer-erans of the face value of their adjusted-service compensation certificates; and be it further

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be forwarded forthwith by the secretary of the Commonwealth to the President of the United States, to the presiding officers of both branches of Congress, and to the Members thereof representing this Commonwealth.

Senate Joint Memorial 18

To the Honorable Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled:
We, your memorialists, the Thirty-eighth Legislative Assembly of the State of Oregon, convened in regular session, respectfully represent that:

represent that:

Whereas the ravages caused by prune thrips amount to millions of dollars of loss to the prune growers of Oregon; and
Whereas this pest is spreading rapidly into the adjoining States of California, Washington, and Idaho; and
Whereas the State of Oregon still is seriously suffering financially from the effects of the recent depression and cannot, therefore, finance necessary investigations and control measures: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate of the State of Oregon (the house of

therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate of the State of Oregon (the house of representatives jointly concurring therein), That we, your memorialists, the Thirty-eighth Legislative Assembly of the State of Oregon, convened in regular session, respectfully petition the Congress of the United States to make necessary appropriations available immediately to the United States Department of Agriculture, collaborating with the Oregon agricultural experiment station, to combat and control this pest; and be it further

Resolved, That the secretary of state of the State of Oregon be, and he hereby is, directed to forward a copy of this joint memorial, under his certificate and seal, to the President of the United States, the President of the United States Senate, the Speaker of the United States House of Representatives, the Secretary of Agriculture of the United States, and to each Member of the Oregon delegation in Congress.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following resolution of the House of Representatives of the State of Nebraska, which was ordered to lie on the table:

Resolution memorializing the Congress of the United States to pass the President's work-relief bill as submitted without further delay

Whereas there are many needy and unemployed people in the State of Nebraska and in other States of the United States who are in dire distress and who must have immediate relief if they are to receive the bare necessities of life; and

Whereas the President of the United States has presented a work-relief bill appropriating $4,800,000,000 for such relief; and

Whereas such sum of money is necessary to carry on the comprehensive relief program for the United States under present conditions; and conditions; and

Whereas this house is in complete accord with the President in the position which he has taken in his said work-relief bill whereby the amount of compensation paid for relief work shall not exceed $50 per month, a little less than the rate of pay which relief work-ers will be able to receive as and when they are again absorbed in the profitable pursuits of labor in connection with private indus-

the profitable pursuits of labor in connection with private industry; and

Whereas the failure of certain politicians in Congress promptly to pass the President's work-relief bill is causing unrest among those who, without fault of their own, find it impossible to procure work to obtain the necessities of life and uncertainty in business transactions in the several States: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives of the State of Nebraska in fiftieth session assembled—

1. That this house respectfully petitions and memorializes the Congress of the United States to pass with all convenient speed and celerity the President's work-relief bill, appropriating $4,800,-000,000 for the purposes therein set forth.

2. That the clerk of this house be hereby ordered and directed forthwith to forward a copy of this resolution, properly authenticated and suitably engrossed, to the President of the United States, to the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the United States, and to each of the United States Senators representing the State of Nebraska, and to each of the Congressmen in the House of Representatives of the United States representing the State of Nebraska, to take such steps as may be necessary without further delay to the end that said work-relief appropriation bill shall immediately be enacted into law.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution of the Legislature of Puerto Rico, which was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency:

- I, Enrique Gonzalez Mena, secretary of the Senate of Puerto Rico, do hereby certify that the following concurrent resolution was unanimously approved by the Senate of Puerto Rico on Feb-ruary 19, 1935, and by the house of representatives on March 5,
- Concurrent resolution to petition the Congress of the United States of America to make extensive to Puerto Rico the benefits of the act in regard to the insurance of deposits in banking institutions, and especially those derived from the activities of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation

"Whereas it is unquestionable that the inclusion of Puerto Rico in the benefits of the Deposit Insurance Corporation created by virtue of amendments introduced into the Federal Reated by virtue of amendments introduced into the Federal Reserve Act would considerably improve the condition of insular credit bound up in the local banks organized under the laws of Puerto Rico with Puerto Rican capital;

"Whereas such inclusion of Puerto Rico in the benefits of said organization will place the local banks in circumstances similar to those of the national banks doing business in Puerto Rico, and will avoid unjust and unequal competition on the part of national banking institutions against those organized under the laws of Puerto Rico;

"Whereas insular credit requires that the native credit institutions organized with local capital, where numerous interests of the country are united, be placed on the same plane of action as the national banking institutions doing business in this island of Puerto Rico, and be protected in like manner by national legislation so that no new uneasiness may be caused in our economic structure, actually bankrupted by the acute economic depression through which we have been passing for the last few years; last few years;

last few years;

"Whereas neither the previous act creating the Deposit Insurance Corporation nor the pending bills now under the consideration of the Congress of the United States, and especially the Steagall banking bill, H. R. 5357, include Puerto Rico, notwithstanding the fact that the benefits of the act are made extensive to the Territories of Hawaii and Alaska;

"Whereas it is urgently necessary that all said legislation include Puerto Rico, making its benefits extensive to the local credit institutions established, organized, and operating under the laws of Puerto Rico;

"Whereas by this resolution the Legislature of Puerto Rico expresses its desire, willingness, and wish that the benefits of the said Deposit Insurance Act be extended to Puerto Rico, and the credit corporations and institutions and banks organized under the laws of this island and doing business in Puerto Rico, receive the benefits thereof: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved by the Senate of Puerto Rico (the House of Representatives of Puerto Rico concurring):

"Section 1. That the Congress of the United States of America be petitioned, and it is hereby petitioned, to make extensive to Puerto Rico the benefits of the Deposit Insurance Act, and likewise to extend to our island all the activities of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation so that all credit institutions and banks organized under the laws of Puerto Rico may receive its banks organized under the laws of Puerto Rico may receive its benefits.

"SEC. 2. That as the said measure is also of prime importance for the guaranteeing of insular credit, the President of the United States of America is likewise petitioned to intervene and give his decided cooperation toward securing for this island all the benefits of the said act.

"SEC. 3. That a copy of this resolution be sent by air mail, immediately after its passage, to the President of the United States, to both Houses of Congress of the United States of America, to the Chief of the Division of Territories and Possessions of the Department of the Interior of the United States, and to the Resident Commissioner of Puerto Rico in Washington, requesting the latter to give his whole cooperation to the peti-tion herein contained; and that a copy be sent to the Governor of Puerto Rico, asking for his cooperation."

For transmittal to the President of the Senate of the United States I have hereunto set my hand and caused to be affixed the seal of the Senate of Puerto Rico on this 6th day of March 1935.

Enrique Gonzalez Mena,

Secretary of the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution of the Legislature of the Territory of Hawaii, which was referred to the Committee on Territories and Insular Affairs:

Whereas the strategic military and naval position of the Territory is well known throughout the world and has been made manifest through recent large appropriations by the Congress of the United States to strengthen the defenses of the islands; and Whereas some 7,000 former service men, including many veterans

Whereas some 7,000 former service men, including many veterans of the World War, are now resident in this Territory; and Whereas the only hospitalization facilities available in this Territory for any of these 7,000 former service men in the event of sickness or disease are at the Pearl Harbor Naval Hospital when a bed or beds may not be needed to care for any ailing man on active service with the United States naval forces; and Whereas records on file in the Veterans' Bureau at Washington, D. C., of a survey made by the Honorable Lawrence M. Judd, then Governor of Hawaii, through his addutant general showed the dire

Governor of Hawaii, through his adjutant general, showed the dire necessity for additional hospitalization facilities for the use of former service men and that at least 90 beds are needed at once:

Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate of the Territory of Hawaii (the house of representatives concurring), That the Congress of the United States be petitioned, through the Governor of Hawaii and the Delegate from Hawaii to Congress, to provide adequate funds for the establishment in Hawaii of a home for the Territory of Hawaii as a branch of the National Military Home; and be it further Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be transmitted to the Vice President of the United States, the Speaker of the House of Representatives, the Governor of Hawaii, and the Delegate from the Governor of Hawaii, and the Delegate from Representatives. Hawaii to the Congress of the United States.

Assembly joint resolution petitioning the Honorable Harry L. Hop-kins, Federal Emergency Relief Administrator of the United States, for an allotment of funds in the sum of $27,000 for the aid and relief of the Clark County school system at Las Vegas, in Clark County, Nev.

Whereas the influx of thousands of people with their families was brought about through the construction of the Boulder Dam, near Las Vegas, in Clark County, Nev., with a great increase in the number of children of school age; and

Whereas the school population of the high school at Las Vegas, which in normal times have a total enrollment of 285 students; and

Whereas the accommodation of students in the Las Vegas schools from Boulder City increased this normal school enrollment to more than 600; and

Whereas Boulder City is situated approximately 26 miles from the Las Vegas schools, making it necessary that transportation should be provided for the children living at Boulder City and attending the Las Vegas school, which cost of transportation is at the rate of $55 per day; and

Whereas the school funds in this district have been depleted to the extent that on and after the 1st day of March teachers will be unable to draw their pay; and
Whereas this condition of affairs has been brought about by the

Whereas this condition of affairs has been brought about by the honest efforts and the requirements of the law in the State of Nevada to properly educate the young in this State, by reason of which efforts the children of Boulder City were accorded the same opportunities as those normally resident of said district; and Whereas unless relief can be obtained from the Federal Government to alleviate this condition it will be equivalent to penalizing the parents and students of Clark County for conditions that have been brought about by being fair to the Federal Government; Now, therefore be it

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to which were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment and submitted reports thereon:

S. 380. A bill to reserve 80 acres on the public domain for the use and benefit of the Kanosh Band of Indians in the State of Utah (Rept. No. 309);

S. 612. A bill for the benefit of the Omaha and Winnebago Indians of Nebraska (Rept. No. 310);

S. 654. A bill authorizing the exchange of the lands reserved for the Seminole Indians in Florida for other lands (Rept. No. 311)

S. 1142. A bill to reserve certain public-domain lands in Nevada and Oregon as a grazing reserve for Indians of Fort McDermitt, Nevada (Rept. No. 312);

S. 1498. A bill for the relief of Robert D. Baldwin (Rept. No. 313):

S. 1499. A bill for the relief of Robert J. Enochs (Rept. No. 314):

S. 1502. A bill for the relief of Charles L. Graves (Rept. No. 315);

S. 1520. A bill for the relief of Charles E. Dagenett (Rept. No. 316); and

S. 1814. A bill to authorize the creation of an Indian village within the Shoalwater Indian Reservation, Wash., and for other purposes (Rept. No. 317).

Mr. HATCH, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 1831) transferring certain national-forest lands to the Zuni Indian Reservation, N. Mex., reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 318) thereon.

Mr. FRAZIER, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 1942) to repeal the act entitled "An act to grant to the State of New York and the Seneca Nation of Indians jurisdiction over the taking of fish and game within the Allegany, Cattaraugus, and Oil Spring Indian Reservations", approved January 5, 1927, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 319) thereon

Mr. POPE, from the Committee on Mines and Mining, to which was referred the bill (S. 1476) to provide for unemployment relief through development of mineral resources; to assist the development of privately owned mineral claims; to provide for the development of emergency and deficiency minerals; and for other purposes, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 320) thereon.

BILLS INTRODUCED

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. MALONEY:

A bill (S. 2222) granting a pension to Jane A. Britton; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. ASHURST (by request):

A bill (S. 2223) to amend section 1 of the act of July 8, 1932; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. DUFFY:

A bill (S. 2224) making it unlawful for jurors who have served in criminal trials to move or travel in interstate or foreign commerce to give a public performance for profit involving the giving of information as to what transpired at such trial; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. BAILEY:

A bill (S. 2225) authorizing adjustment of the claim of the Western Union Telegraph Co.; to the Committee on Claims. By Mr. NEELY:

A bill (S. 2226) for the relief of David J. Pritchard; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. TYDINGS:

A bill (S. 2227) for the relief of John T. Armstrong; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. BANKHEAD:

A bill (S. 2228) to provide for the further development of cooperative agricultural extension work and the more complete endowment and support of land-grant colleges and agricultural experiment stations; to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

By Mr. RUSSELL:

A bill (S. 2229) for the relief of Nellie S. Barbee; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. TRAMMELL:

A bill (S. 2230) to authorize the Secretary of the Navy to acquire a suitable site at Pearl Harbor, Territory of Hawaii, for a rear range light; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. WAGNER:

A bill (S. 2231) prohibiting homestead entry on certain public lands; to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys. By Mr. McCARRAN:

A bill (S. 2232) to terminate certain foreign trade agreements and to terminate the authority to enter into them; to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

A bill (S. 2233) to provide for the bonding of Federal officials and employees; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED

The bill (H. R. 6359) to repeal certain provisions relating to publicity of certain statements of income was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Finance.

PUBLICITY OF INCOME-TAX RETURNS-AMENDMENT

Mr. LA FOLLETTE submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 6359) to repeal certain provisions relating to publicity of certain statements of income, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

COMMITTEE ON AVIATION AND RADIO

Mr. McADOO submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 101), which was referred to the Committee on Rules:

Resolved, That rule XXV of the Standing Rules of the Senate be, and the same is hereby, amended by inserting, on page 30, after the seventh line of paragraph 1, the following:
"Committee on Aviation and Radio, to consist of 15 Senators."

THE MERCHANT MARINE-ADDRESS BY SENATOR WALSH

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that there may be printed in the RECORD a very valuable and instructive address delivered last evening over the radio by our colleague the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Walsh]. The address relates to the merchant marine. heard a portion of it over the radio, and I was sorry I did not hear it all. When I get my copy of the RECORD tomorrow I shall take the opportunity of reading the address in full. I ask unanimous consent that it may be inserted in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Representing in part in the United States Senate a State whose early history was conspicuously associated with maritime activities, I have long been of the opinion that an adequate merchant marine is one of the major requirements of the United States.

In times of peace we need a merchant fleet in order that our trade may be extended and protected with adequate service at fair and reasonable rates

and reasonable rates.

In times of war, whether this country or others alone be involved, the need for adequate shipping facilities is even more imperative. If the United States is engaged in combat, our merchant fleet serves as an auxiliary to our Army and Navy operations.

If other countries are involved in strife, their merchant vessels will be chiefly in war activities and will be withdrawn from American commerce. In the absence of an American merchant marine, the result will be American products piling up at our terminals for lack of shipping facilities, or transportation only in foreign bottoms at exorbitant rates and uncertain service.

Today our merchant marine facilities are inadequate to effective the service of the service of the service of the service of the service.

Today our merchant marine facilities are inadequate to effectively meet the requirements of either peace or war. Our tonnage has declined in both size and effectiveness since the close of the World War. In numbers they may appear adequate, but in effectiveness they are not. Our fleet is weak because most of its vessels are old and slow. Worst of all, arrangements are not being made rapidly enough for replacement of ships when they pass the age of usefulness.

Our merchant fleet operating in international trade, carrying goods and passengers, is only approximately one-fourth the size of Great Britain's and about the same size as that of Japan. From the total number of our merchant ships it would appear that we have almost three times as many ships as are listed above. The catch in that fact is that many of them are engaged in coastwise

Were war to break out tomorrow, it would be necessary for the United States Navy to take over a large part of American merchant shipping for auxiliary work. Even then, this arm of our national defense would be far short of our requirements. Our national defense would be seriously endangered by a lack of certain types of merchant vessels which naval authorities declare are absolutely essential to the waging of successful warfare.

President Roosevelt, in a recent message to Congress, has called attention to our inadequate merchant-marine facilities and urged remedial action during the present session of Congress. Senators and Representatives already are studying the problem attentively, and I am urging all citizens who believe in a strong line of national defense to vigorously support the administration program for an adequate merchant marine.

The President in addressing Congress presented outstanding and for an adequate merchant marine.

The President in addressing Congress presented outstanding and imperative reasons for an adequate merchant fleet, as follows:

"To me there are three reasons for answering the question in the affirmative. The first is that in time of peace, subsidies granted by other nations, shipping combines, and other restrictive or rebating methods, may well be used to the detriment of American shippers. The maintenance of fair competition alone, calls for American flag ships of sufficient tonnage to carry a reasonable portion of our foreign commerce.

merican hag sings of summerce to carry a reasonable portion of our foreign commerce.

"Second, in the event of a major war in which the United States is not involved, our commerce in the absence of an adequate American merchant marine, might find itself seriously crippled because of its inability to secure bottoms for neutral peaceful foreign trade.

"Third, in the event of a war in which the United States itself might be appraged American flag ships are obviously needed not might be engaged, American flag ships are obviously needed, not only for naval auxiliaries, but also for the maintenance of reasonable and necessary commercial intercourse with other nations. We only for haval auxiliaries, but also for the maintenance of reasonable and necessary commercial intercourse with other nations. We should remember lessons learned in the last war."

The American merchant marine problem is not a political question. It is a patriotic question. It is one of economics as well as military defense. Presidents of the United States, beginning with George Washington, have recognized it as such. All of them have stressed the urgent need of a strong merchant fleet.

Up to the period prior to 1860 the Nation recognized the need for possessing and maintaining a merchant fleet strong enough at all times to cope with fleets of other nations.

In the days of sailing vessels the United States held a strong position in world shipping. My own State of Massachusetts was rich in maritime history during the clipper-ship period. Prior to 1860 we carried over three-quarters of our foreign commerce in American bottoms. Since that time other nations have been permitted to wrest commercial sea supremacy from us. In 1910 we reached the low point in our shipping activities, carrying less than 9 percent of our foreign commerce under the American flag. And today, despite the fact that exigencies caused by the World War compelled us to spend more than $3,000,000,000 in rehabilitating our merchant fleet, we are actually carrying only a third of our foreign trade.

Our shortsightedness compelled us to spend in 20 months for of our foreign trade.

Our shortsightedness compelled us to spend in 20 months for an emergency fleet an amount twice the sum of the value of the ocean-going fleets of the world before the war. And even this stupendous expenditure only served during the emergency and did not provide an adequate, competitive merchant marine for the United States. Practically 90 percent of this expenditure was lost so far as providing for a permanent merchant marine. This experience is a painful illustration of the cost of our lack of perparedness.

In 1933, the last year for which official figures are available, ships flying the American flag represented only about 8 percent of the total tonnage of all countries participating in international trade

This failure on our part to occupy a prominent position in world shipping is due to a gravely erroneous impression. The argument is repeatedly and regularly advanced here and abroad that there always will be enough foreign vessels to take care of our requirements. This assertion is fallacious and dangerous to our national welfare. The price of such a policy is too big to pay, as has been conclusively demonstrated prior to and after our entry into the World War World War.

World War.

It is true that in peace times foreign vessels generally may be obtained to carry American goods, but at what a price! An official report made by the Secretary of the Treasury in 1915 estimated that agriculture and industry paid foreign ship owners in increased freight rates during that 1 year alone a total of $311,684,400. It was estimated that our people were taxed over a billion dollars during the 3 years before our entry into the World War for transporting their products through increased rates. This vast sum went mostly into the pockets of foreign ship owners.

Let us now consider this plea for the use of foreign bottoms from the defense standpoint. We were in a tragic situation at the outbreak of the World War because we had practically no merchant fleet to use as a naval auxiliary. Having been lulled into the belief that we probably never would be involved in another war, and that if we did become involved in one, we could easily obtain merchant vessels under charter from other countries, we were woefully unprepared when the demand for ships to carry troops and supplies to them arose. The result was that we suffered a costly delay and that we had to pay exorbitant sums of fered a costly delay and that we had to pay exorbitant sums of money to foreign nations for the use of their vessels, most of these vessels being used to carry the American soldiers that helped the Allies win the war.

The United States paid to Great Britain and France alone during the war period a total of $120,576,150.07 for the transport of our troops and war supplies. The War Department estimates that Great Britain's share of this sum for the carrying of United States troops alone was $91,992,900. This tremendous amount of money would have built many American ships. Undoubtedly it did go a long way toward paying for the ships of Great Britain, a nation that always has been foresighted enough to recognize the urgent ing systems for all companies participating in public funds, be necessity of always maintaining a strong merchant fleet. There set up. This and other safeguards are an imperative condition never was an hour during the World War that the United States to granting subsidies.

was not handicapped by a lack of auxiliary merchant vessels.

Any nation with an intelligent national-defense policy must support a naval-reserve personnel through its merchant marine. Yet the United States had no such reserve at the outbreak of the World War, and it has no such reserve now. During the war it actually had to take men from naval vessels to man merchant ships. By way of contrast, at the outset of hostilities Great Britain drew upon its merchant ships for 16,000 men to supplement its naval personnel. It is ridiculous to compare the relative strength of the navies of the nations without including their merchant-marine strength.

Our unfortunate experiences in the war should convince us of the necessity of no longer delaying plans for a merchant marine in the United States second to that of no other nation. Many efforts have been made, during the last 15 years (beginning with the Merchant Marine Act of 1920), to start such a movement, but we have been unsuccessful.

We have tried to build up our American merchant marine in several ways. First, by Government operation of shipping lines, and then through the sale of Government vessels at low prices to private operators, and again through subsidies paid to operators under the guise of mail-pay contracts. All these efforts have resulted in failure. The mail-contract subsidies increased from $9.304,217 in 1928 to $27,012,519 in 1934.

Today out of 37,400,000 tons of vessels engaging in international trade, Great Britain leads with 14,119,000, and the others rank in the following order: United States, 3,084,000; Japan, 3,049,000; Germany, 2,832,000; France, 2,571,000; Italy, 2,264,000; and all others, 9,481,000.

Germany, 2,832,0 others, 9,481,000,

Speed today is one of the outstanding requirements of merchant vessels, and in this regard the United States is in a relatively weak position. It ranks fifth in tonnage of ships with speeds of 12 knots and upward. Great Britain, Germany, France, and Japan all exceed this country in the speed of vessels. Seven countries—Great Britain, Germany, Italy, Norway, Netherlands, Japan, and France—all have more model vessels (vessels of less than 10 years of age) than the United States. than 10 years of age) than the United States.

Admiral George H. Rock, former chief constructor of the United States Navy, recently testified before a Government committee that the United States ranks lower in cargo vessels of 2,000 gross tons or over (which means ocean-going types), built within the last 10 years, than any other country having shipping except Spain. Figures compiled a few years ago show Great Britain has 735 such vessels as compared with a total of 9 for the United States. Even Norway has approximately 15 times as many vessels of this type as the United States.

President Roosevelt, whose experience as Assistant Secretary of the Navy led him to study and understand our shipping problem, recognizes the need for a strong merchant marine, and is meeting the issue in his usual straightforward manner.

meeting the issue in his usual straightforward manner.

He frankly urges that the country do away with all subterfuges, admit that subsidies are necessary to successful operation of United States merchant vessels in competition with the ships of other nations, and then for the Congress to grant these subsidies openly and squarely and call them by their right name.

This recommendation is, in my opinion, one of the greatest and most courageous contributions that has been made toward an American merchant marine. We have avoided too long the fact that this Nation's shipping needs cannot exist without fact that this Nation's shipping needs cannot exist without subsidies.

American shipping must be supported by subsidies for the obvious reason that it costs more to build and operate vessels under the United States flag than under other flags. We have a higher standard of living in this country and this fact is re-higher standard of living in this country and this fact is reflected in building and operating costs.

A cargo vessel may be built in a British yard for about five-eighths of what the same vessel would cost if built in a United States yard. This increased cost is reflected in many items, including materials, labor, and supplies. The erroneous impression exists in some quarters that wages are chiefly responsible for these added charges. Wages are a contributing factor, but it is unfair to say that they are the only one.

Increased operating costs under the American flag are easily explained; for example, the wages, food, and repairs are higher than on foreign ships. The average wage paid American seamen is about $56.50 per month, and some operators pay even more than this amount. Contrasted with seamen's wages on foreign ships, in some instances less than half, the difference in operating expenses is easily recognizable.

President Roosevelt proposes that a Government subsidy be paid to provide for the difference in building and operating costs. That is the issue, directly and clearly stated.

The payment of these necessary subsidies must meet with the approval of our citizens if we are to have a merchant marine. In behalf of the American taxpayer, it is only fair to say that some operators in the past have not been square in dealing with the Government. They have taken unfair advantage of the tax-payers in obtaining public funds appropriated primarily to build new ships, and dissipated some of these funds for other purposes, such as exorbitant salaries, dividends, real estate, and other ventures. The interdepartmental committee appointed to study this guestion in its report to the Passident which he trans ventures. The interdepartmental committee appointed to study this question, in its report to the President, which he trans-mitted with his message to Congress, strongly urged that maxi-mum safeguards, including the installation of uniform account-to granting subsidies.

The American taxpayer, I believe, is ready and willing to help any legitimate ship operator expand foreign trade and to aid him in making ships available to the country in time of war, but he is not willing that his hard-earned money shall be dissipated. Hence, it is the duty of the Congress and administrative officials to see that no loopholes are left open so that the taxpayer may be wronged in future subsidy operations.

Another proposal made by the interdepartmental committee, which I heartily endorse, proposes the establishment of a Naval Reserve to be manned by members of the merchant marine. If this suggestion is adopted, young men would be given training in sea duty on merchant vessels in peace times and stand in readiness to serve their country in emergency periods. This not only would create a new line of defense for the United States, but it also would give employment and invaluable training to many would create a new line of defense for the United States, but it also would give employment and invaluable training to many young men who are now without employment or who may have a real desire to make the sea a career.

Throughout my public life I have always advocated a strong merchant marine, and it has been a pleasure to reiterate my faith in it tonight. President Roosevelt has, I believe, laid down a splendid program for our merchant marine, and I for one shall do my utmost to bring about its adoption.

INCOME-TAX PUBLICITY-ADDRESS BY SENATOR METCALF

Mr. STEIWER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have published in the RECORD an address delivered over a radio network on March 11, 1935, by the senior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. Metcalf] urging repeal of the incometax publicity law.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

I should like to ask my listeners a question: Suppose the Congress should propose the enactment of a law which would require you to furnish any person who might ask you for it a complete you gave to charity, and the general details of your financial transactions? Would you object to such a law? Could you defend it on any ground whatsoever?

Suppose the newspapers of your city made it a practice to publish on the front page the total amount of your income, the deductions from your income tax, and the general facts concerning your financial transactions during the year? Would you favor that? How would it affect your plans and hopes for the future? Would you like your neighbors, your fellow workers, your competitors, your creditors, and your debtors to have details of your personal

Unfortunately, the Congress of the United States, during a thoughtless moment, passed just such a law. Now, that we are beginning to understand the full effect of this law, a drive has been undertaken to repeal it. The requirements are simply this: Every person in the United States who is required to file an income-tax return, whether he pays a tax or not, must also file a "pink slip" on which is certified the total gross income during the year, together with the amount of contributions to charity and other items de-with the amount of contributions to charty and owner items and ductible for income-tax purposes.

This "pink slip" is to be available to anyone who might wish to inquire into the personal financial affairs of anyone else. It will be available to the gossip monger, the racketeer, the kidnaper, the collection agency, the blackmailer, and the seller of lists of persons presumed to be easy prey of the crooked and corrupt.

There is a wide-spread objection to the "pink slip", which will become nothing more or less than a racketeers' directory. It affects the affairs of every person in the United States, and all citizens of the United States have every reason to object violently to such unwarranted intrusion into their personal affairs.

When the income-tax amendment was adopted 20 years ago, it was followed by legislation passed with the distinct understanding that the private affairs of the individual, revealed in confidence to the Government, should remain inviolate. That confidence is now to be abolished, and the private business of our citizens is to be revealed to blackmallers, racketeers, curiosity seekers, and gossip mongers, along with the very few persons who may, for some yet unknown reason, have a legitimate use for such information

Persons who have reason to feel incensed over this outrageous law can be divided into two groups. They are the nearly 5,000,000 citizens who file an income-tax return and the remaining millions who do not. In these dark days the millions who do not file a return have every reason to cry out against this unfair invasion of their private affairs. There are millions of persons in every walk of life, who have been struggling against adversity during the past 2 years.

There are men and women with large potential earning power who live in the hope that the tide of depression will turn and they may once again assume their place in the affairs of the country. Men and women who once earned a comfortable living and look forward to that possibility again should resist vigorously the flaunting of their names before the world as people who last year were unable to earn enough to file a tax return, and consequently have filed no tax return. How can the people who want and hope to work, to increase their earnings, expect to maintain the credit and self-respect necessary to regain their normal place in the world, if every Tom, Dick, and Harry can meet them on the street and say, "Well, your income was small last year. Why should you expect more this year? How can one rely on your credit?"

Every man with business experience knows that the credit of an individual depends as much upon his record for paying his bills and on his integrity of character as it does on the facts of income. There are many people in this country who can build up their small business enterprises so long as they have the invaluable resource of good credit behind them. Faith in the moral integrity of a human being is much more important in granting credit than the inaccurate and piecemeal information which may be gleaned by curiosity seekers from the "pink slips." Why should we jeopardize the standing of people who are proud and honest, simply because the Government does not publish the facts of a large income during the past year? Is it fair? I ask my listeners—is there one iota of justice in such an act?

There is not one thing to be said in favor of income-tax publicity. The idea of its sponsors is that publicity will help the Government collect more taxes by causing the citizen's neighbors, competitors, and personal enemies to inform the Government of any suspicions as to false returns. Something might be said for such a theory if the "pink slip" really exposed the truth about a man's income. But this it does not do. Gross income means absolutely nothing unless the expenditures set off against it are made known. One man might have a gross business income of a hundred thousand dollars a year and legal expenditures in connection with that of $90,000 a year. A second man may have a gross income of only $15,000 a year, but expenditures of only $3,000. In such a case the man with a gross income of $100,000 actually has a net income of less than the man whose gross is 15 thousand. Although the larger business employs more men, while more assets are at stake and the hope of future increase is greater, his has a net income of less than the man whose gross is 15 thousand. Although the larger business employs more men, while more assets are at stake and the hope of future increase is greater, his return actually gives a much weaker financial picture than the smaller business. Unless one knows the full details of a man's income and expenditures there can be no evidence whatever of an effort to avoid the payment of legitimate taxes. Thus the whole purpose of the "pink slip" is lost. It fails to serve any desirable purpose.

Wisconsin has experimented with income-tax publicity with sad results. Honest citizens have been subjected to the prying eyes of jealous and suspicious neighbors. Racketeers and kidnapers have available a perfect directory for prospective victims of their crimes. And the whole experiment has led to an admission of failure on the part of the Wisconsin Tax Commission.

The Commission has stated as follows:

The Commission has stated as follows:

"Experience has taught us that this (publicity) is not a true adjunct to the disclosure of additional income and has become a source of nuisance by credit agencies, bond salesmen, and business competitors. We have no instances where public inspection has brought forth unreported incomes, and, although a matter of conjecture, we believe that it has retarded the making of complete returns. It has worked to a direct disadvantage as far as the Federal Government is concerned."

The failure of the law in the State of Wisconsin should be a Federal Government is concerned."

The failure of the law in the State of Wisconsin should be a lesson for the Nation at large. It will lead to the preparation and sale of lists of income-tax payers available to all sorts of quack salesmen, stock promoters, blackmailers, business competitors, and curiosity seekers. There is nothing in the statute that would prevent any blackmailer or ex-convict from examining your incometax return or finding out whether or not you have filed one. The increase of the state o vent any blackmailer or ex-convict from examining your incometax return or finding out whether or not you have filed one. The inquisitor need not even reveal his identity.

Such a system will inevitably lead to petty jealousies in communities and among men and women who work together. All of the employees of any institution may know exactly what sort of a return their fellow workers have made. Suspicion will run riot. Jealousies will spring up where harmony and friendship once existed. Credit will be jeopardized for many who deserve credit. Churches and charities will see their donors subjected to a public inquisition. This is un-American and unjust.

The "pink slip" opens up to public scrutiny the private affairs of this country. No free nation can conscientiously subscribe to such a law. The publication of incomplete and inaccurate tax data can under no circumstances reveal a true picture of the financial integrity of an individual, but it can easily have the opposite effect of undermining this integrity. It will encourage high-pressure collectors and force struggling and honest small business men into bankruptcy. It will enable unscrupulous competitors of small business men to take unfair advantage of the taxpayer. Professional men will have revealed to their clients their small incomes, often the result of the inability of these clients to pay their bills, thereby damaging the professional standing of doctors, lawyers, and engineers of ability and character. Young men will be embarrassed by new undertakings simply because these undertakings have not shown a profit during the past year. And most dangerous of all, the fortunate few who have managed to earn a comfortable income will be made the targets of kidnapers, blackmailers, high-pressure stock promoters, and confidence men.

The income-tax publicity clause should be repealed. A bill to

The income-tax publicity clause should be repealed. A bill to do this today passed the House of Representatives by a 3-to-1 vote, and tomorrow it will go to the Senate Finance Committee, To be effective, this repeal should take place before March 15, for by then the "pink slip" directory for racketeers will already be under way. What do my listeners think?

Of my listeners who are not filing an income-tax return this year, I should like to ask: Do you believe this fact should be public information? Do you think all of your neighbors, and your competitors, and your creditors, all your friends and enemies, should be told that your income for the year was less than $1,000? Particularly if this fact will serve no good purpose?

Do you want your enemies writing to the Bureau of Internal Revenue stating their belief that you should have made a return and subject you to the inquisition of revenue agents? I am sure all honest and fair-minded Americans would resent this.

Of my listeners who are filing an income-tax return this year I ask: Do you believe the Government should open up to the prying eyes of all curious or suspicious persons the facts concerning your income? What good purpose can it serve? Will it not subject you to the eternal nuisance of crooked promoters and high-pressure collectors who will take advantage of incomplete information? Do you want your private financial affairs aired in the newspapers, by the sellers of lists of persons presumed to be easy prey of the crooked and corrupt, and even over the radio?

the sellers of lists of persons presumed to be easy prey of the crooked and corrupt, and even over the radio?

It is a mistake to believe that the man with a big income will be the only one hurt by this publicity law. It is the little business man and the man with hardly any income at all who will suffer most. These men rely upon the faith of their fellow men and on the confidence which their character and past record has merited rather than on a few dubious facts made public by a "pink slip." To make every man's business the business of all can work no good. It can work only harm, particularly when the information to be made public is incomplete. Partial truths are worse than no truths at all.

The adoption of the publicity law was wrong in the first place. Let us admit our error and repeal it as quickly as possible, in order that our tax laws may be truly American tax laws and that the pride and self-reliance of American citizens may continue to be their greatest asset.

TWO YEARS OF THE NEW DEAL-EDITORIAL IN THE NEW YORK HERALD TRIBUNE

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the Congressional Record an editorial appearing in the New York Herald Tribune of Monday, March 4, 1935, entitled "Two Years of the New Deal."

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the New York Herald Tribune of Mar. 4, 1935] TWO YEARS OF THE NEW DEAL

Two years ago Franklin D. Roosevelt stood on the Capitol steps Two years ago Franklin D. Roosevelt stood on the Capitol steps and took the oath of office as President of the United States. He came into the White House in an hour of gloom. The low point of the depression had been reached and passed months before. But the confusions and hesitations of a national election and a shift of leaders had halted recovery and brought on a financial crisis. Mr. Roosevelt took command with the vigor and confidence of a born leader. By his voice on the air and by his example of smilling assurance he captured the imagination and loyalty of the American people. For months, through a series of swift and dazzling governmental adventures, he held that regard and lived on the heights of popularity.

Nothing could be plainer than that this attitude has changed

Nothing could be plainer than that this attitude has changed markedly in recent weeks. Faith has been replaced by criticism. Enthusiasm for the new deal is the exception. Where liking for the President personally remains there is suspicion and doubt of his administration. Part of this rapid and unexpected descent is undoubtedly due to the distrust awakened by a Farley and the petty malice exhibited toward a Robert Moses. But the main causes lie deeper in the character of the President and his record at Washington. They deserve examination as the country stands at this midway mark.

at Washington. They deserve examination as the country stands at this midway mark.

Any impartial review of that record must begin with the fact—which his admirers like to ignore—that he reversed his policies abruptly in the very first weeks of his Presidency. He had taken office pledged to economy as the only possible foundation of recovery, and he at first respected that pledge, forcing economy out of a reluctant Congress, to the applause of the whole country. Then he suddenly abandoned economy along with the dollar—which he had also pledged himself to maintain—and embarked on a vast program of governmental spending, coupled with a devaluation of the dollar. Both measures indicated a conversion to the pump-priming theory—that recovery could best be obtained through the artificial stimulation of business, domestic and foreign.

The suddenness of this somersault should perhaps have given pause to the national enthusiasm for the new deal. So might well the fantastic episode of gold buying to boost prices that followed. The monetary advice of an expert in dairy farming from Cornell proved so irresistible in Mr. Roosevelt's mind that he embarked the country upon what was probably the most ridiculous financial venture ever seriously undertaken by a great nation. It falled utterly, as all the financial experts predicted, and was silently abandoned. It was of less significance economically than it was as a forecast of the President's light-heartedness in juggling was as a forecast of the President's light-heartedness in juggling it was as a forecast of the Fresident's light-heartedness in jugging with the Nation's vital possessions.

But the Nation was kept too busy watching the letters of the alphabet form and reform in the air to give much thought to its dollar. It is only a year and a half ago that the extraordinary ballyhoo of N. R. A. first broke over the land. Theory, forethought, and common sense were alike forgotten in this appalling orgy of experimentation. The Russian system of a planned economy which it was sought to force upon American industry through threat of boycott, fine, and imprisonment, has since vanished almost as completely as have the dead cats with which General Johnson's picturesque vocabulary once darkened the sky. The wreckage remains, however, to clog business and delay recovery.

There was much more need and much clearer thinking behind

A. A. A. Secretary Wallace showed himself at the outset a far more candid, a far abler executive than anyone in the direction of N. R. A. The farmers' plight plainly called for help, as Republican efforts under Mr. Hoover bore witness. Unfortunately, what began in a spirit of frank experimentation, with the stress on cooperative, in a spirit of frank experimentation, with the stress on cooperative, voluntary action by individual farmers, gradually went out of hand. Like every bureaucratic interference with the individual, it grew by feeding on its victims until one field of farming after another was brought within its control. Mr. Wallace himself deprecated and doubted much that was done. His recent radical speech seemed the utterance of confusion, not to say despair.

The third great failure of the administration has unmistakably been in relief. Much can be forgiven here, for the problem has been pressing, grave, and enormously complex. But unfortunately here, as in every other field, Mr. Roosevelt has neither learned by experience nor helped the country to progress. Even the facts are still lacking. Nothing would be as valuable at the present moment as an accurate census of unemployment. Yet none exists. All that Mr. Roosevelt can think to do is to ask for $5,000,000,000 with which to make another gigantic experiment. The ideal held up—work relief—is appealing. The ways and means by which the unemployed can be put to work without destroying private business are unrevealed and, as far as anyone can discover, do not exist even in Mr. Roosevelt's wishful thinking. No wonder even an overwhelmingly Democratic Congress hesitates and asks questions.

The new deal has broken down, and the Nation is strewn with its realests.

The new deal has broken down, and the Nation is strewn with its whelmingly Democratic Congress hesitates and assist questions.

The new deal has broken down, and the Nation is strewn with its wreckage. So much seems plain. But who is to clear away the hampering remnants and save what needs to be saved? Has the President displayed either the judgment or the willingness to listen to criticism or the ability patiently to study facts to do this job of salvage that the situation urgently calls for?

By one of the swift ironies of time it is to the courts that the country turns for relief. Only a few months ago there was nothing so negligible in the eyes of a "new dealer" as the Supreme Court. If lip service was paid to the Constitution, behind the scenes there was frank talk of its obsolescence and of plans to pack the Supreme Court if it dared stand in the way of the Roosevelt 5-year plan. Now some of the most eloquent advocates of the administration view the decision of Judge Nields, kicking N. R. A. out the window, as the one hope left to Mr. Roosevelt. As for the Supreme Court, it spoke for the "conscience of the sovereign" in its gold-clause decision, and the administration is still pondering and silent. The President, by his hospitality to radical and alien ideas, by his attacks upon large groups of the community, by his own careless thinking and reckless acting, has opened the door to the wild men. Who is there in Washington—save the Supreme Court and the Constitution—to halt them?

The picture is not a cheerful one, and it speaks well for the heart and will of the country that it continues to hold its own and go forward despite every doubt and obstacle. There can be no solid and will of the country that it continues to hold its own and go forward despite every doubt and obstacle. There can be no solid foothold for any business man, or any investor, large or small, so long as the administration continues to foment labor troubles through section 7a; to threaten the utilities with destructive Govlong as the administration continues to foment labor troubles through section 7a; to threaten the utilities with destructive Government competition; to treat every business man like an unconvicted criminal, through regulation and threat of fine and imprisonment; to demand that a vast program of social insurance be improvised and installed in the midst of a depression; to insist upon a continuance of a hugely unbalanced Budget; and to build up a specter of inflation lying just below the horizon. Yet the great natural wealth and the great natural man power of the American Nation are plainly not likely to be defeated by any politicians. The curve of business shoots up and down, in and out of season, thanks to the artificial stimulants administered from Washington. Some broad advance was inevitable.

Such are, in our estimate, the major successes and failures of President Roosevelt in his first 2 years. If we are right, he stands at a critical point in his administration. The first enthuslasm has disappeared in a welter of confusion and doubt. That 2 more years like the last would bring him to the end of his term a discredited leader, seems as fair a prediction as any that the swift changes of politics permit.

The central question raised, therefore, at this half-way mark is as to Mr. Roosevelt's own ability to face the present and cope successfully with the hard, new facts which confront his administration. The country cannot stand, and, in our opinion, is resolved against any more hasty experiments or destructive reforms. It asks for an end of threats to business, to investors, to the taxpayer, to the dollar. It wants in Washington careful planning and skilled administration, and an end of fine phrases that merely asks for an end of threats to business, to investors, to the tax-payer, to the dollar. It wants in Washington careful planning and skilled administration, and an end of fine phrases that merely disturb and incite. It wants, in short, above all else a basis for confidence upon which to consolidate its gains and go forward to prosperity. President Roosevelt captured the affection of his fellow citizens in the early months of his term. Can he now regain their confidence by displaying restraint, fairness, and good judgment in the real test that lies ahead?

OUR BLUNDERING GOVERNMENT-SPEECH BY SENATOR LONG

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I ask to have a speech printed in the RECORD.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, what is the request? Mr. LONG. To have a speech printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. ROBINSON. I should like to know what the speech is. Mr. LONG. I suggest the Senator look at it and see if he objects to it. It is a speech which I made over the radio the other night.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I am not going to object, but I think the Senator should have enough respect for the Senate to indicate what it is he asks to have printed.

Mr. LONG. Everyone in the Senate listened to it the other night, or read it in the New York Times. I want it to go to the remainder of the country.

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator handed in something and asked to have it printed in the RECORD, but did not state what it was.

Mr. LONG. It is my last radio speech.

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senate is entitled to that infor-

Mr. LONG. I beg the Senate's pardon.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the speech will be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the speech, broadcast from Washington, D. C., March 7, 1935, was ordered to be printed in the Record, as follows:

Ladies and gentlemen, it has been publicly announced that the White House orders of the Roosevelt administration have declared war on Huey Long. The late and lamented, the pampered ex-crown prince, Gen. Hugh S. Johnson, one of those satellites loaned by Wall Street to run the Government, and who, at the end of his control over and dismissal from the N. R. A., pronounced it "as dead as a dodo", this Mr. Johnson was apparently selected to make the lead-off speech in this White House charge begun last Monday night. The Johnson speech was followed by more fuss and fury on behalf of the administration by spellbinders in and out of Congress.

In a far-away island, when a queen dies, her first favorite is done the honor to be buried alive with her. The funeral procession of the N. R. A. (another one of these new-deal schisms or isms) is about ready to occur. It is said that General Johnson's speech of Monday night to attack me was delivered on the eve of announcing the publication of his obituary in the Red Book son's speech of Monday hight to attack me was delivered on the eve of announcing the publication of his obituary in the Red Book Magazine. Seems then that soon this erstwhile prince of the deranged alphabet makes ready to appear at the funeral of N. R. A. like unto the colored lady in Mississippi who there asserted: "I is de wife of dese remains."

I shall undertake to cover my main subject and make answer to these gentlemen in the course of this speech tonight.

It will serve no purpose to our distressed people for me to call my opponents more bitter names than they call me. Even were I able, I have not the time to present my side of the argument and match them in billingsgate or profanity.

What is this trouble with this edministration of Mr. Recordly and match them in billingsgate or profanity.

What is this trouble with this administration of Mr. Roosevelt, Mr. Johnson, Mr. Farley, Mr. Astor, and all their spoilers and spellbinders? They think that Huev Long is the cause of all their worry. They go gunning for me. But, am I the cause of their misery? They are like old Davy Crockett, who went out to hunt a possum. He saw in the gleam of the moonlight that a possum in the top of a tree was going from limb to limb. He shot and missed. He saw the possum again. He fired a second time and missed again. Soon he discovered that it was not a possum he saw at all in the top of that tree. It was a louse in his own evebrow. his own eyebrow.

I do not make this illustration to do discredit to any of these

I do not make this illustration to do discredit to any of these gentlemen. I make it to show how often we imagine we see great trouble being done to us by someone at a distance, when, in reality, all of it may be a fault in our own make-up.

The trouble with the Roosevelt administration is that when their schemes and isms have falled, these things I told them not to do and voted not to do, that they think it will help them to light out on those of us who warned them in the beginning that the tangled messes and noble experiments would not work. The Roosevelt administration has had its way for 2 years. They have been allowed to set up or knock down anything and everyhave been allowed to set up or knock down anything and every-body. There was one difference between Hoover and Roosevelt. Hoover could not get the Congress to carry out the schemes he wanted to try. We managed to lick him on a roll call in the United States Senate time after time. But, different with Mr. Roosevelt. He got his plans through Congress. But on cold analysis they were found to be the same things Hoover tried to Roosevelt. He analysis they we pass and failed.

The kitchen cabinet that sat in to advise Hoover was not different from the kitchen cabinet which advised Roosevelt. Many of the persons are the same. Many of those in Roosevelt's kitchen cabinet are of the same men or set of men who furnished employees to sit in the kitchen cabinet to advise Hoover.

Maybe you see a little change in the man waiting on the tables, but back in the kitchen the same set of cooks are fixing up the victuals for us that cooked up the mess under Hoover.

Why, do you think this Roosevelt's plan for plowing up cotton, corn, and wheat; and for pouring milk in the river, and for destroying and burying hogs and cattle by the millions, all while people starve and go naked—do you think those plans were the original ideas of this Roosevelt administration? If you do, you are wrong. The whole idea of that kind of thing first came from Hoover's administration. Don't you remember when Mr. Hoover proposed to plow up every fourth row of cotton? We laughed him into scorn. President Roosevelt flayed him for proposing such a thing in the speech which he made from the steps of the capitol in Topeka,

And so we beat Mr. Hoover on his plan. But when Mr. Roosevelt started on his plan, it was not to plow up every fourth row of cotton as Hoover tried to do. Roosevelt's plan was to plow up every third row of cotton, just one-twelfth more cotton to be plowed up than Hoover proposed. Roosevelt succeeded in his plan.

So it has been that while millions have starved and gone naked;

Hoover proposed. Roosevelt succeeded in his plan.

So it has been that while millions have starved and gone naked; so it has been that while babies have cried and died for milk; so it has been that while people have begged for meat and bread, Mr. Roosevelt's administration has sailed merrily along, plowing under and destroying the things to eat and to wear, with teardimmed eyes and hungry souls made to chant for this new deal so that even their starvation dole is not taken away, and meanwhile the food and clothes craved by their bodies and souls go for destruction and ruin. What is it? Is it government? Maybe so. It looks more like St. Vitus dance.

Now, since they sallied forth with General Johnson to start the war on me, let us take a look at this N. R. A. that they opened up around here 2 years ago. They had parades and Fascist signs just as Hitler, and Mussolini. They started the dictatorship here to regiment business and labor much more than anyone did in Germany or Italy. The only difference was in the sign. Italy's sign of the Fascist was a black shirt. Germany's sign of the Fascist was a black shirt. Germany's sign of the Fascist was a swastika. So in America they sidetracked the Stars and Stripes, and the sign of the Blue Eagle was used instead.

And they proceeded with the N. R. A. Everything from a peanut stand to a power house had to have a separate book of rules and laws to regulate what they did. If a peanut stand started to parch a sack of goobers for sale, they had to be careful to go through the rule book. One slip and he went to jail. A little fellow who pressed a pair of pants went to jail because he charged 5 cents under the price set in the rule book. So they wrote their N. R. A. rule book, codes, laws, etc. They got up over 900 of them. One would be as thick as an unabridged dictionary and as confusing as a study of the stars. It would take 40 lawyers to tell a shoe-shine stand how to operate and be certain he didn't go to jail.

tionary and as confusing as a study of the stars. It would take 40 lawyers to tell a shoe-shine stand how to operate and be certain he didn't go to jail.

Some people came to me for advice, as a lawyer, on how to run a business. I took several days and then couldn't understand it myself. The only thing I could tell them was that it couldn't be much worse in jail than it was out of jail with that kind of thing going on in the country, and so to go on and do the best they

The whole thing of Mr. Roosevelt, as run under General Johnson, became such a national scandal that Roosevelt had to let Johnson slide out as the scapegoat. Let them call for an N. R. A. parade tomorrow and you couldn't get enough people to form a funeral march.

It was under this N. R. A. and the other funny alphabetical combinations which followed it that we ran the whole country into a maresnest. The Farleys and Johnsons combed the land into a maresnest. The Farleys and Johnsons combed the land with agents, inspectors, supervisors, detectives, secretaries, assistants, etc., all armed with the power to arrest and send to jail whomever they found not living up to some rule in one of these 900 catalogs. One man whose case reached the Supreme Court of the United States was turned loose because they couldn't even find the rule he was supposed to have violated in a search throughout the United States.

throughout the United States.

And now it is with P. W. A.'s, C. W. A.'s, N. R. A.'s, A. A. A.'s, J-U G's, G-I N's, and every other filmsy combination that the country finds its affairs and business tangled to where no one can recognize it. More men are now out of work than ever; the debt of the United States has gone up another $10,000,000,000. There is starvation; there is homelessness; there is misery on every hand and corner, but mind you, in the meantime, Mr. Roosevelt has had his way. He is one man that can't blame any of his troubles on Huey Long. He has had his way. Down in my part of the country, if any man has the measles he blames that on me; but there is one man that can't blame anything on anybody but himself, and that is Mr. Franklin De-La-No Roose-velt.

And now, on top of that, they order war on me because nearly 4 years ago I told Hoover's crowd it wouldn't do and because 3 years ago I told Roosevelt and his crowd it wouldn't do. In other words, they are in a rage at Huey Long because I have said, "I told you so."

I am not overstating the conditions now prevailing in this country. In their own words they have confessed all I now say or ever have said. Mr. Roosevelt and even Mrs. Roosevelt have bewailed the fact that food, clothes, and shelter have not been provided for the people. Even Gen. Hugh S. Johnson said in his speech of Monday night that there are 80,000,000 people in America who are badly hurt or wrecked by this depression. Mr. Harry Hopkins, who runs the relief work, says the dole roll has risen now to 22,375,000 persons, the highest it has ever been. And now, what is there for the Roosevelt crowd to do but to admit the facts and admit further that they are now on their third year, making matters worse instead of better all the time? No one is to blame, except them, for what is going on because they have had their way. And if they couldn't change the thing in over 2 years, now bogged down worse than ever, how could anyone expect any good of them hereafter? God save us 2 more years of the disaster now bogged down worse than ever, now could anyone expect any good of them hereafter? God save us 2 more years of the disaster we have had under that gang.

Now, my friends, when this condition of distress and suffering among so many millions of our people began to develop in the Hoover administration, we knew then what the trouble was and what we would have to do to correct it. I was the first man to say publicly—but Mr. Roosevelt followed in my tracks a few months later and said the same thing. We said that all of our trouble and woe was due to the fact that too few of our people owned too much of our wealth. We said that in our land, with too much to eat, and too much to wear, and too many houses to live in, too many automobiles to be sold, that the only trouble was that the people suffered in the land of abundance because too few controlled the money and the wealth and too many did not have money with which to buy the things they needed for life and comfort.

So I said to the people of the United States in my speeches which I delivered in the United States Senate in the early part of 1932 that the only way by which we could restore our people to reasonable life and comfort was to limit the size of the big man's fortune and guarantee some minimum to the fortune and comfort of the and guarantee some minimum to the fortune and comfort of the little man's family.

I said then, as I have said since, that it was inhuman to have I said then, as I have said since, that it was inhuman to have food rotting, cotton and wool going to waste, houses empty, and at the same time to have millions of our people starving, naked, and homeless because they could not buy the things which other men had and for which they had no use whatever. So we convinced Mr. Franklin Delano Roosevelt that it was necessary that he announce and promise to the American people that in the event he were elected President of the United States he would pull down the size of the big man's fortune and guarantee something to every family—enough to do away with 'Il poverty and to give employment to those who were able to work and education to the children born into the world. into the world.

Mr. Roosevelt made those promises; he made them before he was nominated in the Chicago convention. He made them again before nominated in the Chicago convention. He made them again before he was elected in November, and he went so far as to remake those promises after he was inaugurated President of the United States. And I thought for a day or two after he took the oath as President, that maybe he was going through with his promises. No heart was ever so saddened; no person's ambition was ever so blighted, as was mine when I came to the realization that the President of the United States was not going to undertake what he had said he would do, and what I knew to be necessary if the people of America were ever saved from calamity and misery.

So now my friends. I come to that point where I must in a people of America were ever saved from calamity and misery.

So now, my friends, I come to that point where I must in a few sentences describe to you just what was the cause of our trouble which became so serious in 1929, and which has been worse ever since. The wealth in the United States was three times as much in 1910 as it was in 1890, and yet the masses of our people owned less in 1910 than they did in 1890. In the year 1916 the condition had become so bad that a committee provided for by the Congress of the United States reported that 2 percent of the people in the United States owned 60 percent of the wealth in the country, and that 65 percent of the people owned less than 5 percent of the wealth. This report showed, however, that there was a middle class—some 33 percent of the people—who owned 35 percent of the wealth. This report went on to say that the trouble with the American people at that time was that too much of the wealth was in the hands of too few of the people, and recommended that something be done to correct the evil condition then existing.

was that too much of the wealth was in the hands of too lew of the people, and recommended that something be done to correct the evil condition then existing.

It was at about the same time that many of our publications began to deplore the fact that so few people owned so much and that so many people owned so little. Among those commenting upon that situation was the Saturday Evening Post, which, in an issue of September 23, 1916, said:

"Along one statistical line you can figure out a Nation bustling with wealth; along another a bloated plutocracy comprising 1 percent of the population lording it over a starveling horde with only a thin margin of merely well-to-do in between."

And it was, as the Saturday Evening Post and the committee appointed by Congress said, it was a deplorable thing back in 1916, when it was found that 2 percent of the people owned twice as much as all of the remainder of the people put together, and that 65 percent of all of our people owned practically nothing.

But what did we do to correct that condition? Instead of moving to take these big fortunes from the top and spreading them among the suffering people at the bottom, the financial masters of America moved in to take complete charge of the Government for fear our lawmakers might do something along that line.

And as a result, 14 years after the report of 1916, the Federal Trade Commission made a study to see how the wealth of this land was distributed, and did they find it still as bad as it was in 1916? They found it worse! They found that 1 percent of the people owned about 59 percent of the wealth, which was almost people owned about 59 percent of the wealth, which was almost twice as bad as what was said to be an intolerable condition in 1916, when 2 percent of the people owned 60 percent of the wealth. And as a result of foreclosures, failures, and bankruptcies, which began to happen prior to and in the year of 1929, before the campaign of 1932, and at this late date, it is the estimate of all conservative statisticians that 75 percent of the people in the United States don't own anything, that is, not enough to pay their debts, and that 4 percent of the people, or maybe less than 4 percent of the people, own from 85 to 90 percent of all our wealth in the United States. Remember, in 1916 there was a middle class—33 percent of the people—who owned 35 percent of the wealth. That middle class is practically gone today. It no longer exists. They have dropped into the ranks of the poor. The thriving man of independent business standing is fast fading. The corner grocery store is becoming a thing of the past. Concentrated chain-merchandise and banking systems have laid waste to all middle opportunity. That "thin margin of merely well-to-do in between" which the Saturday Evening Post mentioned on September 23, 1916, has dwindled to practically no margin of well-to-do in between. Those suffering on the bottom and the few lords of finance on the top are nearly all that are left.

It became apparent that the billionaires and multimillionaires even began to squeeze out the common millionaires, closing in even began to squeeze out the common millionaires, closing in and taking their properties and wrecking their businesses. And so we arrived (and are still there) at the place that in abundant America, where we have everything for which a human heart can pray, the hundreds of millions—or, as General Johnson says, the 80,000,000—of our people are crying in misery for the want of the things which they need for life, notwithstanding the fact that the country has had and can have more than the entire human race can consume.

The 125,000,000 people of America have seated themselves at the barbecue table to consume the products which have been guaranteed to them by their Lord and Creator. There is provided by the Almighty what it takes for them all to eat; yea, more. There is provided more than what is needed for all to eat. But the financial masters of America have taken off the barbecue table 90 percent of the food placed thereon by God, through the labors of mankind, even before the feast begins, and there is left on that table to be eaten by 125,000,000 people less than should be there for 10,000,000 of them.

What has become of the remainder of those things placed on the table by the Lord for the use of us all? They are in the hands of the Morgans, the Rockefellers, the Mellons, the Baruches, the the Morgans, the Rockefellers, the Mellons, the Baruches, the Bakers, the Astors, and the Vanderbilts—600 families at the most, either possessing or controlling the entire 90 percent of all that is in America. They cannot eat the food, they cannot wear the clothes, so they destroy it. They have it rotted; they plow it up; they pour it into the rivers; they bring destruction through the acts of mankind to let humanity suffer; to let humanity go naked; to let humanity go homeless, so that nothing may occur that will do harm to their vanity and to their greed. Like the dog in the manger, they command a wagonload of hay, which the dog would not allow the cow to eat, though he could not eat it himself.

So now, ladies and gentlemen, we come to that plan of mine for manger, they command a wagonload of hay, which the dog would not allow the cow to eat, though he could not eat it himself.

So now, ladies and gentlemen, we come to that plan of mine for which I have been so roundly denounced and condemned by such men as Mr. Farley, Mr. Robinson, and Gen. Hugh S. Johnson, and other spellers and speakers and spoilers of the Roosevelt administration. It is for the redistribution of wealth and for guaranteeing comforts and conveniences to all humanity out of this abundance in our country. I hope none will be horror-stricken when they hear me say that we must limit the size of the big man's fortune in order to guarantee a minimum of fortune, life, and comfort to the little man; but, if you are, think first that such is the declaration on which Roosevelt rode into the nomination and election of President. While my urgings are declared by some to be the average of a madman, and by such men as General Johnson as insincere bait of a pied piper, if you will listen to me you will find that it is restating the laws handed down by God to man; you will find that it was the exact provision of the contract and law of the Pilgrim Fathers who landed at Plymouth in 1620.

Here's what the Pilgrim Fathers said in the contract with the early settlers in the year 1620. I read you article 5 from that contract:

contract:

"5. That at ye end of ye 7. years, ye capital & profits, viz. the houses, lands, goods, and chatles, be equally devided betwixte ye adventurers, and planters; wch done, every man shall be free from other of them of any debt or detrimente concerning this adventure."

So the Pilgrim Fathers wrote into the covenant to do just exactly what the Bible said to do, that they should have an equal division of the wealth every 7 years. I don't go that far; I merely advocate that no man be allowed to become so big that he akes paupers out of a million other people.

You will find that it is the cornerstone on which nearly every You will find that it is the cornerstone on which nearly every religion since the beginning of man has been founded. You will find that it was urged by Bacon, Milton, and Shakespeare in England, by Socrates, Plato, Theognis, and other wisest of men in Greece, by Pope Pius XI in the Vatican, by the world's greatest inventor, Marconi in Italy, by Daniei Webster, Ralph Waldo Emerson, Abraham Lincoln, Andrew Jackson, William Jennings Bryan, and Theodore Roosevelt in the United States, as well as by nearly all of the thousands of great men whose names are yet mentioned in history. mentioned in history.

The principle was not only the mainspring of Roosevelt's nomination and election, but in the closing speech of Herbert Hoover at Madison Square Garden in November 1932, even Hoover said:

"My conception of America is a land where men and women may walk in ordered liberty, where they may enjoy the advantages of wealth, not concentrated in the hands of a few but diffused through the lives of all."

And so now I come to give you again that plan, taken from these leaders of all times and from the Bible, for the sponsoring of which I am labeled America's menace, madman, pied piper, and demagogue.

I propose:

First. That every big fortune shall be cut down immediately by a capital levy tax to where no one will own more than a few million dollars, as a matter of fact, to where no one can very long own a fortune in excess of about three to four millions of dollars. I propose that the surplus of all the big fortunes, above the few millions to any one person at the most, shall go into the United States ownership. How would we get all these surplus fortunes into the United States Treasury? Not hard to do. We would not do it by making everyone sell what he owned; no. We would send everyone a questionnaire. On that he would list the properties he owns, lands and houses, stocks and bonds, factories and patents, and so on. Every man would place his appraisal on his property, which the Government would review and maybe change on some items. On that appraisal the big fortune holder would say out of what property he would retain the few millions allowed to him, the balance to go to the United States. Say Mr. Henry Ford should allow that he owned all the stock of the Ford Motor Co., worth, say, $2,000,000,000; he could claim, say $4,000,000 of the Ford stock, but $1,996,000,000 would go to the United States. Say the Rockefeller fortune was listed at $10,000,000,000 in oil stocks, bank stocks, money, and stores. Each Rockefeller could say whether he wanted his limit in either the money, oil, or bank stocks, but about nine billion and eight hundred million would go to the Government. And so, in this way, the Government of the United States would come into the possession of about two-fifths of its wealth, which on normal values would be worth, say, $165,000,000,000.

Then we would turn to the inventories of the 25,000,000 families of America. All those who showed properties and money clear of debts that were above $5,000 and up to the limit of a few millions.

of America. All those who showed properties and money clear of debts that were above $5,000 and up to the limit of a few millions would not be touched. But those showing less than $5,000 to the family free of debt would be added to, so that every family would start life again with homestead possessions of at least a home and the comforts needed for a home, including such things as a radio and an automobile. These things would go to every family as a homestead, not to be sold either for debts or taxes or even by consent of the owner except by the consent of the court or Government, and then only on condition that the court hold it to be spent for the purpose of buying another home and comforts thereof.

Such would mean that the $165,000,000,000 or more taken from big fortunes would have about $100,000,000,000 of it used to provide all with the comforts of home and living. The Government might have to issue warrants for claim and location, or even currency to be retired from such property as was claimed, but all that is a detail not impractical to get these homes into the hands of the people.

America would start again with millionaires, but no multi-

So America would start again with millionaires, but no multimillionaires or billionaires; with some poor, but none too poor to be denied the comforts of life. America, however, would still have maybe a $65,000,000,000 balance from these big fortunes not yet used to set up the poor people. What would we do with that? Wait a moment. I am coming to that, too.

Second. We propose that after homes and comforts of homes have been set up for the families of the country, that we shall turn our attention to the children and the youth of the land, providing first for their education and training. We would not have to worry about the problem of child labor, because the very first thing which we would place in front of every child would be not only a comfortable home during his early years but the opportunity for education and training, not only through the grammar school and the high school but through college and to include vocational and professional training for every child. If necessary, that would include the living cost of that child while he attended college, if one should be too distant for him to live at home and conveniently attend, as would be the case with many of those living in the rural areas.

We now have an educational system, and in States like Louisi-living in the rural areas.

We now have an educational system, and in States like Louisiana—and it is the best one—where school books are furnished free to every child and where transportation by bus is given to every student, however far he may live from a grammar or high school; there is a fairly good assurance of education through grammar and high school for the child whose father and mother have enough at home to feed and clothe them. But when it comes to a matter of college education, except in few cases the right to a college education is determined at this day and time by the financial ability of the father and mother to pay for the cost and the expense of a college education. It don't make any difference how brilliant a boy or girl may be, that don't give them the right to a college education in America today.

Now, Gen. Hugh Johnson says I am indeed a very smart demagogue, a wise and dangerous menace. But I am one of those who didn't have the opportunity to secure a college education or training. We propose that the right to education and the extent of

We propose that the right to education and the extent of education shall be determined and gaged not so much by the financial ability of the parents but by the mental ability and energy of a child to absorb the learning at a college. This should appeal to General Johnson, who says I am a smart man, since, had I enjoyed the learning and college training which my plan would provide for others, I might not have fallen into the path of the dangerous menace and demagogue that he has now found me

Remember, we have $65,000,000,000 to account for that would lie in the hands of the United States, even after providing home comforts for all families. We will use a large part of it immediately to expand particularly the colleges and universities of this country. You would not know the great institutions like Yale, Harvard, and Louisiana State University. Get ready for a surprise. College enrollments would multiply 1,000 percent. We would immediately call in the architects and engineers, the idle professors and scholars of learning. We would send out a hurry call because the problem of providing college education for all of the youth would start a fusillade of employment which might suddenly and immediately make it impossible for us to shorten the hours of labor, even as we contemplate in the balance of our program.

And how happy the youth of this land would be tomorrow morning if they knew instantly their right to a home and the comforts of a home and to complete college and professional training and of a home and to complete college and professional training and education were assured! I know how happy they would be, because I know how I would have felt had such a message been delivered to

I cannot deliver that promise to the youth of this land tonight, but I am doing my part. I am standing the blows; I am hearing the charges hurled at me from the four quarters of the country. It is the same fight which was made against me in Louisiana when I was undertaking to provide the free school books, free busses, university facilities, and things of that kind to educate the youth of that State as best I could. It is the same blare which I heard when I was undertaking to provide for the sick and the afflicted. When the youth of this land realizes what is meant and what is contemplated, the billingsgate and the profanity of all the Farleys and Johnsons in America can't prevent the light of truth from hurling itself in understandable letters against the dark canopy of the sky. Now, when we have landed at the place where homes and comforts are provided for all families and complete education and training for all young men and women, the next problem is what about our income to sustain our people thereafter. How shall that be arranged to guarantee all the fair share of what soul and body need to sustain them conveniently. That brings us to our next point. We propose: I cannot deliver that promise to the youth of this land tonight, need to sustain them conveniently. That brings us to our next point. We propose:

No. 3. We shall shorten the hours of labor by law so much as may be necessary that none will be worked too long and none unemployed. We shall cut the hours of toil to 30 hours per week, maybe less; we may cut the working year to 11 months' work and 1 month's vacation; maybe less. If our great improvement programs show we need more labor than we may have, we will lengthen the hours as convenience requires. At all events, the hours for production will be gaged to meet the market for consumption. We will need all our machinery for many years, because we have much public improvement to do; and, further, the more use that we may make of them, the less toil will be required for all of us to survive in splendor.

Now, a minimum earning would be established for any person with a family to support. It would be such a living which one, already owning a home, could maintain a family in comfort, of not less than $2,500 per year to every family.

And now by reason of false statements made, particularly by Mr. Arthur Brisbane and Gen. Hugh S. Johnson, I must make answer to show you that there is more than enough in this country and more than enough raised and made every year to do what I propose. what I propose.

what I propose.

Mr. Brisbane says I am proposing to give every person $15,000 for a home and its comforts, and he says that would mean the United States would have to be worth over a trillion dollars. Why make that untrue statement, Mr. Brisbane? You know that is not so. I do not propose any home and comfort of $15,000 to each person—it is a minimum of $5,000 to every family, which would be less than $125,000,000,000, which is less than one-third of this Nation's world's high program! of this Nation's wealth in normal times of $400,000,000,000.

General Johnson says that my proposal is for $5,000 guaranteed earning to each family, which he says would cost from four to five hundred millions of dollars per year, which he says is four times more than our whole national income ever has been. Why make such untrue statements, General Johnson? Must you have false witness to explore your point? I do not proceed $5.000. why make such untrue statements, General Johnson? Must you be a false witness to argue your point? I do not propose $5,000 income per year to each family. I propose a minimum of from $2,000 to $2,500 income per year to each family. For 25,000,000 families that minimum income per family would require from $50,000,000,000 to $60,600,000,000. In the prosperous days we have had nearly double that for income some years already, which allowed plenty for the affluent; but with the unheard prosperity was would have if all our people could buy what they peed our we would have, if all our people could buy what they need, our national income would be double what it has ever been.

national income would be double what it has ever been.

The Wall Street writer and statistician says we could have an income of at least $10,000 to every family in goods if all worked short hours and none were idle. According to him, only one-fourth of the average income would carry out my plan.

And now I come to the remainder of the plan. We propose:

No. 4. That agricultural production will be cared for in the manner specified in the Bible. We would plow under no crops; we would burn no corn; we would spill no milk into the river; we would shoot no hogs; would slaughter no cattle to be rotted. What we would do is this:

We would raise all the cotton that we could raise, all the corn that we could raise, and everything else that we could raise. Let us say, for example, that we raised more cotton than we could use. But here again I wish to surprise you when I say that if every-

But here again I wish to surprise you when I say that if everyone could buy all the towels, all the sheets, all the bedding, all the clothing, all the carpets, all the window curtains, and all of everything else he reasonably needs, America would consume 20,000,000 bales of cotton per year without having to sell a bale to the foreign countries. The same would be true of the wheat crop, and of the corn crop, and of the meat crop. Whenever everyone could buy the things he desires to eat, there would be no great excess in any of those food supplies.

But for the sake of the argument, let us say, however, that there would be a surplus. And I hope there will be, because it will do the country good to have a big surplus. Let us take cotton as an example. Let us say that the United States will have a market for 10,000,000 bales of cotton and that we raise 15,000,000 bales of cotton. We will store 5,000,000 bales in warehouses provided by the Government. If the next year we raise 15,000,000 bales of cotton and only need 10, we will store another 5,000,000 bales of cotton, and the Government will care for that. When we reach the year when we have enough cotton to last for 12 or 18 months, we will plant no more cotton for that next year. The people will have their certificates of the Government which they can cash in for that year for the surplus, or if necessary, the Government can pay for the whole 15,000,000 bales of cotton as it is produced every year; and when the year comes that we will raise no cotton, we will not leave the people idle and with nothing to do. That is the year when, in the cotton States, we will do our public improvement work that needs to be done so badly. We will care for the flood-control problems; we will extend the elecwill care for the flood-control problems; we will extend the electricity lines into rural areas; we will widen roads and build more roads; and if we have a little time left, some of us can go back and attend a school for a few months and not only learn some of the things we have forgotten but we can learn some things that they have found out about that they didn't know anything about when we were children.

when we were children.

Now the example of what we would do about cotton is the same policy we would follow about all other crops. This program would necessitate the building of large storage plants, both heated and cold storage, and warehouses in all the counties of America, and that building program alone would take up all the idle people that America has today. But the money spent would go for good and would prevent any trouble happening in the future. And then there is another good thing. If we would fill these warehouses, then if there were to come a year of famine there would be enough on hand to feed and clothe the people of the Nation. It would be the part of good sense to keep a year or two of stock on hand all the time to provide for an emergency, maybe to provide for war or other calamity.

I give you the next step in our program:

No. 5: We will provide for old-age pensions for those who reach the age of 60 and pay it to all those who have an income of less than $1,000 per year or less than $10,000 in property or money. This would relieve from the ranks of labor those persons who press down the price for the use of their fiesh and blood. Now the person who reaches the age of 60 would already have the comforts of home as well as something else guaranteed by reason of the redistribution that had been made of things. They would be given enough more to give them a reasonably comfortable existence in their declining days. However, such would not come from a sales tax or taxes placed upon the common run of people. It would be supported from the taxes levied on those with big ina sales tax or taxes placed upon the common run of people. It would be supported from the taxes levied on those with big incomes and the yearly tax that would be levied on big fortunes, so that they would always be kept down to a few million dollars to any one person.

No. 6. We propose that the obligations which this country owes No. 6. We propose that the obligations which this country owes to the veterans of its wars, including the soldiers' bonus and to care for those who have been either incapacitated or disabled, would be discharged without stint or unreasonable limit. I have always supported each and every bill that has had to do with the payment of the bonus due to the ex-service men. I have always opposed reducing the allowances which they have been granted. It is an unfair thing for a country to begin its economy while big fortunes exist by inflicting misery on those who have borne the burden of national defense.

Now ledies and gentlemen such is the share-our-wealth move-

Now, ladies and gentlemen, such is the share-our-wealth movement. What I have here stated to you will be found to be approved by the law of our Divine Maker. You will find it in the Book of Leviticus, from the twenty-fifth to the twenty-seventh chapters. You will find it in the writings of King Solomon. You will find it in the teachings of Christ. You will find it in the words of our great teachers and statesmen of all countries and of all times. If you care to write to me for such proof, I shall be glad to furnish it to you, free of expense, by mail.

Will you not organize a share-our-wealth society in your community tonight or tomorrow to place this plan into law? You need it; your people need it. Write me, wire to me; get into this work with us if you believe we are right. Help to save humanity. Help to save this country. If you wish a copy of this speech or a copy of any other speech I have made, write me and it will be forwarded to you. You can reach me always in Washington, D. C. I thank you.

I thank you.

WORK-RELIEF PROGRAM

The Senate resumed the consideration of the joint reso lution (H. J. Res. 117) making appropriations for relief purposes.

Mr. GLASS obtained the floor.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Will the Chair indicate in what form the joint resolution now comes before the Senate with respect to amendments?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senate gave unanimous consent to consider committee amendments first. The question is on the first amendment of the committee to the joint resolution. That is the parliamentary situation.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Does that signify that we take the joint resolution as it was originally presented to the Senate, stripped of all amendments acted on in the Senate?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The joint resolution is now before the Senate in the form in which it was reported the second time by the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. COSTIGAN. The first amendment would be—
The VICE PRESIDENT. The first amendment of the Committee on Appropriations is on page 1, line 3, to strike out, beginning with the word "protect" and ending with the word "conditions", and to insert the words "provide relief and work relief." That is the first amendment offered by the committee and that is the pending question.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President, will the Senator from Virginia yield for an inquiry?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Virginia yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. GLASS. I yield.

Mr. COSTIGAN. If the amendment now to be acted upon, to be followed by a second amendment containing the words "provide relief and work relief", might be agreed to, with an advance indication of willingness on the part of the chairman of the committee to add to the words "provide relief and work relief" the words "and, with a view to reducing and relieving unemployment, to provide for the construction of useful public works", it seems to me there would be no objection to striking out the words comprehended by the first amendment and incorporating the second amendment of the chairman of the committee. The amendment I suggest was submitted to the chairman of the committee yesterday.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. McNARY. Has the Senator from Colorado proposed a formal amendment, or has he merely suggested it?

Mr. GLASS. He is just asking a question.

Mr. COSTIGAN. I am asking whether the chairman of the committee would be willing to consider later, in the event the first and second amendments of the committee are adopted, the addition, following "provide relief and work relief", of the words "and, with a view to reducing and relieving unemployment, to provide for the construction of useful public works."

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, responding to the inquiry of the Senator from Colorado, of course the Senator from Virginia is willing and expects to consider any amendment proposed to the joint resolution. I am not authorized to speak for the committee as to whether or not the committee would favorably consider the words suggested by the Senator from Colorado. I may say, however, that since the recess of the Senate I have discussed this matter with those who might be regarded as the intimate proponents of the joint resolution; and it is their considered judgment that the words "provide relief and work relief" comprehend the entire purposes of the joint resolution in connection with other provisions of the measure.

I have always understood that all appropriations for public-works purposes were for the purpose of relieving unemployment and relieving the distresses incident to the depression; and it is the opinion of those having the matter immediately in charge before it was presented to the Appropriations Committee that those words would comprehend everything they have in mind.

I may say furthermore, Mr. President, that when the joint resolution was recommitted to the Committee on Appropriations, it was handed back to administration authorities for such alterations or suggestions as they might care to make. They made the particular alteration to which the distinguished Senator from Colorado refers; and they also submitted to the committee these alleged breakdowns to indicate rather more definitely than theretofore had been indicated the purposes for which this fund is to be used and the approximate measure of the allocations of the fund.

The Committee on Appropriations, after earnest deliberation and discussion, accepted, without the change of a word, the suggestions and alterations made by these gentlemen, and the committee has accordingly reported the joint resolution. Personally, I thoroughly agree with the conclusions of the administration authorities that the words "provide relief and work relief" are all comprehensive and include all the purposes in mind for the expenditure of this $4,000,000,000.

The administration authorities also are in agreement with me that the words on page 2, referring to this fund of $4,000,000,000, "to be used in the discretion and under the direction of the President", give the President complete authority, subject only to the limitations on page 3 of the joint resolution, to use this fund in any way his judgment may suggest and to employ any agencies he may desire for the use of the fund.

I said to the Senate yesterday that I was a little disposed to accept the suggestion to embody in this measure a rider extending for 2 years the life of the P. W. A. Upon conference I find that that is to be done, or attempted to be done, in a separate bill, and that even should it not be done, the President, under the terms of the pending joint resolution, would feel, and I think he is, entirely at liberty to employ the existing agency of the P. W. A. in the use of the $4,000,000,000.

That is my answer to the inquiry of the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. COSTIGAN. If I may be permitted a word before I make a further inquiry, perhaps some Members of the Senate have been diverted from an expected course by the suggestion of the able Senator from Virginia yesterday that an amendment continuing the life of the P. W. A. would be incorporated in the joint resolution with the consent of the chairman of the committee. Had that amendment been tendered, I was expecting to ask the Senator from Virginia to give us an advance opportunity to consider the phraseology of the amendment, which I assumed might cover the difficulties some of us have encountered with the joint resolution as it now stands. In view of the expressed position of the Senator from Virginia, I assume that there is nothing for us to do but to attempt to perfect the measure to the best of our ability today on the floor. The reasons I assigned yesterday for necessary changes in the joint resolution, and the great importance of the issues involved, make it seem indispensable, under these circumstances, that I offer amendments as the joint resolution progresses.

I ask the Senator from Virginia if he will indicate whether the committee itself has any amendments it proposes to offer to the pending measure which may alter the attitude of any of us here, as outlined by me in my remarks yesterday.

Mr. GLASS. I may say that one member of the committee—to wit, the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. Byrnes]—has in mind an amendment to be proposed by him on page 3, lines 17 and 18, where, after the numerals "$600,000,000" and the semicolon, he proposes to insert "loans or grants for public projects of States or political subdivisions or agencies thereof."

That, I believe, is the only amendment of which I am aware.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I wish the Senator would repeat; some of us did not get the full language he suggested.

Mr. GLASS. On page 3, line 17, after the numerals "$600,000,000" and the semicolon, the Senator from South Carolina proposes to add the language "loans or grants for public projects of States or political subdivisions or agencies thereof."

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, will the Senator from Virginia yield?

Mr. GLASS. Yes; I yield.

Mr. BYRNES. I simply wish to say that I share the view expressed by the Senator from Virginia, that under the language of the joint resolution the President would be authorized to make loans. The language of the measure, as the Senator from Virginia has recited it, is, "To be used in the discretion and under the direction of the President for public projects of States or political subdivisions thereof." Manifestly it would be used either for grants or loans. When the question is raised as to whether loans are authorized, the same question could be raised as to whether grants are authorized. But as long as objection is made, in the hope of saving time, I am offering this amendment merely to clarify the language, and make certain that the money would be available for loans or grants for public projects.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the first amendment of the committee.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I wish to inquire as to the parliamentary status of the proposal of the Senator from Colorado. Is that presented now, and is it before the Senate?

Mr. GLASS. The Senator from Colorado has not presented an amendment as yet.

Mr. McNARY. Then, Mr. President, the question is upon the adoption or rejection of the committee amendment?

The VICE PRESIDENT. That is correct.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President, I merely wish to say that, in view of the statements made, it is my intention to vote against the first amendment of the committee on the basis of the discussion which took place in the Senate yesterday; if that shall be adopted, to vote for the second amendment, and to offer an amendment to the second amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the first amendment of the committee, on page 1, line 3.

The amendment was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will state the next amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. The next amendment of the committee is, on page 2, line 2, after the word "President", to strike out the words "in such manner, and for such purposes and/or such projects, Federal or non-Federal, as shall be adapted to the accomplishment of any one or more of the objectives specified in clause (1), (2), (3), or (4)."

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President, I understood the second amendment would be to add the words "provide relief and work relief."

The VICE PRESIDENT. That was a part of the first amendment, and the first amendment has been agreed to. The first amendment was on page 1, where the committee proposed to strike out, beginning on line 3, down to the word conditions", on line 8, and to insert the words "provide relief and work relief."

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President, in order to broaden the purposes of the joint resolution, and to make sure that public works may be included. I desire to add, following the words provide relief and work relief", language which I have sent to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Colorado was under the impression that there were two amendments, but under the rules of the Senate the amendment is a single amendment, and is indivisible. If the Senator desires to perfect the amendment, it will be necessary to reconsider the vote of the Senate by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COSTIGAN. I ask unanimous consent that the vote be reconsidered.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, would not the Senator's amendment be in order after we had agreed to this amendment; could he not subsequently offer an amendment?

The VICE PRESIDENT. No; it would be necessary to undo the affirmative action of the Senate.

Mr. FLETCHER. The Senate can agree to the amendment proposed by the committee.

The VICE PRESIDENT. If the Senator from Colorado permits the Senate to adopt the amendment, that will be affirmative action of the Senate, and it would not be in order to go back and undo the action by amendment.

Mr. FLETCHER. We do not need to undo anything. The Senator wants to add something to the language of the joint resolution

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is germane now, but it would not be after the amendment had been adopted, unless there should be reconsideration of the vote.

Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Colorado that the vote by which the first amendment was agreed to be reconsidered? The Chair hears none, and the vote is reconsidered, and the Senator from Colorado offers an amendment to the committee amendment, which the clerk will state.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 1, line 8, after the word "relief" and the comma, it is proposed to insert the words " and, with a view to reducing and relieving unemployment to provide for the construction of useful public works."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. COSTIGAN. On this I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, let me again say to the Senate that, in conference with the highest possible authority on the subject of administration of legislation, I was very definitely told that it was the interpretation of the President that, under the language of this section as reported from the committee, public works and all other work designed to relieve unemployment, and to cure in any measure the distresses incident to the depression, were comprehended in this language, and I hope it will not be altered.

Mr. COSTIGAN. I ask for the yeas and nays on the question. It seems to me to be of great importance and is fortified by sound legal opinion.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me? Mr. COSTIGAN. I vield.

Mr. KING. I ask the Senator whether a proper and not a meticulous, legalistic interpretation of the joint resolution further on in its provisions would not comprehend the amendment which is offered by the Senator and permit the construction of useful public works and carry out, indeed, the intention and purpose of the Senator's amendment?

Mr. COSTIGAN. Will the Senator direct our attention to the language he has in mind?

Mr. KING. For instance, the following language: "Highways, roads, streets, and grade-crossing elimination, * * rural rehabilitation and relief in stricken agricultural areas, * * * rural electrification, * * * housing, * * * Civilian Conservation Corps, * * * public projects of States or political subdivisions thereof"; and a tremendous sum appropriated, $900,000,000; and "sanitation, prevention of soil erosion, reforestation, forestation, flood control, and miscellaneous projects." It would seem to me that those comprehensive words would include all that the Senator has in mind, and would cover the useful public projects to which the Senator is directing our attention.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Colorado yield to me?

Mr. COSTIGAN. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. In addition to what has been said by the Senator from Utah, let me call the Senator's attention to the fact that section 8 uses this language, "On all building construction work or projects undertaken." It strikes me that by implication we have already assumed that public-works projects are to be undertaken as a part of the work-relief

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President, the able Senator from Maryland was not present yesterday during the discussion, as I recall it; the Senator from Utah was. The argument which was made, and which, as I stated, was fortified by the considered opinion of careful Government attorneys who have dealt particularly with projects of this sort, was to the effect that we are opening the door to new court interpretations based upon this initial qualifying language, "relief and

If that viewpoint is sound, this joint resolution as it now stands, and as it is likely to stand if amended in accordance with the construction of the chairman of the committee, will, first of all, permit court proceedings to test the effect | of these new words, "work relief", with respect to particular projects, with the possibility, indeed, the probability, in the opinion of such attorneys, that the joint resolution will not be extended, with court sanction, to many of the projects later enumerated in the joint resolution. If that point was not made clear yesterday, I hope it is now understood by Members of the Senate.

The Chairman of the Committee on Appropriations said repeatedly yesterday that everything under heaven could be done by the President under the joint resolution. If that be so, what possible objection can there be to incorporating in this clause indicating the policy of Congress such moderate language as that suggesting that part of these funds may be used with a view to reducing and relieving unemployment, and providing authority for the construction of useful public works?

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. COSTIGAN. I yield.

Mr. KING. I heard only a part of the argument of the Senator yesterday. Was it his argument that the words "provide relief and work relief" would be so construed as that those projects and activities to which I directed attention might be successfully challenged?

Mr. COSTIGAN. That was the argument which I presented, and which I supported, in a measure, by an opinion of the Acting Comptroller General, which the Senator from Utah will find in the RECORD of yesterday at the conclusion of my remarks.

Mr. KING. The amendment which the Senator has now suggested would not expand the activities on projects beyond those which were enumerated in the joint resolution?

Mr. COSTIGAN. It would not. There is every purpose to cooperate with the chairman of the committee and with the committee itself. The only purposes of the amendment are to make more certain that the ends which the Senator from Virginia says may be attained under the joint resolution can certainly be attained, and that there will be ample authority to deal with public works without court construction which may halt us when we come to a particular

I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, what is the question? The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Colorado [Mr. Costigan] has offered an amendment to the committee amendment, and on that amendment he has asked for the yeas and navs.

Mr. LONG. Will the Senator from Colorado please read his amendment?

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President, as the joint resolution now stands the Senate has approved the opening paragraph from line 3 to line 8 by striking out the original words in the joint resolution as it passed the House of Representatives, and has added "provide relief and work relief", so that the language of the joint resolution as it now stands is:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That in order to provide relief and work relief—

I am now offering, as an amendment to that, the further words-and, with a view to reducing and relieving unemployment to provide for the construction of useful public works.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I desire to direct the attention of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. Costigan] and the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] to the parliamentary situation in which we shall be if the amendment of the Senator from Colorado shall be adopted. Its adoption will mean that this particular language will not be subject to change by subsequent amendment. In other words, if we amend this committee language we shall not be able to amend it again. That is to say, I cannot propose another amendment.

I desire to say to the Senator from Virginia, the Senator from Colorado, and other Senators that at a later time I had intended to insert in the joint resolution, if I could get million dollars of the money might be used for the purpose of advancing to the universities of the United States, as has been done to a limited extent already, funds which the universities might be permitted to give to students wishing to attend college who are not able to pay their own way.

As an example, out of all the $3,300,000,000 we have heretofore appropriated through one of our bureaus-I do not care which one it was-the sum of $20,000,000 was given around to the various universities. They took that money-I know they did in my State—and they would give to a student a maximum of around $15 a month, and by means of that $15 and the help the school itself would give, either in reducing tuition or crediting the student with tuition, many of the schools accommodated as many as 500 or 600 young men. We spent only $20,000,000 in that way for the United States.

I was recently informed by one of the gentlemen in the University of Iowa who came to see me when I was down in my home State that lately they had decided to discontinue this $20,000,000. I do not propose to offer just $20,000,000. Here is a place to spend our money.

If Senators will turn to page 3 of the joint resolution and look over this apportionment they will find that there is provided $600,000,000 for our Civilian Conservation Corps. I am not going to argue against the Civilian Conservation Corps, but if we put in this measure today, or take from some of these other funds $600,000,000 to start the work of education, with $15 per month we would be able to put a young man in the university of one of our States as against the $35 to $50 now expended to put him in a conservation camp, perhaps in the same State. In other words, for 40 cents on the dollar we can give a young man or a young girl an education, and we can train them in any line we wish to train them; we can remove them from the path of the unemployed, and we can build up the fiber of their manhood and womanhood and save the Government a great deal of money while we do it.

As an example, Mr. President, the college enrollments in every State during this depression, with the exception of one State university, I think-there may be other exceptionsas a general rule decreased 15 percent. I believe the attendance at universities which heretofore had not had sufficient facilities to care for those seeking admittance fell during this depression around 15 percent. That was due to only one thing in the world—that students did not have the money with which to go to college.

Our science of high education is not based upon the ability of the young men or the young women to learn. It is not based upon their willingness to expend energy to study but it is based upon the financial capacity of the parents to support the cost at college. So this little help which was given was given because of the fact that in the universities of the country 15 percent less students were seeking admission than during normal times because their parents could not pay the cost.

There was one exception which stands out, which is my own State university, Louisiana State University. That university showed an increase of about 150 percent instead of a reduction of about 15 percent. That was due largely to the fact that the costs at that university were reduced so much as largely to attract students who theretofore could not seek entrance to that school. So I wish to suggest to the Senator from Colorado that before the words of the Senator's amendment, which reads-

And with a view to reducing and relieving unemployment to provide for the construction of useful public works—

we insert the words "and education", so the language will be "provide relief, work relief, and education", and then insert the words of the amendment proposed by the Senator from Colorado "and with the view", and so forth.

Is the Senator from Colorado willing to offer his amendment with that modification? As the Senator from Virginia [Mr. Glass] says, such amendment would still be optional in later amendments we might offer.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President, there is no objection on enough votes to back me up, a proviso that several hundred my part, although I believe on full consideration that the objective or the purpose of the Senator from Louisiana is realized under the word "relief."

As I view the language of the joint resolution, I have no difficulty with the powers intrusted to the President to spend money for relief purposes, including educational purposes. If there is any objection to the measure as it now stands from the viewpoint of the expenditure of funds by the President, it is that he does not need to fear any limitation in giving relief to any person needing financial relief. He might go down the street and hand out cash to the people on the street under the terms of this bill. He may help students in college, as I view it. The difficulty arises when we come to construction in the nature of public works. There we are confronted with the words "work relief", which the courts may construe as not applicable to a given project in a given locality. The Senator from Louisiana is a keen lawyer. He can weigh the significance of that language without suggestion from any of the rest of us. I am inclined to think that on reconsideration he will feel that what he is seeking is covered by the present language.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit, I wish to say that when we begin to specify, an old rule of law applies, that rule being, as I remember it, "Inclusio unius est exclusio alterius", which translated from the Latin would mean, "If you put something in there, it means you are trying to leave the other thing out of there."

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, may I give the Senator from Louisiana the language of that law maxim, which is "Expressio unius est exclusio alterius." It means just what the Senator says.

Mr. LONG. Yes, sir. In other words, if you put something in there, it means you do not want to put the other thing back. In other words, to include one means to exclude the other.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, to get back to plain English, the suggestion of the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. Long] is included in the bill; and I do wish the classical scholars would let us go on and have a vote on the proposition.

Mr. LONG. I do not want to offend my friend from Virginia. I am glad he called me a classical scholar. The last time I heard the Senator he was not speaking so kindly about me, and I want the record to "stay put" on the matter.

I think the language is all right as it is; I can agree with the Senator in that respect. I think it covers everything in the world. My theory is that when we begin to specify we begin to exclude.

Mr. COSTIGAN. What the Senator from Louisiana says is true with respect to the language incorporated by the committee on page 3. In that amendment there is a specification of certain subjects with respect to which money is to be allocated, but in the initial clause to which we are now referring, may I say to the Senator that the purpose of the language is to make as broad as possible the purposes of the joint resolution?

It is difficult to conceive of anything desirable in the form of relief, whether direct relief, work relief, or public works, which would not be covered by this combination of words:

In order to provide relief and work relief, and with a view to reducing and relieving unemployment, to provide for the construction of useful public works.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, the trouble is you reach the idea of being just and generous the same as if the word "similar" were written in. When you begin to specify, that is when you begin to get into trouble. If we leave it a Pandora's box, it covers everything.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President-

Mr. LONG. I yield to the Senator from Montana.

Mr. WHEELER. I wish to call the attention of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. Costigan] to the fact that there is a serious question in my mind as to whether his amendment would not prevent the administration from completing the Fort Peck Dam and some other projects in the Northwest, because it reads:

In such manner, and for such purposes and such type or types of projects, Federal or non-Federal, as are now or may be hereafter authorized by law of the United States.

The project to which I have referred, together with the other projects, was approved by the President of the United States on the recommendation of the Chief of Engineers of the Army, and there might be some question as to whether or not that could be construed as an approval.

May I suggest to the Senator that he modify his amendment by adding after the words "United States" in line 9, "or approved by the President of the United States"?

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President, the able Senator from Montana has directed attention to the next amendment which I have been planning to offer to the joint resolution and which has not as yet been presented to the Senate.

Mr. WHEELER. I am sorry; I just came in a few moments ago.

Mr. COSTIGAN. It should be said that yesterday I directed a large part of my remarks to the necessity of incorporating language which will protect such public works as Fort Peck, the Grand Coulee, and many other important projects in the Northwest. It seems to me that the amendment suggested by the Senator may be valuable and should be proposed by the Senator when we reach the second amendment unless at this time by rejecting the amendment I am now proposing, we limit the authority given to relief and work relief. The Senator has presented another argument why the amendment now before the Senate should be adopted.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President-

Mr. COSTIGAN. I yield to the Senator from Washington.

Mr. LONG. I thought I yielded to the Senator from Colorado, but go ahead, I do not want to interrupt the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. COSTIGAN. The Senator from Washington [Mr. Bone] requested me to yield to him.

Mr. BONE. I merely want to ask the Senator a question. I understand the purpose of this amendment to be—because I have submitted a similar one—to make sure that there shall be no question of the power of the President to proceed with present public-works operations that are pending or those that are being set up by the various States; in other words, what we commonly know as "public-works operations" under the old P. W. A. Is that correct?

Mr. COSTIGAN. That is correct, and the Senator from Virginia is urging that the President already has the power. What I am now urging upon the Senate is that, if he has that power, there ought to be no objection whatever to the adoption of language which, in the view of competent attorneys, will safeguard that power and not leave it subject to technical attacks.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I am sure that the Senator from Colorado only has in mind expanding the joint resolution, but when you begin to specify you begin to exclude. There is not any question about that in my mind. The minute you say "relief and work relief", one of those even is a modification of the other. Over further, on page 3, from which the Senator read, there is something said about "flood control, and miscellaneous projects, $350,000,000." That is not enough money for the purpose.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, the Senator will observe that the President is authorized to strip from other funds as much as $800,000,000, and add it to the miscellaneous projects.

Mr. LONG. I understand that to be true.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Louisiana yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. LONG. I yield.

Mr. LOGAN. I should like to ask the Senator what difference it makes as to the language that is used in the joint resolution, because if we make no better progress than we have been making all those threatened by starvation will long since have died before we shall ever pass the measure. joint resolution. I notice in the newspapers this morning that they say I conducted a filibuster because I kept quiet.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, I did not mean to suggest the Senator from Louisiana was delaying the progress of the joint resolution, but we have had it up now, I do not know for how long, and we do not seem to have made any progress; and, at the same rate, we will never pass the joint resolution.

Mr. LONG. When this measure was up once before the Senate, and the McCarran amendment was under consideration. I never opened my mouth on the floor of the Senate about the joint resolution at all; and never had anything whatever to do except to vote and to help secure a pair for a colleague which I had been asked to secure. I asked a question or two yesterday, but practically I have said nothing about the measure at all, though, none the less, I read in the newspapers that because I have not said anything there has been a "silent" filibuster against the joint resolution. [Laughter.]

Mr. BARKLEY. If the Senator will yield, as between that type of filibuster and the other, we infinitely prefer the "silent" kind, and if the Senator will continue that type we will not fall out with him.

Mr. LONG. I want the Senate to take a vote on that and find out if the Senator's colleagues stand with him before he commits the Senate.

However, Mr. President, my great difficulty is in getting Senators really to listen for just a moment to the thought of the educational world. The educators of the whole world would like to have a little better consideration. Out of the $3,300,000,000 appropriated last year education was given $20,000,000; that is all. I want to say that the colleges and universities of this country did more good and less harm with the $20,000,000 allotted to them than was done with the entire remaining amount of the $3,300,000,000. So far as the Civilian Conservation Corps is concerned, we would far rather have had 500 young men in Louisiana taken care of under that organization than to have all the other work which was undertaken in the State. I believe in put-ting fiber in manhood and keeping it there after it has been put there. I do not believe in destroying the incentive a man has to make a living. I think when a dollar is spent and with that expenditure there is breathed into a man the spirit of indolence, the spirit of being no account in general, more harm is done in the destruction of the fiber of manhood than is done by dislodging more money from the Government Treasury. In other words, what money is spent ought to be spent in order to build up the fiber and the virtue of mankind rather than to tear it down.

I am told that a man wired here to Washington and said, "Send us a carload of leaves: we have worn the last ones out and we have not anything to sweep any more in this park." Some man told me in Oklahoma City that back of his office there was a lot of dirt in a park and that he counted six times when they moved that dirt from one place to another and then moved the dirt back to where it was.

Mr. President, Louisiana is the leading State in reforesta-We taught the world how to reforest. I am not speaking now from any other standpoint than that of history and what the reports of the United States departments will show. We taught the country how to reforest; we taught them how to plant saplings. I wish to tell you, Mr. President, that sending young men out today to plant saplings tomorrow accomplishes very little, because they do not know a thing in the world about it, and 99 percent of the saplings planted died and never did sprout and never will sprout.

Planting saplings is just as much of a business as is the work of making a cake or setting type in a printing office. It is not something that can be done without any previous experience. While we sent young men to the country so as to take them out of the cities and off the box cars where they were going from city to city, and probably it is somewhat better at least to send them into the country rather than to have them remain in the city, none the less we spent $50 to take one young man off the streets and place him in the

Mr. LONG. I have not obstructed the progress of the | Civilian Conservation Corps out in the woods somewhere. I propose with that $50 to take three young men and give them a college education, just like other young men are getting today, at $15 per student, if the money shall be given to the universities and spent as the last $20,000,000 was spent. Why can we not profit by the good things that develop as well as by the mistakes that we make? Here is an expenditure along lines that many of us have been sponsoring for 15 or 20 years in this country. We have been sponsoring the idea that college education ought to be given to the youth of the land, not based upon the financial capacity of the parents of the students to pay the costs, but based upon the mental capacity of the students to absorb knowledge and of their energy to apply themselves for the purpose of acquiring a college training.

We have been talking about eliminating the "pork" from the joint resolution and having no politics in it. What I want to do is to save and preserve the fiber there is now and to give better fiber to the manhood and womanhood of the United States. What I want to do is to eliminate all politics from our relief program. Another desire of mine is to do the most good to the greatest number with the least drain upon the taxpayers of the United States. For $15 per person-think of it!-$15 per person we can take out of the ranks of labor young men and young women and, instead of teaching them idleness, put them in a university where they may be trained in a way that will redound to the benefit and the advancement of the country.

When the joint resolution was recommitted to the commitee I thought I was going to have a chance to present this matter to the committee. I said to my friend from Virginia, "When the measure goes back to the committee I want a chance to come before the committee." Later on I telephoned the chairman that I hoped the committee would hold hearings and that I should like an opportunity to come before the committee and discuss the matters I wanted to present. Later on I was informed that the joint resolution had been reported and that the committee had had no hearings of any consequence. I do not know whether that statement is exactly correct.

I am not criticizing the committee and I am not criticizing the chairman. I wanted the opportunity to show the committee from facts and from figures that a great part of this money or the larger part of it had been thrown away, that the taxpayers were meeting a bill every day that was being doubled and redoubled on them, that they had to pay the principal and interest. I wanted to show that they were doing in many cases only downright harm.

With all of the unemployment in the country there are many places where we cannot hire men to work. That is a fact. With all the unemployment we have today, I know of instances where men have tried to hire labor and could not get labor because the laborers were afraid if they got a job for a few days they would be taken off the relief and they preferred to stay on the relief, to get a little hand out from day to day, rather than to take the chance of getting off the relief roll and then not getting back on the relief roll. There are certain people who do not want to work anyway. There are a lot of people who are downright lazy and do not want to work. Sometimes I feel inclined that way myself, and I know how people get that feeling.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President-

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Louisiana yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. LONG. I yield.

Mr. BONE. I wonder if the Senator from Louisiana will enlighten us and tell us in what section of the country those people may be found. I think his statement requires some further illumination.

Mr. LONG. There always have been about half a million people in the United States who do not want to work.

Mr. BONE. The Senator might be a little more frank and say where they are.

Mr. LONG. There are a few tramps and hoboes at the bottom, and there are a few tramps and hoboes too rich at the top.

Mr. BONE. The Senator still does not illuminate the situation as to where are those people who refuse to work and refuse to earn a living.

Mr. LONG. I mean to say there have always been, even in prosperous times in the United States, or at any time, several hundred thousand people who just do not want to work and will not work. I will give the Senator an example. In my own home town I knew a carpenter who let the front doorsteps of his own house rot down before he undertook to patch them. We have people everywhere who do not want to work. The point I make is that there is latent in the bones of lots of us a spirit that we should like to live without working if we could do so. Some of us are that way. There have always been, even in our prosperous times, anywhere from 250,000 to 300,000 or 500,000 people who never did work. I know we have such men around my home town. They are around everybody's home town. They are men who sit in the courthouse and play checkers in the summertime or sit in front of the fire in the sheriff's office in the wintertime. There has always been a certain number of people who do not want to work. I do not mean to say that is general or half general, but there are some who will not work. That has been true always. That has been aggravated by the further condition that when a man who really did want to work got on the relief roll through necessity he dared not have the work on the relief roll stopped for fear if he got any private work he never would get back on the relief roll.

Over in a little town out near Mamou, La., a man had a garden where he was raising some turnips, beets, snap beans, cabbage, a little popcorn, and stuff like that. agent came along and said he could not be put on the dole because he had a garden and therefore did not have any business on the dole. The man went out the next day and plowed up his garden so he would be qualified to go on the dole.

It has gotten so now all through that part of the countryand not only that part of the country, but all over the United States-that a man does not dare have a garden, because if he does he will be taken off the relief roll.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President-

Mr. LONG. I yield to the Senator from Washington. Mr. BONE. I do not wish to interrupt the interesting discourse of my friend from Louisiana, but I have a very keen interest in the suggestion of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. COSTIGAN], because in my section of the country and throughout the West there are a great many projects designated as public-works projects which are very vitally tied into the suggestion made by the Senator from Colorado in his amendment. I have submitted an amendment of a similar character. I hope the Senator from Louisiana will let us vote. If he wishes to offer an amendment of his own, I am perfectly willing that he should do so, but I should like to have a vote on the pending question. I recognize the Senator's right to talk on this matter, but I should like to have a vote on the pending question, which is so vitally important to my people. If the Senator from Louisiana wishes to offer an amendment of his own, I certainly shall not object.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? Mr. LONG. I yield to the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. COSTIGAN. There are no differences in opinion between the Senator from Louisiana and other Members of the Senate as to the importance of education and our desire to aid a proper educational program. The inquiry, which I now address to the Senator, is whether his amendment may not be included among the specified limiting items on page 3 of the joint resolution, rather than as a qualification of the broad purposes designed to be covered by the joint resolution.

Mr. LONG. I think it can be done, but while I am speaking on this educational matter I desire to take a few minutes further to complete my statement. It will not take long. I want my friend from Washington to listen to what I have to say, rather than to watch the time clock to see how long I take to say it.

I have just been stating the fault which would be in any system, and more in this system than in any other system, which is that when we go out to spend $100 and do not do any good with it, we do not build anything, but we tear down the very thing we have taught the people all our lives to do as necessary. For instance, I had rather the Government never spent a dime in the State of Louisiana than to have taught my people not to raise a garden in order that they might get on the relief dole.

I went over Louisiana for years. I started the "pot likker" craze throughout the State. Why? I started out to teach the people of Louisiana to plant a garden, to raise turnip greens, to raise various and sundry vegetable products, and to live at home and by that we never felt the depression when it came on in 1929 until the dole money began to be put out. The minute an effort was made to put out the dole money and the people found they could not get on the dole if they had a garden, that they could not get on the dole if they had a little job of any kind, then we began to have the dole in the rural sections in the State of Louisiana. I do not think we ever would have had to have near all we did, if the dole had not been started in that way in Louisiana. The Federal Government has gone to those people, where we spent millions of dollars to teach them to raise a garden, and has educated them not to plant a garden and not to have a garden because they could not stay on the dole if they did have a garden.

So, Mr. President, at a later time in the consideration of this joint resolution-I am going to speak to the point-I shall offer an amendment, and I hope Senators will not think I am delaying the joint resolution. I have talked on this measure less than anybody here that I know about. All told, I have not consumed 40 minutes of the Senate's time on the joint resolution, and yet I am the only Senator about whom there has been any complaint.

I do not understand this kind of business. The only man about whom there has been any complaint on the ground of taking up time has been myself. I did not talk a minute on the joint resolution the last time it was before the Senate, and I have talked on it less than 40 minutes since it has been here this time. I shall offer, however, and I shall explain, in connection with this joint resolution, an amendment which I believe will be accepted by practically everybody interested in education throughout the country, to take $1,000,000,000 of this money that the authorities do not know what they are going to do with, and with which they probably will do more harm than good in some cases, and let it be used for the purpose of providing college education that can be provided for around $120 a year as the part paid by the United States.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. Costigan] to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. COSTIGAN. I suggest the absence of a quorum. The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will call the roll. The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Coolidge	Johnson	O'Mahoney
Ashurst	Copeland	Keves	Pittman
Austin	Costigan	King	Pope
Bachman	Couzens	La Follette	Radcliffe
Bailey	Cutting	Lewis	Reynolds

The VICE PRESIDENT. Eighty-eight Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. Costigan] to the amendment of the committee.

Davis

Mr. COSTIGAN. I ask for the yeas and nays on my

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Chief Clerk called the roll.

Mr. LOGAN. I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. Davis], who is absent. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Indiana [Mr. Van Nuysl and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. LEWIS. I rise to announce the absence of the Senator from Arkansas [Mrs. Caraway] and the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. Overton] caused by illness.

I also announce the absence of the Senator from Indiana [Mr. Van Nuys] and the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER], who are necessarily detained.

Mr. HARRISON (after having voted in the negative). I have a general pair with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. Mc-NARY], but I am advised that if present he would vote "nay" on this question. Therefore I will let my vote stand.

Mr. AUSTIN. The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. Davis] is absent on account of illness. His general pair and its transfer have been announced.

The Senator from Maine [Mr. WHITE] is necessarily absent. I am not advised how he would vote on this question. He has a general pair with the Senator from Arkansas [Mrs. CARAWAY].

The result was announced—yeas 32, nays 56, as follows:

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, I have joined with my colleague the junior Senator from Washington [Mr. Schwel-LENBACH] in presenting a group of amendments which I think are exactly like those submitted by the Senator from Colorado. I ask the clerk to read the amendments, which follow the one which has just been voted on, and I will ask for a vote on the amendments. They are somewhat similar in character to the one just voted on.

Overton

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will read.
The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 2, line 2, after the word "President", it is proposed to insert the following: "in such manner, and for such purposes and such type or types of projects. Federal or non-Federal, as are now or may be hereafter authorized by law of the United States."

Mr. BONE. May I add to that the words: "or approved by the President."?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment is modified as suggested by the Senator from Washington.

Mr. BONE. I will ask that the clerk read the rest of the amendments, and that we may have a vote on them en bloc. I take it they will be voted down.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will state the other amendments.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 3, line 17, it is proposed to strike out the word "public", and in line 18, strike out the words "or political subdivisions thereof" and insert in lieu thereof the following: "Territories, possessions, municipalities, public bodies and projects (other than those included in other categories herein specified) of a type or types now eligible for loans or grants or both under section 203 of title II of the National Industrial Recovery Act."

On page 7, line 15, before the word "to" insert the following: "(a) to make loans (1) to States, Territories, possessions, municipalities, and public bodies and (2) to private bodies to finance projects of a character now eligible for loans under section 203 of title II of the National Industrial Recovery Act; (b) to make grants as well as loans (1) to States. Territories, possessions, municipalities, and public bodies and (2) to nonprofit agencies, corporations, and associations established for the purpose of providing electrification to rural communities; (c) to establish and prescribe duties and functions of governmental agencies (including corporations with corporate authority only as approved by the President and within the scope of this joint resolution): (d) to delegate the powers conferred on him under this joint resolution to any governmental agency (including a corporation or permanent department of the Government); and (e)."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendments.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, I have just a word to offer. A great many communities in this country, not hundreds, but thousands of communities, pursuant to what appears to have been a deliberate invitation on the part of the Governmen, acting through its agencies, have been asked to prepare programs of public works. I assume that every Member of the Senate is familiar with that operation in his own State. If it has not been accomplished in other States, I should like to know which State has been missed.

In my State the word went out from the Government representatives there for each community to prepare a budget of its public-works projects of the character indicated in the joint resolution, or in the amendment of the Senator from Colorado.

I stated yesterday, and I desire to repeat, that if by any chance the courts shall so construe the language of the pending measure as to make the consummation of the desires of these people impossible, then a very great disillusionment is coming to them, and I think we ought to know that in advance; we should be fully advised of the possible effects of judicial construction. I ask for a vote.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, may I ask whether the amendment on page 2, line 2, was agreed to?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It was agreed to. The first amendment of the committee, on page 1, line 3, was agreed to, and the vote was reconsidered, and the question now is on agreeing to the amendments offered by the Senator from Washington [Mr. Bone].

Mr. CLARK. A parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. CLARK. It is my understanding that by a Senate order the committee amendments were to be taken up first for consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That is correct.

Mr. CLARK. Has the Senator from Washington offered an amendment to the pending committee amendment?

The VICE PRESIDENT. He has done so and has received unanimous consent of the Senate to consider an entire block of amendments which cover the entire joint resolution. The Senate can do anything by unanimous consent that does not violate the Constitution of the United States.

Mr. BONE. I pursued the course referred to in order to expedite a vote.

Mr. BORAH. The amendment on page 2, line 2, has been agreed to, as I understand?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It was agreed to.

Mr. BORAH. The first amendment offered by the Senator from Washington proposes to insert the words:

In such manner, and for such purposes and such type or types of projects, Federal or non-Federal, as are now or may be hereafter authorized by law of the United States.

How could non-Federal projects be authorized by law of the United States?

Mr. BONE. Because the original P. W. A. Act authorizes the President to allocate funds for that purpose.

Mr. BORAH. But the amendment says "authorized by law of the United States."

Mr. BONE. We have added the words "or approved by the President." If there is any doubt or any question, if there is any twilight zone there, that expression ought to correct it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendments offered by the Senator from Washington.

The amendments were rejected.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question now is on agreeing to the first committee amendment.

THE RIGHT TO EDUCATION

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I hope that I will not offend anyone who has an amendment pending if I now proceed to complete a few remarks. I stopped short a moment ago because the Senator from Washington wanted certain amendments voted on; I cut my speech short so as to accommodate him.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, I wish very much the Senator from Louisiana would accommodate the Senator from Virginia and let us vote on the first committee amendment, which has been pending 2 days.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I sidetracked any effort to talk for the benefit of the Senator from Washington and the Senator from Colorado; then I voted for the amendments of both, though I thought they were both wrong, in order to show that I was not going to stand in their way. I not only stopped talking after letting them talk but I voted with them. So I thought that ought to please everyone who was trying to amend the bill.

I desire to complete my few remarks concerning what seems to me to be about the only sensible thing which has been said regarding this joint resolution since it has been before the Senate the second time. I am trying to appeal to the Senate, instead of throwing away any more money, to use this money actually for relief, actually to cure unemployment and to educate the youth of the United States. I am trying to get the Senate to think just for a moment whether it is not better to spend this money at the rate of $15 per month per person to educate the youth of this land in the universities and colleges we now have rather than to pay $50 a month to someone to sweep leaves from one side of the road to the other until the leaves are worn out.

I said in the beginning that I had a friend who told me that in a certain park where the leaves had been swept out so many times that they telegraphed to Washington to send them another carload of leaves.

I also said I had a friend in Oklahoma City who told me last week when he came to see me in my room that he had counted six times when they had moved dirt from one place to another and then moved the dirt back to its original place

So I have proposed to the Senate and to the country that there be incorporated on page 3 of the joint resolution an amendment providing that a billion dollars shall be devoted to be spent as we have lately spent $20,000,000. The colleges of this country, unless there has been a late message to the contrary, have been given to understand that the measly $20,000,000 which we managed to have appropriated to the universities of the country so as to help young men who were undertaking to secure an education will no longer be available.

That money was given to the universities and was used at the rate of around $15 to the student, as a result of which the University of Louisiana and other similar universities were able to take care of from 450 to 500 students who otherwise would not have been able to attend college.

One of our fundamental defects, one of our fundamental troubles, is that the right to a high education, the right to a college education, and in some places even to high-school education, depends upon the financial capacity of the parents to support the cost of education. A fundamental fault with this country today, one which is tending to create unemployment, one which is tending to create inequalities that exist between men, is that the right to education and the right to training does not depend upon the ability of a child to learn nor upon the energy a child is willing to expend in order to learn, but the right to a college education depends upon whether or not the parents of the child have the money with which to send him to college. One can get an education and the other cannot get an education. One is taught in a law school and another one is not taught in a law school. One is taught the science of medicine and another one is not taught the science of medicine. They are born equal in one respect only—they are equal in the matter of debts. Today every child who is born in America has tied around his neck his proportionate part of the public debt. The debts of the United States, public and private, amount to $252,000,000,000. That means that every child, male and female, when it comes on earth and as long as it remains on earth, on the average, owes about $2,000. So we are carrying out the Constitution of the United States, as interpreted before it was written by the Declaration of Independence, that all men are created equal; we are carrying that out in one particular—that is, that there will never be any child born on earth so poor that he will not have hung around his neck the present, his birth present of a $2,000 debt, some may say.

We do not neglect children in that particular; every child who comes here is given one present, a $2,000 debt the day he is born.

It is because of the fault in the distribution of education that so many of these inequalities have been caused. The only boy who can go to college is the boy whose father is able to shell out enough money to pay the living expense and the cost of tuition at college.

So during this depression there seemed to be a little idea of social justice along the line of education. The Louisiana plan was followed to some extent, Mr. President, and an attempt was made to apply it in the United States, but they have found out that it is creating a terrible germ. We found out that with $20,000,000 the universities could expend that money at the rate of $15 a child and give young men such credits and reduced costs for tuition that for $15 a child, $120 a year on the average, a boy or a girl could go through the university, and the magnificent sum of $20,000,000 out of $3,300,000,000 was spent for that purpose. In other words, they spent for this purpose about one-half of a copper cent every time they spent a dollar on the folderols. But they have now decided that they have got to stop that; that it is creating a germ which is going to be hard to control. They have decided that they have started something which is setting a bad example, because every other man's boy and girl in the United States is trying to be cared for, as some were cared for out of the little $20,000,000. In other words, they say they have got to turn the hands of the clock back because of the fact that many boys and girls are now being led to expect that the Government is going to see that they are educated: that it is a terrible thing to have people depending upon the Government for an education, and, therefore, according to one of the learned men from Iowa, according to one of the learned men who came to see me, they are now undertaking to take away the little $20,000,000 because the example which is being set is such that one man's boy is getting to the point where he thinks he has as much right to a college education as has the other man's boy.

In other words, a bad example, a very pernicious example, has been set with $20,000,000. Out of the entire total debt of $10,000,000,000, from which one can hardly see any good that has come even with a spirit level and a periscope—out of the total sum of $10,000,000,000, the little sum of $20,000,000 which has been spent for education amounts to about one-fifth part of 1 percent, and they want to discontinue that because it is setting a bad example.

Mr. President, I desire the Congress of the United States to spend the money of the people in such way as will do the most good. Has Congress reached the point where it will not think? Has Congress reached the point where it will not use its mind at all? If Congress would stop for just a minute and use its own faculties, it would come to understand that here is an advantageous way to spend this money.

Here is a cheap way to cure the depression. Here is a way to do eternal, permanent good. Here is a way by which the fiber of mankind is encouraged and virtue is not destroyed. Therefore, I propose to offer an amendment in a latter part of the pending joint resolution to effectuate the purpose I have described.

Mr. President, I have completed the remarks I intended to make on this subject at this time. I am not going further to tax the good humor of my friend from Virginia. I only have a few remarks to add under this heading. I want the Senator from Virginia to understand that I have no intention of unnecessarily taking up time. But the Senator from Virginia comes from one of the leading States from an educational standpoint. In his State we find the University of Virginia, and when Thomas Jefferson set forth what he wished to have on his tombstone one of the things he wanted there was that he was the founder of the University of Virginia. I want to find in the Senate the person or the persons who are able or who are capable of extending education throughout the United States. I do not believe that the Senator from Virginia is nearly so sympathetic toward this joint resolution as he has been toward other bills I have heard him sponsor. He lacks the fire he formerly had. He has not as yet told any of us what he thinks about us, even in private, and I do not believe he is really nearly so enthusiastic over the pending measure as I have seen him over other bills; but if we could get written into this joint resolution a provision that a billion dollars shall be used as I have indicated it would be well. Of the $5,000,000,000, 95 percent is going to be thrown away and never will do any good. I say that advisedly; I am not saying it merely for the sake of talking. Senators may think these power dams are going to do a lot of good-and I am for all of them; I should like to see 10 where 1 has been provided for; but by the time they get through spending this money and throwing away about $4 where they beneficially spend $1, and having it messed up by a bunch of bureaus in Washington, and by the time you get through paying your part of the taxes to do it, you would have been better off if you had taken your own money and done it in the first place, as you know.

I had a little experience with some of these bureaus. When I was Governor of Louisiana they wrote me a letter saying that if I did not reform one of our boards they were not going to give us any Federal help. I wrote the board a letter which is here in the files and it would be well if somebody would look at it and read it. That was before I learned to use diplomacy. [Laughter.] I cannot understand that kind of a greeting accorded such a remark. When they said, "Either do this or do that or we will do nothing", I wrote them back and said, "Keep your little money up there; we do not need it. You are not going to tell us how to spend a dime of it. If you have anything that looks good that you want to tell us, that is all right." What did they do? They finally came down there and interfered with us in the use of limestone as an aggregate in publicroad construction. They would not allow us to use the marble limestone there on the ground because, as they said, it did not meet the Federal specifications. Whereupon we told them to keep their money and we would use the limestone, anyway. They said that it would not do; that they required 3,500 pounds tensile strength to the square inch and that such strength could not be obtained with our limestone. Lo and behold, when we got our limestone roads built they brought a machine down there that would crack a road up at 5,000 pounds to the square inch, but their machine would not crack the road work; it would not crack the blocks. So they sent back and got a machine that would test up to 10,000 pounds to the square inch, but that would not crack the road. What did they do, this gang that had been down there telling us that they would not give us Federal relief money if we did not build the road as they said we should? They took our formula and put the inscription "Federal specification number so and so" on it, and sent that out to the country as being a great discovery that had been made by the Federal Government, notwithstanding the fact that they would not pay a dime in the beginning on the road that we were constructing with that lime-stone.

They were going to dedicate a bridge I built with money of other people. I said, "When are you going to dedicate this bridge?" They said, "We have 1 mile of road to build yet." I said, "That is 1 mile of road, and at the most it never did take more than a week for us to build 1 mile of road." They informed me that they had to have about 4 or 5 weeks to build that other mile of road; that the Federal Government had so many rules and regulations and other things that they would not be able to build that mile of road for 5 weeks. So we set the ceremony for the opening of the bridge ahead 5 weeks; and, I will be dadgummed if when the 5 weeks had passed that mile of road had not been completed and the bridge was not connected with the road, and so we had to hold the ceremony incident to opening the bridge without the connecting link being ready.

So I want to say for my part—and I mean every word I am saying—we would have been better off if we had never had a dollar of Federal money. The Government has gone in there and spent this money and told our people, "If you have got a garden, we are not going to put you on the relief roll", and they, therefore, do not raise any gardens. It has said to the man who has a potato patch that it is not going to let him have any relief money, and so he does not have a potato patch.

In my section a man can go into the country and raise a garden in 6 weeks' time. He can plant turnips and soon they will be up above the ground, and one can have turnips and corn meal and catch fish somewhere and live easier than anywhere else on Gad's living earth. The sun shines there about 300 out of every 365 days, and the people have absolutely not much to worry about along the lines referred to, except in some of the crowded points, and with less employment our people in Louisiana can make out better than can people anywhere in the world.

When I saw the hard times coming on, we put out a little paper from the agricultural department of Louisiana, and we taught everybody in that State how to plant a garden. We taught them how to swap; we taught them how to swap a sack of beans from the hills of north Louisiana for a sack of rice from the lowlands of south Louisiana, whether either party had a dollar or not. We published an exchange list, which I should like some of the Members of the Senate to see; so that if a man in south Louisiana had a coop of chickens he could not sell he could trade it to a man in north Louisiana maybe for a sack of beans or a sack of potatoes. Lo and behold, this relief outfit came along, and if a man advertised that he had anything that he wanted to put on the list to swap to somebody they cut him off the relief roll, and, therefore, now none of them have anything they want to swap. That is how the relief agencies act; that is what is happening to relief.

The Senator from Virginia reminds me that I was not to tax his patience. The reason I am doing so is the Senator looked as if he was getting interested as I was talking, and for that reason I am proceeding for a few minutes longer than I had intended. But the point is, you are never going to get the country back on a good basis when you are teaching the people to do away with the very things they have got to have. This straightedge of relief! If you are going to give any relief money, why not amend this joint resolution-I guess we could not get it amended in that particular-and let the States be responsible for it. I will guarantee that the State of Louisiana can exist on half what they are spending there right now and do much better. I make the statement that we can get along on 25 percent of what they are spending down there now if they will spend it in the right way.

I would make a man have a garden before I would give him any relief, instead of telling him he had to plow up his garden in order to get relief.

I would say, "God helps those who help themselves. You can raise some things in this ground, and if you are so low down and so trifling and no account that you are not willing to plant a few turnips and a few beans and a few potatoes and make what you can make, and have a shoat around the house, I will take you off the relief roll." I would not give anything to a man who is that low down. Instead of that, they come along and say, "If you have a garden, we will not give you any relief at all, and if you accidentally go out and, by chance, catch a day's work, we will take you off the relief roll altogether." Along comes somebody with a little temporary work; here is a man who decides he wants to build a barn. He would go out and hire a few people for 5 days, or perhaps for 2 weeks, in order to build a barn, but, lo and behold, he cannot get anybody to work for him, for the reason that anybody who works on a barn is going to be taken off the relief rolls. That is how the money is being spent.

It is mighty hard to get the Senate interested in anything sensible right now because it is liable not to receive approval on the outside. It is mighty hard to get the Senate to be concerned about anything sensible in connection with this matter. Oh, it is somebody else's business. Who is spending this money? Who picked these men to spend this money? Did anybody ever vote for one of them? Not one of them could get enough votes to wad a shotgun. Who is it that is picking them to spend this money? Who is setting up these rules and these regulations and these laws to spend this money, anyway? It is nobody's business except to load on to the public debt. That is all they have been doing.

We had a little relief of our own in Louisiana; we had a little relief in the city of New Orleans before Federal relief was started. The entire sum we spent in a year, I think, was around three or four hundred thousand dollars; at any rate, it was under a half million dollars; and there was not a single complaint down there.

Now Federal relief agencies are spending in the State probably a million and three-quarters dollars a month, and I would say that they are spending three-quarters of a million dollars a month in the city of New Orleans, whereas we went a whole year on $350,000. We told the people, "Go out and do a little fishing on your own account, raise your gardens, do what you can to help yourselves, and then we will give you what little we have; if you can get a day's work, go get it, and we will help you what we have to on the side.' Today they are spending in that city probably $750,000 a month-perhaps it is less than that, but at least a halfmillion. They are spending three-quarters of a million dollars a month where we spent from $350,000 to $400,000 all winter; and there is more distress today, with their relief, than we had before we ever had any relief at all. If, however, I could get the Senate to do the sensible thing about this matter, if I could get the Senate to take a billion dollars of the five billion dollars and use a billion dollars for the purpose of giving to every boy and to every girl an opportunity to go to college at a cost of $15 a month, we would only pay out from $120 to $135 a year on any boy or girl, and we would take care of a million people much cheaper than it is costing us to take care of a quarter of a million at the present time.

We would be able to take out of the ranks of labor young men and young women who are going from door to door and from place to place trying to get a job of some kind when they have no business trying to get a job of any kind until their education shall have been completed. We would end the age-old curse that the only man who can get an education is the young man whose father is wealthy enough to send him to college.

Am I arguing anything new? No! We did it to the tune of $20,000,000 last year, but now it is said, "Oh, no; we are starting a bad system." It is said we are getting young men and young women to depend upon the Government for their education, and this system must be stopped because it is liable to grow. It is the very system that ought to grow. The United States Government and the State governments owe to these boys and girls the right to a college education. I had just as much right to a college education as any boy that was ever born. I was not able to go to college while my neighbor's boy was able to go. The only reason he was able to go was because his father was better off than my father. I had just as much right at my birth to a college training and to an education which the college could give me as any other boy who was ever born, and so did the neighbor's boy.

If the United States today would do its duty and would try to equalize opportunity instead of throwing this money away that is going to be thrown away-I wish to say that again: Throwing this money away, because that is what is being done with 95 percent of it—we would not have the condition which exists today. We could take a billion dollars of this money and do what with it? We could give 800,000 young men and young women the opportunity to go to college tomorrow morning who cannot now go to college because of the fact that they have not the money with which to pay their college expenses. Such a plan would take 800,000 young men and young women who are looking for a place to get a job, and put them in college, would keep them from throwing some able-bodied man out of a job, and the fiber and the virtue of young American manhood and womanhood would be developed rather than diminished as a result of the relief activities which are now being carried on. That is what a billion dollars would do. But that is too sensible a thing to talk about in the United States Senate right now.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, if the Senator from Louisiana will let us get to that part of the joint resolution which he proposes to amend, we may be able to do what he desires sooner than we otherwise could.

Mr. LONG. That is the greatest concession I have ever had. With that statement, I shall certainly stop talking.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the adoption of the committee amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 3, line 5, to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That except as to such part of the appropriation made herein as the President may deem necessary for continuing relief as authorized under the Federal Emergency Relief Act of 1933, as amended, this appropriation shall be available for the following classes of projects, and the amounts to be expended for each class shall not, except as hereinafter provided, exceed the respective amounts stated, namely, highways, roads, streets, and gradecrossing elimination, $800,000,000; rural rehabilitation and relief in stricken agricultural areas, $500,000,000; rural electrification, $100,000,000; housing, $450,000,000; projects for professional and clerical persons, $300,000,000; civilian Conservation Corps, $600,000,000; public projects of States or political subdivisions thereof, $900,000,000; sanitation, prevention of soil erosion, reforestation, forestation, flood control, and miscellaneous projects, $350,000,000; Provided further, That not to exceed 20 percent of the amount herein appropriated may be used by the President to increase any one or more of the foregoing limitations if he finds it necessary to do so in order to effectuate the purpose of this joint resolution.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk to the amendment of the committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. In the committee amendment, on page 3, line 17, after the numerals "$600,000,000" and the semicolon it is proposed to insert the words "loans or grants for"; and, in line 18, after the word "subdivisions", to insert the words "or agencies", so as to make the sentence read "loans or grants for public projects of State or political subdivisions or agencies thereof, $900,000,000."

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, I have no objection to the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the amendment to the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, I have an amendment, which has been printed and is lying on the table, which I desire to offer at this time to the committee amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The Legislative Clerk. On page 3, line 14, after the comma following the word "areas", it is proposed to insert the words "and irrigation and reclamation", so as to make the sentence read: "Rural rehabilitation and relief in stricken agricultural areas, and irrigation and reclamation, $500,000,000."

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator from Nevada that under the language of the amendment reported by the committee, both irrigation and reclamation projects are authorized.

Mr. McCARRAN. Will the Senator kindly indicate wherein they are authorized?

Mr. BYRNES. If the Senator will look at the RECORD of this morning and read the letter of the Comptroller General, I invite his attention to the fact that under item 8 appear the words "miscellaneous projects." In the letter I submitted to the Comptroller General I specifically referred to reclamation projects, and the Comptroller General, in the letter which he wrote me and which I have had inserted in the RECORD, states they are included in item 8.

Furthermore, I am sure the Senator will be interested in line 21, section 10, where the joint resolution itself refers to reclamation projects. I think there can be no question as to the construction to be placed upon the language as including reclamation projects. The preceding item is held to include irrigation projects. In order that the RECORD may show the intention of the committee, I will say that there is no question that both should be included in the classification set forth.

Mr. McCARRAN. If that be true, I see no reason why the language I propose should not be adopted. We would all rather have it in the law than in the interpretation of the law.

Mr. GLASS. The amendment should not be adopted because the language it proposes to incorporate is already in the joint resolution. It would be a useless repetition.

Mr. BYRNES. May I suggest to the Senator that I know what he has in mind? Because there are really not 8 but some 60 projects which would be cared for under his classification, that is the only reason why they were not all included. They could not very well all be included. If it were attempted to itemize them with that particularity we would be in some danger of having an adverse determination hereafter.

In order to make sure that they were included, I submitted the matter to the Comptroller General. So long as the Office of the Comptroller General says they are included and he will approve the vouchers, then there is no question as to the ruling of that Office. There can be a question only where the Comptroller General does not approve. Then there is an argument between the executive departments and the Comptroller as to whether he is right. But where he approves it the matter is determined, and he has said that he approves.

Mr. McCARRAN. That is under the title "Miscellaneous Projects "?

Mr. BYRNES. Yes; and it is also confirmed by section 10 of the joint resolution.

Mr. McCARRAN. Of course, if we read section 10 and apply the plain simple language of that section, we could get no consolation whatever. Permit me to read it.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield before he does that?

Mr. McCARRAN. Certainly.

Mr. KING. May I say to my friend from South Carolina that in addition to passing the scrutiny of Mr. McCarl, the Comptroller General, it probably will have to pass the scrutiny of Secretary Ickes, and perhaps of the Attorney General, and the Director of Reclamation?

Mr. BYRNES. I will state to the Senator that this classification, as the Senator from Virginia has said heretofore, was prepared by officials of the Federal Relief Administration and their attorneys, and their construction was that the projects referred to were included; and expenditures under it will be submitted, not to the Attorney General, but to the Comptroller General. If he approves an expenditure, it is paid. It is only when he disapproves it that there is a controversy between the Attorney General and the Comptroller General.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President—
Mr. McCARRAN. I yield to the Senator from Minnesota.
Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Having heard the explanation, it appears to me that there is danger that Comptroller General McCarl may be doing the legislating, instead of the Senate.

Mr. BYRNES. I do not think so. I do not think it is fair to say that. The Comptroller General is not legislating. I asked his interpretation solely to obtain an informal opinion as to whether or not, under this classification, the various things that were intended to be done would be construed as authorized; that is all. He is not legislating. He is simply interpreting the language of this particular section.

Mr. GLASS. As a matter of fact, is it not true that Comptroller General McCarl is not in Washington, and that this was an opinion of one of his assistants?

Mr. BYRNES. That is correct. That is why I said, "the Office of the Comptroller General."

Mr. GLASS. So far as I am concerned, I do not need any Comptroller General or any Attorney General or Secretary Ickes or anybody else to tell me that "miscellaneous projects" under this joint resolution include anything and everything that the President, in his discretion, may determine to do. In addition to the $350,000,000 suggested—because it is all suggestive; there is not a mandatory word in the joint resolution-in addition to the $350,000,000 suggested for use for miscellaneous purposes the President is specifically authorized to transfer $800,000,000 more, making $1,150,000,000 that he may use for irrigation or education or anything else for which he may determine to use it. If he does not determine to use it for those purposes, it is not going to be used for those purposes. There is nothing in the joint resolution that compels its use for those purposes.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President-

Mr. McCARRAN. I yield to the Senator from Minne-

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. If it is the clear understanding that Congress agrees with the interpretation of the chairman of the committee, I am perfectly willing to go by that, if that is to be the law. There has been a great deal of controversy here, however, and there seems to be a great deal of misunderstanding. We desire to have a clear understanding that there is no limitation; there is nothing barred out. For instance, river and harbor works are not mentioned in this category, although millions of dollars have been spent in that way, and various projects are in process of being built. We desire assurance that such projects are not going to be discontinued, and that the projects under construction are going to be finished.

Mr. GLASS. I will remind the Senator from Minnesota that on yesterday the Senator from Florida [Mr. Fletcher] interrogated me about rivers and harbors, and I seemed to satisfy him completely by telling him that rivers and harbors could be included under this miscellaneous item, with the right of the President to transfer $800,000,000 to the $350,-000,000 provided.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. With that understanding, I shall not offer an amendment.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Nevada further yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. McCARRAN. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. BYRNES. I will say to the Senator that the joint resolution provides that in the discretion of the President he may spend the money for anything; and the only reason for asking any interpretation is because of the questions that have been asked. Therefore we asked those who are going to administer the joint resolution. They say they can spend money for reclamation, irrigation, and rivers and harbors. Because of the questions which have been asked, and because it has been said that even though those who are to administer the joint resolution say they can spend the money in a certain way, some question will be raised by the Comptroller General; we asked the Comptroller General, and he says they can spend it in that way. What more could be

Mr. McCarran. Mr. President, I desire first to address myself to the enlightening remarks of the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. Byrnes], whose views I always respect, as I always respect the views of the Chairman of the Appropriations Committee, even though at some time he does not go along with me on the amendment for the master plumbers of the country.

I address myself to section 10, referred to by the Senator from South Carolina. With the permission of the Senate, I will read section 10:

Federal public-roads projects, rivers and harbors projects, reclamation projects, and public-buildings projects undertaken pursuant to the provisions of this joint resolution shall be carried out under the direction of the respective permanent Government departments or agencies having jurisdiction of such projects, and the performance of all contracts in connection with such projects shall be subject to the supervision and control of such departments or agencies.

The language, together with the punctuation used therein, is so specific that it has nothing to do with the section we now seek to amend. In other words, if reclamation and irrigation are not included in the amendment of the committee as it appears on page 3, then section 10 has no application whatever. That is so clear to me, at least, that I cannot see it otherwise. If, however, reclamation and irrigation are included in the allocations as they have been attempted to be made in section 3, then perchance section 10 would become operative.

That brings us back to page 3, and to the lines to which I have attempted to make a very simple and, to my mind, only a corrective amendment. I say "corrective" because I have been advised that the term "miscellaneous" covers a multitude of things—covers everything.

Mr. GLASS. A multitude of faults.

Mr. McCARRAN. I hope I shall not be indulging too much in facetiousness if I say that the old spinster, "Miss Cellaneous", has only served to bring suitors into court. I have never known that term to bring any other result; neither have I ever known that particular and now avowed thing to bring greater results.

If, as a matter of fact, all that is said by the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. Byrnes] is true—and I have a most profound respect for his interpretation—I ask the Senate of the United States who does the legislating for the people of this country? I ask the Senate of the United States—why should we unload our burdens on the Comptroller General? Are they not ours? Are we not responsible for the language? Why say that the Comptroller General has said, in anticipation of the enactment of legislation, that he will construe certain language along a certain line?

To my mind, that was never the office or the province or among the powers of the Comptroller General. I think we should write the law and, when we have written it, let the Comptroller General construe it as best he can. But when an opportunity is afforded here for those who are charged with a responsibility to write something into a law the making of which they have in their hands, why shirk the duty? Why say to the Comptroller General, "You may construe it afterward. We have on file your letter in which you say you will construe it so-and-so."

There are only two words here, but those two words mean more to the life of the West than anything else of which I have personal knowledge. When I say "the West", may I enlist the attention of those who are wedded to the East and the South, and who do not know the problems we in the West have to encounter? They do not realize, perchance, that we cannot cause two blades of grass to grow where one has formerly grown unless we have the water that comes down from the snowy summits of the mountains. They do not realize, perchance, that the great territory into which the unemployed must go in the years yet to come is the West. When I say "the West", I am going to limit myself to the territory west of the Mississippi; and then, if I might be more specific, I would say the West of adventure yet existing; the West of the Mountain States, where reclamation and irrigation are the only means of livelihood.

In the pending joint resolution, Mr. President, there are terms that might imply the creation of homesteads where men might live and employ agencies around them, or might live by their own exertions. Where is the possibility for homesteads? Where does it exist? Where is the possibility for toil, for labor? Where is the possibility to absorb the 20,000,000 now out of employment?

I point to the West, and then I am going to point to something else, I hope, before the Congress shall adjourn, and that is the great Territorial possession of Alaska, which stands today as the West stood in the years that have passed.

Reclamation, the conservation of the waters which otherwise will flow down and be lost, and irrigation, will make for this country new homes, new possibilities, new things that are worth while.

Why deny us the right to insert the two words in this joint resolution?

Mr. President, I hope that my advocacy of another amendment which will come before us, with whatever contentious elements may be involved, will not take from the force of my advocacy of something which means so much to the people of the great western section. I hope there will be nothing in my words or in my thoughts that will take from the force and effect of an effort which was made after the publicworks bill was passed, when groups of us—for there are Senators on the floor who joined with me at that time—went to the President and to Secretary Ickes and asked them to allocate $250,000,000 for reclamation and irrigation, just as we had allocated $400,000,000 in the same measure for public highways.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McCARRAN. I yield.

Mr. ASHURST. My disposition and desire as to the pending joint resolution are to follow the Senator from Virginia in all the points, but frankness compels me to say that there is so much force, from a legal viewpoint, in the argument made by the Senator from Nevada [Mr. McCarran] that I hope the committee will take this amendment to conference for a careful examination.

Mr. GLASS. I have no objection whatsoever, Mr. President. The whole thing is merely suggestive, and I have no objection in the world.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President, if the Senator from Nevada will yield, will the Senator from Virginia permit the addition of the words "transmountain diversion", which I discussed yesterday, as part of the amendment for inclusion?

Mr. McCARRAN. I think that is all a part of irrigation and reclamation, and I should be glad to accept it.

Mr. COSTIGAN. And may I add the words "water conservation"?

Mr. GLASS. What else? This shows the difficulty about the thing. If we accept one project, then they come tumbling one after another. I have no objection to the inclusion of reclamation and irrigation, because the whole thing is suggestive anyhow; it is all up to the President, and I accept the amendment.

Mr. COSTIGAN. I offered an amendment to the amendment, which I understood the Senator from Nevada to accept, so as to add the words "water conservation" and "transmountain diversion."

Mr. McCARRAN. I think that is all included in the two generic terms.

Mr. GLASS. If it is all included in the two generic terms, let us have the two generic terms, and nothing else.

Mr. McCARRAN. I accept the amendment to my amendment offered by the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. GLASS. The Senator is running a risk of my withdrawing my acceptance of his amendment, if he is going to accept all other amendments.

Mr. McCARRAN. It is only explanatory. I know the Senator will not do that.

Mr. GLASS. Oh, well; let it go. It does not matter.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Nevada, as modified, to the committee amendment.

The amendment to the amendment, as modified, was agreed to.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I have sent to the desk an amendment I propose to the committee amendment, which I ask the clerk to read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will state the amendment to the amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 3, line 8, after the word "amended", it is proposed to insert "or for restoring to the Federal Emergency Administration of Public Works any sums which after December 28, 1934, were, by order of the President impounded or transferred to the Federal Emergency Relief Administration from appropriations heretofore made available to such Federal Emergency Administration of Public Works."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY] to the committee amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment which I desire to propose to the amendment of the committee

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will state the amendment to the amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. In the committee amendment, following line 18, page 3, it is proposed to insert the following:

For affording funds to colleges and universities to advance to students needing and desiring financial assistance to pay costs and living expenses necessary for college courses and study at or in such colleges and universities, $1,000,000,000.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I did not hear the numeral.

Mr. KING. One billion dollars.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, that amendment has been extensively discussed, and I ask for a yea and nay vote on it. Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I should like to say one word before the vote is taken.

Under the item "projects for professional and clerical persons, $300,000,000", the President is authorized, and it is the intention of the administration, to carry on the work it has been doing specifically in giving aid to students. The administration has the authority now to continue that work, and it will be done in the discretion of the President, under the appropriation of $300,000,000.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, may I ask the author of the amendment whether this would increase the sum total appropriation by $1,000,000,000?

Mr. LONG. No; if the amendment shall be adopted, I intend to shave down other items.

Mr. BORAH. But if the Senator did not succeed in shaving them down, it would increase the sum total?

Mr. LONG. That is correct.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Louisiana to the committee amendment. The yeas and nays have been requested. Is the demand seconded?

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Chief Clerk called

Mr. AUSTIN. I announce the absence of the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. Davis] on account of illness. He has a general pair with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. Loganl. I do not know how either Senator would vote on

I also announce the pairs of the Senator from Maine [Mr. WHITE] with the Senator from Arkansas [Mrs. Caraway]. and the Senator from Vermont [Mr. Gibson] with the Senator from Colorado [Mr. Costigan]. I am not advised how any of these Senators would vote on this question.

Mr. LEWIS. I announce the absence of the Senator from Arkansas [Mrs. Caraway] and the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. Overton] occasioned by illness.

I also announce that the Senator from Washington [Mr. BONE], the Senator from Colorado [Mr. Costigan], the Senator from Georgia [Mr. George], the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. Gore], the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. Logan], and the Senator from Montana [Mr. Wheeler] are necessarily detained from the Senate.

Mr. BULKLEY. I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CAREY], who is necessarily absent. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. Gore] and vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 5, nays 75, as follows:

THE RESERVE		YEAS-0

So Mr. Long's amendment to the amendment of the committee was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee, as amended.

Mr. STEIWER. I offer an amendment to the committee amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. In the committee amendment, on page 3, line 20, it is proposed, before the word "and", to insert the words "rivers and harbors."

Mr. STEIWER. Mr. President, I ask the Senate's attention for just a minute to this proposal.

I think there is no Senator who would try to exclude from the list of projects provided in the pending joint resolution the construction of river and harbor works. I understand it is the purpose of the administration to carry on the important work of improving rivers and harbors out of the funds provided by the joint resolution. That is so definitely understood that the War Department appropriation bill recently passed by the Senate carried no appropriation at all for rivers and harbors. We are advised that it is the purpose, or at least it is contemplated by the Bureau of the Budget, and I think it is true that it is contemplated by the President himself, that the important work to be carried on in the country in the development of rivers and harbors shall be carried on by moneys diverted from the pending appropriation. It would seem, therefore, that there could be no objection to the amendment offered by me except on the ground that it may not be necessary.

I shall not argue that question, because I would rather obtain a quick conclusion with respect to this matter if it be possible; but I do wish to say to Senators that there is more than one view which might well be held with respect to the inclusiveness of the categories set forth in section 3 of the joint resolution.

I know that the chairman of the committee takes the view that the President may do anything within his discretion under the joint resolution. Personally, I take quite a different view. When the language starts with an exception, as it does in line 5, and then proceeds to say that, with the exception of the uses there named, the money shall be available for a certain purpose, it seems to me that may be construed as meaning that the money is available for those purposes, and for those purposes only; and, Mr. President, inasmuch as there may well be a controversy about it, it | line 20, "miscellaneous projects", for which $350,000,000 is would seem to me the part of prudence to include the amendment I have just proposed to the committee amendment.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, I feel authorized to accept the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. STEIWER. I thank the Senator.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Oregon to the committee amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. President, I should like to direct a question to the chairman of the committee. I do not think any amendment is necessary to cover the subject matter of my question, but I should like to have an expression of his

I refer to line 19, page 3, where the language of the joint resolution is "prevention of soil erosion." I shall ask the chairman of the committee if he feels that that would also include what is known as "coastal erosion", erosion due to the ravages of the sea, the protection of coastal areas of the United States.

Mr. GLASS. I think it would comprehend any kind of land erosion, whether it is on the sea or anywhere else.

Mr. BARBOUR. In other words, soil erosion would include coastal areas, so far as the Senator's opinion is concerned?

Mr. GLASS. I should think so.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, in order that I may obtain a construction of one word, I offer an amendment which I ask to have read, and then I shall direct a question to the chairman of the committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In the committee amendment on page 3, line 15, after the word "housing", it is proposed to insert 'including hospitals, schools, and other structures or plants of public character on land under the jurisdiction of the United States.'

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, the word "housing", as I understand it, is not an all-inclusive term. According to the dictionary, the word "housing" means shelter or cover, or houses collectively; not a single house. It means shelter or lodging.

I offer the amendment in order to obtain an understanding of what is meant by the one word "housing." If this joint resolution shall be enacted, in all probability the Interior Department will ask for funds with which to construct some improvements on Indian reservations.

Funds will be requested to make additions to hospitals on Indian reservations; funds will be requested to build day schools where numerous Indian children reside and where no white schools are provided. This amendment is intended so to broaden the term "housing" as to permit the Interior Department to make a request for funds for the uses

I should like to ask the chairman of the committee or any other Senator who can give the interpretation whether the word "housing" is sufficiently broad to cover the allocation of funds for the particular purposes I have indicated.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, the chairman of the committee does not possess any great familiarity with the meaning of that item aside from the fact that the public officials having charge of housing activities were called in consultation in connection with the preparation of this amendment to the joint resolution. It is the opinion of the chairman of the committee, for what it may be worth, that it would include the things mentioned by the Senator from Oklahoma and that those things in some measure are now being done by the Housing Administration.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I realize that is true, but I think that in the existing appropriations the word "housis not in the law.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President-

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield to the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. BYRNES. I will say to the Senator from Oklahoma I have not the slightest doubt that under the language in provided, the President would have the power to build hospitals or schools on Indian reservations.

Mr. GLASS. He would have the power to do anything.

Mr. BYRNES. I think really there is a wide discretion, and that he could use money in constructing houses, certainly on reservations.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. With the expressions by the chairman of the committee and by the Senator from South Carolina, I will accept their interpretation and withdraw the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee, as amended.

Mr. METCALF. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 3, line 13, before the comma, and after the world "elimination", it is proposed to insert the words "or protection."

Mr. METCALF. Mr. President, the necessity for this amendment was called to my attention by a very sad case where a man lost his only son at a very awkward grade crossing. The adoption of the amendment offered by me may afford an opportunity to provide such protection as may be necessary when it would not be desired to go to the great expense of building an over or an under pass. There are many things in the way of protection at grade crossings which might be afforded.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator that that can be done by the President under the item "Miscellaneous projects" for which $350,000,000 are proposed to be appropriated, with the privilege of transferring $800,000,-000 more to it.

Mr. METCALF. But the amendment is designed to come right in after the words "grade-crossing elimination", and it seems to me that it would not harmfully affect the joint resolution in any way.

Mr. GLASS. We cannot load the joint resolution down with everything that occurs to the minds of Senators, when the language of the joint resolution is so broad that practically everything may be done.

Mr. METCALF. I did not think in the respect I have indicated it was quite broad enough, and so the adoption of the amendment might simplify and improve the provision.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. METCALF] to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President-

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, I promised to yield first to the Senator from California [Mr. McADOO].

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I gladly yield to the Senator from California, in the hope that I may ultimately obtain the floor.

Mr. McADOO. Mr. President, I do not care to occupy the floor at this time.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I feel it my duty at some stage of the proceedings to comment on the pending joint resolution. Perhaps I may well do so now.

There are many reasons why I do not wish at any time to appear to be in opposition to the administration. I prefer to support the President in all the things he desires to do. I cannot disregard the fact, however, that I, too, took an oath when I entered upon this office, and I have some feelings about the joint resolution which I consider it to be my duty to my State to present.

In New York City there is the largest unit of unemployed persons to be found in any part of our country. About 2,000,000 of our people in New York City are on the dole. Think of it, a third of our population are now receiving relief benefits. Because of that fact, I think I should speak about the joint resolution as it affects the people not alone of New York City but of New York State.

Frankly, I fail to find in this measure anything which will be of material benefit to my State. I have said that 2,000,000 of our people in New York City are on relief. Who are they?

They are milliners and dressmakers and needle workers and garment makers; clerks and stenographers and manicurists; nurses and doctors and lawyers, engineers, and draftsmen. They are not persons who can go out and use a pick and shovel. So I am frank to say that I cannot see how the people I have the honor in part to represent are to be benefited by the passage of this measure.

I had a very significant letter yesterday—I am not going to read it all, but I wish to insert it in the Record if I may have permission to do so.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, permission is granted.

The letter appears as exhibit A at the conclusion of Mr. COPELAND'S remarks.

Mr. COPELAND. I want Senators to know about this letter. It is written by a highly respected young man who attended a meeting of "white collar" persons in my city two or three nights ago. He said he thought it to be his duty to let me know about the situation in New York City. In this letter he asks me certain questions as follows:

Do you know that over 20,000 accountants are unemployed in the metropolitan area?

the metropolitan area?

Do you know that over 100,000 men and women clerks and stenographers have no work?

Do you know that 12,000 lawyers, doctors, engineers, and dentists are walking the streets?

Mr. President, I do know the answer to these questions and my answer is, "Yes; I know that this is true."

There is another thing said in this letter which I wish the Senate to know:

We had a report last night that the National Employment Exchange and other such agencies were picketed by Communists to make members of disappointed patrons of such agencies. These Communists do not make themselves known, but hang around the corridors and hallways of the various buildings in which these agencies are located. One of these men was approached by a Yale Ph. D., think of it, and handed literature of a communistic nature.

That is what is going on in all the cities and in all the centers of population.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President-

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. Would not the provision reading, "projects for professional and clerical persons, $300,000,000", meet the situation of which the Senator speaks?

Mr. COPELAND. I do not think it would.

Mr. BORAH. I presume it was intended to meet it.

Mr. COPELAND. I have no doubt that the authors of the joint resolution intended to reach those persons. But, for myself, I would rather have the C. W. A. reestablished and made active and given sufficient money to take care of these people than to have great building projects undertaken which will give no relief to the large groups of unemployed in the cities. I have no doubt that on the various projects there may be found work in connection with which professional and clerical persons may be employed, but we might better frankly create work, initiate projects that make work, than undertake to mislead the public by the thought that by the passage of this joint resolution these idle professional and clerical workers will be employed.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President-

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. The situation described by the Senator from New York, to a lesser degree, is the situation in my own State of Maryland, particularly in the city of Baltimore and some of the larger towns, where a great many people who are unemployed are women. I have been advised, not being able to engage in manual labor of the kind generally outlined in the joint resolution, that they will have to look to the regular relief appropriations for support as differentiated from work projects.

I should be grateful if the Senator would point out how these women could be put to work, as the men are to be put to work, who are garment makers and employed in similar lines of industry. So far, I have not been able to ascertain just how we might employ them in an employment program.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, as a member of the Committee on Appropriations I tried, when we had witnesses before us, to get information with reference to this matter. Unfortunately I cannot turn to the exact place in the hearings which I desire to quote. I asked the question, "Are there plans formulated by which these people will be taken care of?" The answer was "no." Later came the proposal which was incorporated in the joint resolution as we have it before us. I could have recited these same figures at the time I spoke in the Appropriations Committee a month ago, because I had in my possession a paper which showed practically the same break-down included in the pending measure. The paper I hold in my hand purported to state how the money would be spent-$500,000,000 for the elimination of railroad grade crossings; $300,000,000 to $400,000,000 for railroad equipment, and so forth; about $200,000,000 on urban construction; $75,000,000 on rural construction; about $100,000,000 on rural electrification; and further with reference to rural electrification it was stated $1,000,000,000 should be spent. This would build transmission lines from Maine to Seattle and across the country from Canada to the Mexican border. How would that help the unemployed in New York City?

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President-

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. BYRNES. In response to the point the Senator has been discussing with reference to the professional and clerical worker, the administration of the F. E. R. A. stated this item is intended to give employment to a large number of professional and clerical workers now on the relief roll by enabling them to be employed in dramatic work, educational work, student aid, workers' education, literacy classes, nursery schools, vocational training and rehabilitation, mapping, nursing, and other public-health work, officers' planning work, keeping of records, research and special services, population problems, and traffic studies. These are some of the projects upon which the professional and clerical workers are being employed. I am satisfied it will give comfort to the Senator to know that the item will furnish opportunity to employ some of the people to whom he has referred.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I wish I had the same confidence the Senator from South Carolina has that the 2,000,000 unemployed in the city of New York would have the work he suggests. But everybody knows that they would not have work. How would the great work projects provided in the joint resolution—and amendments have been offered this afternoon to add other work projects—help in the great cities of America? How would they help in Baltimore, spoken of by the Senator from Maryland [Mr. Tydings]? How would they help in Chicago or Boston or St. Louis or some of the other great cities? There would be practically the same number of unemployed persons that we have today.

Mr. DIETERICH. Mr. President-

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. COPELAND. Certainly.

Mr. DIETERICH. The Senator asks how these projects would help in Chicago. They are going to help in Chicago because there is a movement there now for improved transportation in the matter of elevated streets. New York would derive the same advantage from it, and it would be of benefit not only to the city but to the country and to those who have to visit that city.

Mr. COPELAND. I have no question about the material benefits which would follow and which would be given to my community. Of course, I should like to have grade-crossing elimination and fine paved streets and bridges and elevated structures. I should be glad to have all such things, but if

I have to choose between such projects and the relief of ! human beings who will not be benefited by this proposed legislation, it is perfectly clear where my duty lies.

Mr. DIETERICH. If they would furnish the opportunity for work, would not that be relief to the class of citizens to whom the Senator has referred?

Mr. COPELAND. Would it not be wonderful! We could put all the milliners and needle workers and manicurists and nurses at work in building elevated structures in New York City! [Laughter.] I know how kind-hearted is the Senator from Illinois, and I am glad to know that he has solved the unemployment problem in New York by suggesting that we build elevated structures.

I know I am simply talking into the blue vaults of heaven to speak as I do; nevertheless, I do not intend to be silent or to let my people be deceived. There is nothing in the pending joint resolution which will relieve unemployment of the sort I have indicated in the cities of the State of New York. We could build highways and eliminate grade crossings; we could build transmission lines from here to the moon, but unemployment in New York will be there just the same. I desire to make it clear that the pending joint resolution does not provide the relief which we must have in order to prevent communism and unsocial proposals being advanced and perhaps the social order threatened.

Senators do not know how serious this matter is until they go to the crowded communities. We think that our Republic is as stable as the earth itself. There have been changes in government before now and in this generation; we do not know how soon it may be that there will be a change here. We cannot afford as a Nation to permit people to be humiliated, to permit our citizens to be hungry, to permit our citizens to be without proper clothing and housing. We cannot permit these conditions to continue and then imagine that the old order is going to continue as it has through the last 150 years.

This matter is far more serious than the question of whether we are going to appropriate money for flood control or rivers and harbors or other such projects, which in themselves are worth while and which in their proper place I should be glad to support.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. COPELAND. Certainly.

Mr. TYDINGS. Does the Senator know whether or not there is any place in the Federal Government where a census has been made of the unemployed, and broken down into what they can and cannot do?

Mr. COPELAND. I think such studies have been made. Mr. TYDINGS. But there has been no real census taken. They are mere estimates. I rose to suggest to the Senator, in view of his own equation which seems to have been omitted in most of the unemployment legislation, that it might be wise for him to draft a bill to have that kind of census made so we would know accurately just what the unemployment situation is. He could certainly use some of the unemployed in New York in making that kind of census, which would be worth while for us to have in the consideration of this kind of legislation in the future.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, will the Senator from New York yield?

Mr. COPELAND. Certainly.

Mr. REYNOLDS. In pursuance of the statement made by the brilliant Senator from Maryland, it is my information that of the some 5,000,000 unemployables and employables on relief, 3,500,000 employables and 1,500,000 unemployables, there are approximately 750,000 of the whitecollar class listed on the relief rolls.

I am going to be perfectly frank in stating that I am very happy indeed that the Senator from New York has brought this subject to the attention of the Senate, because I agree thoroughly with him that we are overlooking that great class of people sometimes referred to as the middle class or the white-collar class, who are not going to receive under this measure the relief which they should receive.

I believe the Senator and all here will agree with me that the people of the middle class, the white-collar class, are supplying money for 15 States, all of which put together entitled to just as much consideration as any others who are being considered in connection with this public-works measure. As the matter now stands, the only way in which we can possibly be of assistance to that great class which is being championed by the Senator from the State of New York is to provide those people who by their labors are to get the benefits of this works bill with a wage sufficient, from a living standpoint, to buy the necessities of life, which will raise the standards of living, and which will aid the industries throughout the entire Nation, and thereby provide work for the middle class of which the Senator has made mention.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I thank my friend from North Carolina, always kind-hearted, always interested in the welfare of the common man.

Mr. President, have Senators thought about the humiliation of self-respecting persons, thrifty persons, persons who lately have been unemployed, who formerly were employed in activities where they had enough income to maintain decent homes, to bring up their children, to give them some of the "gravy" of life? Have Senators thought about the humiliation of those persons now, when they are deprived of income, and are forced actually to go to public relief stations in order that they may be fed? Think of the effect of this situation upon the morale of the youth of America!

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President-

Mr. COPELAND. I am here to say to the Senate that in my judgment we are pursuing a course which will undermine respect for law and respect for American institutions; that we are on a road which will lead to destruction unless we find some means of dealing with the great problem which is presented.

I yield to the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, the Senator from Maryland a moment ago asked the Senator from New York whether any study had been made to determine whether work is available for the various types of unemployed.

I will state to the Senator from New York that precisely that sort of an analysis has been made in my State of Michigan. I have been going over it during the past 2 days, and I am driven to the irresistible conclusion that the statement now made by the Senator from New York is inescapably correct. From the information submitted within the past 48 hours by the Michigan Planning Commission, which is one of the ablest bodies of its kind in the country, I am driven to the conclusion that, even under the most optimistic prospectus of those who promote the pending legislation, 4 out of 5 of the unemployed in the State of Michigan will be disappointed as a result of what ultimately will occur. Therefore, the Michigan Planning Commission is forced to the conclusion—and I submit it for what it is worth, because it so completely supports the attitude of the Senator from New York-that each State has a problem of its own in respect to one phase or another, first of relief and then of relief work, and that the logical way to handle a measure of this character would be to allocate the sum total to the proper authorities in each State on the basis of their relative unemployed and permit subdivision of the amounts within each State to fit the necessities of realities which actually exist in the State.

I cannot escape from the logic of that position, and I think the Senator from New York will agree with me regard-

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, what is the matter with the logic of the contention that each State should take care of its own affairs?

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, if the Senator is addressing me, I agree with him 1,000 percent.

Mr. GLASS. Very well.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I have always said in the State of Michigan that if we could be permitted to raise and spend our own money, we would be infinitely better off than on any

Mr. GLASS. I know that my State would be better off. because it is not only supplying money for Virginia but it is do not pay as much taxes into the Federal Treasury as does | Virginia.

Mr. VANDENBERG. But, Mr. President, we are confronting the problem that there is to be an allocation of Federal funds, and I am discussing the practical fact that we desire to have the funds accomplish the purpose to which they are dedicated; and I do not believe they will accomplish that purpose in many States where conditions exist precisely as defined by the Senator from New York, and as reported to me by the Michigan Planning Commission.

Mr. GLASS. It will be interesting to the Senate when we shall put into the Record, as I think we shall in a day or two, some information covering the question of what has been done with the $3,300,000,000 already appropriated and allocated; and it may be that the Senator from New York will find that New York has received a considerable slice of that fund.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator from New York permit me to make one further observation regarding his State?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield. I find the discussion of the Senator very interesting and profitable.

Mr. VANDENBERG. The Senator from New York will find at the same time, from the Congressional Record of February 22, that the disbursements of the Federal Emergency Relief Administration up to date indicate that the State of New York has received only 49 percent of its total relief expenditures from the F. E. R. A., and has itself paid the balance out of its own State and local funds, whereas other States have received as much as 99 percent of their relief expenditures from the Federal Government. According to this statement, the State of Virginia has received 79 percent from the Federal Government. My own State of Michigan is in approximately the same classification. I wish to be entirely fair about it. The Michigan percentage is 72 percent; Mr. President, is not this a further challenge in equity? Why should one State be required to carry a larger share of its own burdens than another State? Why should there not be equality in the distribution?

Mr. GLASS. Yes; and there should be some reference to the taxes paid into the Federal Treasury by the respective States. Virginia is sixth in the United States in paying taxes into the Federal Treasury.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Again I agree with the Senator from Virginia that it is one of the factors that ought to be taken into consideration.

Mr. GLASS. I desire to say, furthermore, that so far as the senior Senator from Virginia is concerned, whatever percentage Virginia has obtained from the Federal Treasury never was obtained by my request, and never will a dollar be secured by my request. I think Virginia ought to take care of her own affairs, and I think every other State should be required to do likewise.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, if I may be permitted now to proceed in my own right, I have not raised the question of how much my State will be called upon to pay of this proposed appropriation. I do not do that because in years past, in resisting appropriations, it was a favorite effort of mine to call attention to the taxes paid by New York. Whenever I mentioned the fact that New York pays 30 percent of the Federal taxes, the fine Senator from North Carolina, Mr. Simmons, used to rise in his place and say, "New York is the reservoir into which the wealth of the Nation flows. It is not made there. It is made elsewhere." Nevertheless, my State will be called upon to pay a billion and a half of the money proposed to be appropriated in this joint resolution.

I am not proud of the fact that large Federal projects have been given to my State. I am glad, of course, to see those great projects carried out; but with the wealth of the State of New York it is not necessary for us to pass the hat and ask for money to carry on our work, provided, as the Senator from Michigan and the Senator from Virginia have suggested, each State is left free to carry on its own relief work. I realize that there are States in the Union where it is not possible to provide the funds through State taxation; but I desire Senators to know that we, in the State of New York, have not failed to recognize our responsibility.

The Senator from Michigan has put in figures showing that of the relief money expended in the State of New York, 49 percent came from the Federal Government; the other 51 percent through our State and its municipalities. My city of New York is spending $16,000,000 a month to take care of unemployed persons in the city. The State has bonded itself for large sums to carry on relief work in the city.

Mr. President, this joint resolution carries a false implication. The joint resolution on its face appears to say—to use the figures called to my attention by the Senator from South Carolina—that we are going to spend $30,000,000 for professional and clerical persons. As a matter of fact, it does not actually do anything of the kind. There is a break-down for these various projects; but at the end it says:

Provided further, That not to exceed 20 percent of the amount herein appropriated may be used by the President to increase any one or more of the foregoing limitations if he finds it necessary to do so in order to effectuate the purpose of this joint resolution.

Twenty percent of $5,000,000,000 is $1,000,000,000. A billion dollars may be taken from any part of this joint resolution and added to rural electrification, or some other project. I realize that it could be added to professional and clerical workers, but experience leads me to believe that that would not happen.

Mr. President, I desire to have the citizens of my State know that, in my judgment, the joint resolution offers no relief to the suffering people in New York. As I said a moment ago, I would prefer to go back to the C. W. A. and make work, and give these people employment, rather than to have this joint resolution pass.

Now I wish to make another statement. We could give this human relief by a very much smaller sum than we have written into the pending joint resolution.

We are asked to provide $880,000,000 for direct relief. For my part, I am willing to add to that any amount necessary to give relief. If the joint resolution were written so that it provided $1,880,000,000, or $2,880,000,000, to make sure that those people who are now hungry and without shelter and clothing could be taken care of, I would gladly vote for it; but the proposal is to give $880,000,000 for direct relief, and then $4,000,000,000 is allocated, as suggested in the joint resolution, but with the proviso which sets aside at once such allocation.

Mr. President, how long can this country continue to borrow billions of dollars? Is there no limit to the possibilities of what we may produce from our banks in the taking up of Government securities? We have gone on and on, until we find, in the portfolios of some banks, 50, 60, and even 75 percent of their securities in the form of Government bonds.

No bank in the United States today dare lend money for the ordinary activities of the community in which the bank is located, because of the demand which is likely to come at any time for more money to take over Government securities. The banks are forced to take those Government securities because, if there should no longer be a market for them, there would be a slump in the price. I think I am right in quoting the Senator from Virginia, that if there should be a 10-percent slump in Government securities, every bank and trust company and insurance company in the United States would be in insolvency.

How long can we continue this sort of thing? We can continue it indefinitely, if it is a matter of taking care of human beings, but when we provide what is in effect a "pork barrel", to build projects here or there or elsewhere, even though some of them are in the State of New York, if we go on doing that sort of thing month after month and year after year, the time will come when there will be no funds to give for human relief.

Mr. President, I realize that it is utterly useless to speak about these things; but let me remind you a bank which uses a million dollars of its deposits to buy Government securities has a million less to use for local enterprise, for the business and agriculture and the manufactures of the community.

We are not going to buy our way into prosperity; we are going to buy our way into poverty. That is my honest judgment.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GERRY in the chair). Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. I should like to point out to the Senator from New York that this $4,000,000,000 is broken down into about 10 or 12 subdivisions, and the President would have the authority to take 20 percent of the total amount and use it "to increase any one or more of the foregoing limitations if he finds it necessary to do so."

I make the observation that where the large reservoirs of unemployment exist, many of these projects will do very little good, as the Senator has already pointed out, and in order to allow the President to have enough latitude to take care of unemployment where it exists, I suggest to the Senator that one way to at least work in that direction would be to strike out the 20 percent figure, and make it 33 1/3

Mr. COPELAND. The Senator may offer any amendment he chooses to offer, but these figures total $4,000,000,-000; so, if the President takes 20 percent or 331/3 percent he will have to take it from something in the measure, something in the enumerated projects. I cannot say to the people in my city of New York that professional persons are going to be benefited by the expenditure of $300,000,000.

I know the great heart of the President, and I know he will do the human thing, but, at the same time, I cannot make any positive statement to the suffering people in my community. I cannot answer the letter before me in all honesty and say, "We are going to take care of you.'

Mr. President, it is my judgment that we are presenting to the country a measure which, no matter how honorable were the intentions of its authors, is deceptive and misleading. There are likely to be further disappointment and more heartbreakings because of the failure of the joint resolution to accomplish what its authors intended.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield. Mr. ROBINSON. Assuming that the fund may prove inadequate or that the distress may not pass during the period in which the fund is being expended, and further arrangements may prove necessary, what is the suggestion of the Senator? Should the pending legislation be rejected and nothing be done by the Federal Government looking toward giving work to those who are out of employment?

Mr. COPELAND. The Senator is not serious in asking me that question, is he?

Mr. ROBINSON. Certainly.

Mr. COPELAND. He asks me, Should nothing be done? Mr. ROBINSON. As I understood the Senator, he said that the problem should be relegated to the States.

Mr. COPELAND. I did not make the suggestion that we should, by legislation, do that now as an amendment to the pending measure. I am in favor of voting all the money needed for human relief. That includes the $880,000,000, and another billion, if need be.

Mr. ROBINSON. By limiting the fund to direct-relief purposes? That is what I had not understood.

Mr. COPELAND. I do not think I would say that. Going back to the original language, or a substitute for it, this measure I think might well be amended by reducing the amount by $2,000,000,000 or $3,000,000,000, so that the President would have in his hands $2,000,000,000 or $1,000,000,000, plus the direct-relief fund. Then if the President thought it wise he could carry on some of the activities suggested in the joint resolution.

Mr. ROBINSON. That is based on the theory that the measure carries more than is necessary?

Mr. COPELAND. The $4,000,000,000?

Mr. ROBINSON. Yes.

Mr. COPELAND. Yes: I think that $4,000,000,000, so far as direct relief and unemployment relief are concerned, would be largely wasted.

Mr. ROBINSON. Why would the Senator be in favor of appropriating $2,000,000,000 for that purpose?

Mr. COPELAND. I will leave it to the Senator to suggest the amount. My own preference would be to appropriate a billion eight hundred and eighty million, and give it to the President to spend as he saw fit.

Mr. ROBINSON. That would be not more than the amount necessary for destitution relief over a prolonged period?

Mr. COPELAND. I do not know.

Mr. ROBINSON. One of the theories underlying the measure is that, by supplying work, we diminish relief. One of the objects of the joint resolution is to take people off the relief rolls and put them on work rolls, so that they may earn at least their subsistence. Of course, if we provide no work, our relief rolls, instead of diminishing, will continue at least for some time as large as they now are.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, the Senator did not hear the first part of my statement. I recited that in my State the milliners, and dressmakers, and manicurists, and clerks, and stenographers, and nurses, and needle workers, and garment workers, persons who cannot go into these various manual projects, because they are not suited for them, would not be taken care of by the measure. My argument is that there is little or nothing in the joint resolution which would give relief to the sort of unemployed in whom I am particularly interested.

Mr. ROBINSON. Why would they not come within the class expressly provided for, professional and clerical persons?

Mr. COPELAND. I may say to the Senator that the entire amount of money provided in this break-down for that group would not take care of the people in my city alone for a longer period than 18 months. There would be distress even if we gave every dollar of the fund to New York.

Mr. ROBINSON. I understand that the fund probably is inadequate for all the purposes which should be in mind, but, granting that it should prove inadequate, would it not be better to do this much than to do nothing?

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? Mr. COPELAND. Does the Senator desire to speak now? Mr. TYDINGS. I wish to point out something to the Senator which is along the line of what he has been saying.

Mr. COPELAND. Very well.

Mr. TYDINGS. Let me point out to the Senator from New York that what is really happening in anticipation of the passage of this joint resolution is that every community in the United States, whether it needs the money or not, whether there is unemployment there or not, has met and already agreed upon projects to cost away beyond anything they would consider in normal times.

For example, I have in mind one county in my State which has never gotten any Federal relief. One little town in that county has already approved projects totaling $100,000. Another county on the Eastern Shore of Maryland has applications in for $1,000,000 worth of projects, and that is an agricultural section of the State.

I am going to vote for straight relief, such as the Senator from New York has outlined he is going to vote for, for the simple reason that in many cases this money will not go to the communities which need relief, but every community will try to get its particular share of it, and relief will be beside the question. Already in every county and every city in every State in the Union the city council or the county commissioners have thought of what they can put in applications for in order to have ten, fifteen, twenty-five, or one hundred thousand dollars spent in the community, without the slightest regard to unemployment or whether or not the project has merit. I know that is the fact, as all Senators on this floor must know.

Twelve million or twenty million people are out of employment. I say it is a travesty to give this money to communities which can get along without it, and to keep it from communities which must have it in order to live. That is particularly true of the larger cities of the country-New York, Chicago, St. Louis, San Francisco, Boston, Baltimore, Pittsburgh. That is where these large wells of unemployment exist, where people are on the dole. This money that it is proposed to spend for soil erosion and for one thing and another is not going to reach into those large reservoirs of unemployment. It will result in a national scandal. We shall be ashamed of it.

We ought to provide adequately for those who are the victims of this depression until such time as we can formulate and promulgate a plan which will carry this money to the people who ought to have it. I am not going to be a party to having relief money spent in communities which can get along without it, and keeping it from communities which must have it in order to live.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I desire to say a word for myself, if I may.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, may I interrupt to add a word to what the Senator from Maryland has just said?
Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. ADAMS. In the hearing before the committee, as the Senator from New York recalls, the Secretary of the Interior stated that on the 28th of February 1934 he ceased receiving projects. He said that up to that time his Department had received a large number; that of those they had received up to that time they had some $2,000,000,000 of projects approved by State authorities, not approved by his Department, but he had $2,000,000,000 then available; that he had not taken in any projects since the 28th of February 1934. I understand that without any change in that authority, without any appropriation of additional funds, without any invitation of Congress, he now has over $14,000,000,000 of projects.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I should like to say in the same connection, adding to what the Senator from Maryland has said and what the Senator from Colorado has said, that I myself have heard persons in various communities say, "We are opposed to the spending of these millions of dollars, but we must get ours. Here is our chance. We have been wanting to do this, we have not had the money, but now the Treasury is open, and we must get ours." That is exactly what has happened.

Did the Senator from Colorado say the amount was $14,000,000,000?

Mr. ADAMS. That was a week ago.

Mr. COPELAND. It may be $21,000,000,000 by now. The attitude of these people is, "We must get ours"; that is all. I now wish to say a word in reply to what was just said by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. Robinson].

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, is not a million to a million and a half dollars a month being spent for relief in the District of Columbia, where all this public employment is going on? Does the Senator know whether or not that is the fact?

Mr. COPELAND. I do not know.

Mr. LONG. I do not know, and I may not be accurate about the figures, but I have been given to understand that here in the District of Columbia, where people by the hundreds have had to be employed to operate these new bureaus, nevertheless there is an unemployment relief which costs, for the dole, about a million to a million and a half dollars a month, and, even with that there are people living within a block or two of my office who do not have enough money to put electric lights in their houses. I am speaking now of conditions right here in the District of Columbia.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, if the Senator from New York will permit me to add a word to what the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. Long] has just said, I agree with him in what he has said. I have been informed that relief throughout the country has been costing the Federal Government about $58 a second, about $3,400 a minute, about $150,000,000 a month; and I am reliably informed, directing this statement to the Senator from Louisiana, that the amount of relief required for the District of Columbia in proportion to the population of the citizens of the country has been about 15 to 20 percent larger than in any other city in the country of an equal population according to the census, which is ascribable to the fact that people are flocking to the city of Washington, the capital of the country, from all over the United States. I believe that is what the Senator from Louisiana had in mind.

Mr. ROBINSON. I suppose literally hundreds of thousands of them have come here seeking employment.

Mr. REYNOLDS. That is true.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I hardly think a person who comes here is taken care of unless he has been here for a while. Do they take care of a man the day he gets here?

Mr. COPELAND. He has to be here a year.

Mr. LONG. Yes; he has to be here a year, I understand. Mr. ROBINSON. I presume if he got in a position where he could not take care of himself, some provision would have to be made to take care of him. Of course, that does not apply to a large number of people who have come here seeking positions, but many have come here who have been unable to secure employment, and after weeks or months they have found themselves stranded.

Mr. REYNOLDS. That is quite true, Mr. President. If I may be permitted, I should like to add a word.

Of course, we have an unusually large number of transients here, and the District authorities have been caring for those unfortunates in the transient houses. It is not necessary for one to live here a year in order to obtain a residence so as to entitle him to be provided for. For that very reason, more funds are required for the District of Columbia than are required in other cities of the United States of an equal population.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I will now resume in my own right. I had no thought of speaking over 20 minutes. I wish to reply, however, to what the Senator from Arkansas has said. I may be utterly wrong, but I do not think it is good for the business recovery of America—

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me? Mr. COPELAND. I yield to the Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. GORE. I wish to say one word with reference to what the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. Reynolds] and the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. Long] have said with regard to the District of Columbia. They say that the relief roll here is 15 percent larger than in any other similar community, and that notwithstanding the fact that a larger percentage of the population of the District is on the pay roll, perhaps, than in any similar community on the globe.

I do not assert or assume that the following case is typical, even in the District of Columbia; but I had a young man who is employed in my office go down to headquarters here where they were paying off the people who were on the relief roll. He let his whiskers grow out and put on his working clothes, so that he could go down and mix and mingle and find out what was passing through the minds of the recipients of relief and what they thought of this situation. He fell in with a group of young men 19, 20, 21 years of age; and he reports to me that the chief topic of their conversation was matching prison records, the hero seeming to be either the one who had been in prison the most often or who had lingered longest within prison walls. Also, among other interesting topics were the particular prisons where they had received the most cordial treatment and where they had fared the best.

To what extent, if at all, that is typical, I do not know. It may have been in part the bravado of youth. It may, however, shed at least one ray of light on some of the byproducts of this undiscriminating policy and the burdens—the disproportionate burdens—imposed upon the taxpayers of the United States and of my State by placing such characters on the pay roll, by quotaing them on the Public Treasury, here in the District of Columbia, here in the Nation's Capital. Not that this would make any difference with those who think that it is more blessed to spend than to save—more blessed to tax than to retrench.

Mr. COPELAND. Now, Mr. President, I desire to say a word in reply to what the Senator from Oklahoma said.

I do not doubt that there are burglars and pickpockets and other underworld characters in the relief line. I should think there would be many of them, because there is certainly nothing now that they can get out of the homes of the socalled "well to do." But I should not be willing to let the remarks of the Senator from Oklahoma give the impression that the majority of the people in bread lines are underworld characters. I happen to know persons of my own acquaintance who are in the relief line. If they are not in the publicrelief line they are in the private-relief line.

Senators do not realize how wide-spread is the unemployment and how great the distress of millions of our citizens. May I enlarge upon this subject for a moment? There is no group more seriously affected by the economic depression of today than youth. Young men and women who have just graduated from college, the boys and girls who have just graduated from high school—there is nothing for them to do. They hear about the money which we have given through the R. F. C., which we have loaned to railroads and banks. They talk these things over. Just because they are poverty-stricken does not mean they have no sense. They talk about those things, and there is resentment—resentment, growing resentment—and I say for myself, as the conviction of my soul, that America is seriously menaced by what is taking place in this country today.

Now I leave that to come back to the Senator from Arkansas. Apparently the question of the Senator from Arkansas was intended to bring out from me how much I would be willing to reduce the amount carried by the measure and

Who can controvert this statement: If a bank in Little Rock is called upon to take $100,000 of a Government offer of bonds, who can question that that means the Little Rock bank has $100,000 less left for local business purposes? I believe business is being retarded by what we are doing here, not alone because of the uncertainty which prevails, but because banks no longer function as banks. They no longer serve the public by lending money for legitimate business. I am not talking about big business. I am not talking about railroads and metropolitan banks. I am talking about the little merchant and the little manufacturer. Take it from me, Mr. President, they cannot borrow any money. Bankers say they take all the loans which offer which are worth-while loans, and probably that is the truth; but they do not consider them worth while if they are not loans of extraordinary type.

Bankers have had to be satisfied, and perhaps they have been satisfied, to take over Government securities, and to depend upon transactions involving those Government securities for their profits to maintain overhead and pay perhaps reduced dividends. But if there is the belief all the time on the part of the bankers of America that there will be a call now or next week or 6 months from now for money for new offerings or for refunding operations or for something of that sort, they are not going to operate as banks; they are not going to use the money to help the farmer and the manufacturer and the merchants of the community. They are going to save those funds to take up the Government offerings.

Under present conditions, why should they not take that position?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President-

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. With the permission of the Senator from New York I should like to revert briefly to the suggestion advanced by the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. Gore], that the people on relief are largely made up of ex-convicts.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I believe the Senator from Wisconsin, if he had heard what I said, would know that I did not say that the case I cited was typical, but was an instance which might shed some light and stimulate further inquiry as to who are receiving these benefits.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. With the permission of the Senator from New York I want to answer to the best of my ability and with such information as I have at hand, the plain inference which I think has been left by the remarks of the Senator from Oklahoma that most of the people who are receiving benefits under the relief act are mendicants, and he has now asked practically whether or not they are all exconvicts.

In May 1934 it was estimated that there were 3,485,000 experienced workers on the urban relief rolls of the United States. I hold in my hand a table which shows the distribution of those workers according to the years of experience they have had at their usual occupation, and also the length of time served with one employer.

Those who had an experience of less than 6 months numbered 383,000; those who had experience from 6 to 17 months, 383,000; those with 18 to 53 months' experience, 1,115,000; those with 54 to 173 months' experience, 1,220,000; those with 174 months or more, 279,000; not ascertainable, 105,000.

I also desire, with the further indulgence of the Senator from New York, to point out the remarkable situation with reference to steadiness of employment prior to the economic crisis so far as those who are employable and were upon the relief rolls last May are concerned. Those who had had less than 6 months with one employer numbered 174,000; those who had had 6 to 17 months with the same employer, 209,000; those who had had 18 to 53 months with one employer, 697,000; those who had had 54 to 173 months with one employer, 1,359,000; those with 174 months or more experience with one employer, 1,011,000; those not ascertainable, 35,000. In addition, there were 336,000 persons seeking work who had had no experience in private industry.

With the permission of the Senator from New York I should like to have these brief tables inserted in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the tables were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

FEBRUARY 19, 1935.

MEMORANDUM

In May 1934 it is estimated that there were 3,485,000 experienced workers on the urban relief rolls of the United States. The following tables show the distribution of these workers according to the years of experience they have had at their usual occupations (table 1) and also the length of the longest job with one employer (table 2).

Table 1.—Years of experience at usual occupation of workers in the May 1934 urban relief population

Years of experience	Number of workers	Percent dis- tribution
Total workers	3, 485, 000	100
Less than 6 months	383, 000 383, 000 1, 115, 000 1, 220, 000 279, 000 105, 000	11 11 32 35 8

Table 2.—Length of longest job with one employer of experienced workers in the May 1934 urban relief population

Length of longest job with 1 employer	Number of workers	Percent dis- tribution
Total workers	3, 485, 000	100
Less than 6 months 6 to 17 months 18 to 53 months 54 to 173 months 174 months or more Not ascertainable	174,000 209,000 697,000 1,359,000 1,011,000 35,000	5 6 20 39 29 1

In addition, there were 336,000 persons seeking work but who had had no experience in private industry. (Federal Emergency Relief Administration, Division of Research, Statistics, and Finance Research Section.)

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I thank the Senator for adding to the importance of this discussion. Along the line just mentioned by the Senator from Wisconsin let me quote again from the letter I have mentioned. I know that one swallow does not make a summer, but the young man who wrote me said:

Personally I have been unemployed for 3 years, with the exception of one or two engagements in audit work. I am a college graduate in law, and a fully qualified accountant, 41 years of age, married, and have two in the family. My ancestors are patriots, and I myself am a veteran but have taken no stand whatever on the soldiers' bonus and do not intend to do so, although I am down to my last $100.

This young man is lucky. He has $100 left.

I do not like to go to my office in New York. It breaks my heart to have the multitude of persons come in to see me to beg for work, work which I cannot give them, to beg for jobs which I cannot find. Those who have the best luck are those who ask for loans of small sums of money, which I have been glad to make within my means.

The cities of the country are just teeming and steaming and agitated beyond words, ready to do anything because they have no work. We come here with a measure which pretends to give money for great building projects, building prisons and hospitals, grade separations, and other activities which are of no use in the world to the kind of persons about whom I am telling the Senate.

No one of them could hold a job on such a project for 1 day. But they are human beings who have been self-respecting and self-supporting persons in the past. Now they cannot find a way to earn a living, and have to take relief. It is our duty to give the relief; but while we are giving them the relief to which they are entitled, if we seek at the same time to "prime the pump" some more—a pump which is dried up and broken apart, and which, in my judgment, cannot be primed by the expenditure of more millions of dollarswe are on the wrong track, as I see it. Yes; let us appropriate billions, if we need to do so, to keep these people fed and clothed; but when, in addition to that, we seek to take billions of dollars on the theory that by building these great projects we are going to increase the manufacture of cement and steel, and hope to stimulate normal business, as we have been trying to do for 2 years by the operation of the P. W. A., when we seek to spend four billions more in the same useless directions that we did before, I say, Senators, it is, in my opinion, the wrong course for us to take.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?
The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. I have been very much interested in the Senator's discussion. Do I understand him to advocate direct relief only, and the striking from the joint resolution of all provisions for public works?

Mr. COPELAND. No; I do not. I propose materially to reduce the amount for so-called "work relief" and leave it to the President in his judgment to use it as he wishes. In the committee I pleaded with the Senator from Colorado [Mr. Adams] to make the sum two billion dollars instead of one, plus the $880,000,000. Finally, however, I have reached the conclusion that if we vote $1,000,000,000 for such work relief as the President chooses to employ, we shall be going just as far as we should go now. Congress is going to meet again. I assume this session will be going on for a good many months yet; but, in any event, there will be another session.

Mr. CONNALLY. I was anxious to know if the Senator desires to restrict the appropriation to direct relief. If so, that makes an issue here that we can determine; but he now says that he wants to have a billion dollars instead of $4,000,000,000 appropriated for public works, and the other sum for relief. Is that correct? If so, we would still be spending a billion dollars for the very things the Senator says are not any good.

Mr. COPELAND. I am willing to have the Members of the Senate who think we ought to spend money for some of these things that the Senator says I think are "not any good", have a little money to spend, and a billion dollars seems to me enough for that experimentation.

Mr. CONNALLY. I am not trying to heckle the Senator. I really want to get his views as to what he advocates.

Mr. COPELAND. To be perfectly frank about it, I believe

Mr. COPELAND. To be perfectly frank about it, I believe the President ought to have a sum of money which in his judgment he can use for work relief.

Mr. CONNALLY. If I recall last night's paper correctly, the Senator's own city got $1,600,000 last night in the way of an allotment. I do not say that to twit the Senator.

Mr. COPELAND. No; but I wish to reply to that, nevertheless. I do not care if New York gets the whole $4,000,000,000; I am opposed to it just the same.

Mr. CONNALLY. I only suggested that because the Senator indicated that none of this money would go to give employment to the people in the cities about whom he is so much concerned. I know that there are now pending in the Public Works Administration a number of allocations, one of them to dig a tunnel under the Hudson River, as I recall, which doubtless is giving employment to the people in the cities.

I think the people in the cities are entitled to the same consideration as the people in the country, and I want to see a measure passed that will relieve this situation everywhere as much as it can be relieved; but in the nature of things, the Government cannot undertake every activity. It cannot establish beauty parlors to relieve the unemployment in beauty parlors. It cannot start barber shops in order to help out the barbers. It must restrict its activities to the particular kinds of improvements that will give employment and yet have some permanent value to the public at large.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to interrupt him?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. COPELAND. I do.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I understand that if this public-works measure, carrying an appropriation of $4,000,000,000, shall be passed, approximately 50 percent of that amount will be expended in materials for construction work.

Mr. COPELAND. And therefore would give no relief in New York.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, since the Senator has been interrupted, will he yield to me? I hesitate to ask him to yield again.

Mr. COPELAND. I am going to yield once more, I may say to the Senator from Louisiana. Then I am not going to yield to anybody, because I wish to conclude my remarks.

Mr. LONG. At this point I desire to say that if the program of the Senator from New York were carried out, and we could put something in this joint resolution that would not make it necessary for people to plow up their gardens before they could get relief, that might extend the money to a point where it could be devoted to some of the purposes mentioned by the Senator from New York.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I have learned a lesson which I thought I had learned before. Next time I start out on a 20-minute speech I am going to make it in my own time, and not yield to anybody; but I am forced now, by what my friend from Texas [Mr. Connally] said, to make an answer.

How can these milliners and dressmakers and manicurists and stenographers and nurses and female clerks get much good out of this tunnel we are going to build in New York?

Mr. CONNALLY. Those people, I thought the Senator indicated, could not be benefited by these public-works projects. They can be benefited, and no doubt will be benefited, by the direct-relief funds; and I specifically said that in order to relieve the beauty-parlor operatives and the barbers, the Government could not establish, all over the United States, beauty parlors and barber shops. I thought anyone would conclude from that statement that the only relief they could get would be from direct relief.

I thank the Senator for permitting an interruption. I did not mean to come into collision with him.

Mr. COPELAND. The Senator's apology is accepted up to this point.

Mr. CONNALLY. I will absolve the Senator's city from any charge that I do not make as to others. I will say, however, that it is reported in many places that some—not all, but that some—of the relief recipients ride up to the relief stations in their automobiles to get their relief money. I do not know whether or not that is true.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, is not that true in a great many sections of the country?

have heard it from many sections; and I assume that the persons to whom the Senator referred do not own automobiles, and would have to ride in the subway.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, these people are suffering. Until we are willing to face this serious situation in the spirit that our obligations demand, we are not going to be able to keep our people in line for the orderly government for which we stand.

How many times must I say that? I am going to say it when opportunity offers and the occasion seems to demand, because I want Senators to know that there are subversive influences at work in America which threaten our institutions. I do not care to enlarge upon the subject, because I do not wish to be sensational; but I want to say enough to impress Senators with the thought which I have, which is burned into my soul as a conviction.

Now, once more I turn to the Senator from Arkansas. I do not want to hamper the President of the United States. He is an honest, sincere man. He believes the plan proposed is a useful one and will accomplish what it is planned to do. If the joint resolution shall be enacted into law, as I assume it will be, I pray devoutly that it will succeed. But I cannot believe that it will succeed. I am willing to give the President a billion dollars to use for work relief at his discretion and to vote the $880,000,000 for direct relief, and I hope that that will be administered by Mr. Harry Hopkins. There is not a man in public life whom I admire more than I do that man-a sincere, honest, intelligent, alert gentleman, faithful to his duties and to his high calling.

I want to see the suffering people given the money they need to keep them from distress. At the same time I want some of the remaining funds of our country left, in order that they may be used by local banks to operate normal business.

We are in such a situation—and every Senator here, if he has thought about it, recognizes the fact—that tomorrow or the next day or some day soon there will be presented to us the obligations of finally voting on the pending joint resolution. All effort to amend it will doubtless fail, and there will be given to each of us the responsibility of voting finally upon the measure. Each of us, assuming that the measure shall be left unchanged, will have to decide whether we are willing to take the hazards, are willing to take further chances with the financial structure of our country, are willing to face all the possibilities involved in the enactment of this measure, are willing to swallow it and say that, since there is no other way to get $880,000,000 for direct relief and such doubtful results as may come from the operation of the law as written, we will vote for it; or decide that we will vote against it.

What will Senators decide to do? What shall I decide? That is one of the most difficult problems that was ever presented to me.

If I am called upon finally to determine my course as regards this measure, a measure which I think is crowded and packed with wrong suggestions and harmful suggestions, a plan which, in my opinion, is dangerous to the financial structure of the United States, what will my duty be when that time comes? Must I close my eyes to what may happen to us on the financial side, and am I forced, because of my utter unwillingness not to give human relief where human relief is needed, to vote for the measure? What must be my decision? That is the question which each Senator must settle within the next day or two.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator whether he knows offhand what the State debt of New York now is, in round figures?

Mr. COPELAND. No; I am sorry I cannot answer the Senator's question.

Mr. TYDINGS. May I point out to the Senator that New York State's share of the national indebtedness, on a population basis only, is more than $3,000,000,000, and that in my own small State of Maryland, where we have a State debt of $50,000,000, on a pure population basis our share of the national debt is $600,000,000, or one-fiftieth of the total, 2

Mr. CONNALLY. I do not restrict it to New York. I | percent of the whole? In other words, the people of my State now have not only to pay the $50,000,000 of State debt, but $600,000,000, their share of the national debt, and with that kind of figures in front of us, I think we had better cut this appropriation down to where we can take care of those who are unemployed, and let public works wait until we are better able to pay for them.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, the Senator from Maryland does not seem to accept the philosophy that a public debt is a public blessing.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I have concluded what I had to say.

MY DEAR SENATOR COPELAND: Out of loyalty and respect to you, I am writing this letter to advise you of a meeting which I attended in New York last night.

This was an organization meeting of professional and whitecollar workers who are unemployed, and who feel they have been entirely forgotten by the administration, and I am inclined to agree with them.

agree with them.

Personally I have been unemployed for 3 years, with the exception of one or two engagements in audit work.

I am a college graduate in law and a fully qualified accountant, 41 years of age, married, and have two in family.

My ancestors were patriots and I myself am a veteran but have taken no stand whatever on the soldiers' bonus and do not intend to do so, although I am down to my last hundred dollars.

I was at the meeting last night and was instructed to obtain all the information I could re unemployed white-collar workers in every State in the Union.

in every State in the Union. New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania and Connecticut were represented at the meeting.

Do you know that over 20,000 accountants are unemployed in the metropolitan area? Do you know that over 100,000 men and women clerks and stenographers have no work? Do you know that 12,000 lawyers, doctors, engineers, and dentists are walking the streets?

While I know your hands are full, nevertheless, I personally feel that unless a great change comes about in the not far distant future, a speakers' bureau will be organized and financed in every State to bring all the facts to light affecting these white-collar people, which may result in a HUEY LONG in 1936.

I am sure you will agree that these people have been suffering long enough; they are not the class of people who ballyhoo at the least provocation; neither will they ask or accept charity or doles.

The seriousness of it all is that they see the national debt mounting, from which they have received no benefit, and for which they realize they will some day have to pay, retarding their rehabilitation.

They see that under Mr. Hoover the debt was only $9,000,000 and now is $30,000,000, with no benefit to them direct or other-

In the community in which I live there are over 700 such people out of a job, good, clean, American stock, who always suffer in silence. During 1934 there were more than 30 foreclosures here and since January 1, 1935, we have had five suicides here. Just yesterday my 12-year-old daughter told me of a brother and sister being sent home from school suffering from malnutrition, which we promptly remedied when we heard about it. I have personally sugranteed the electricity and gas for two families here as it has we promptly remedied when we heard about it. I have personally guaranteed the electricity and gas for two families here, as it has been shut off for nonpayment. We had a report last night that the National Employment Exchange and other such agencies were picketed by Communists to make members of disappointed patrons of such agencies. These Communists do not make themselves known, but hang around the corridors and hallways of the various buildings in which these agencies are located. One of these men was approached by a Yale Ph. D.—think of it—and handed literature of a communistic nature, which unfortunately, he did not bring to the meeting, but which he stated he promptly destroyed in the man's presence. I think your colleagues should be acquainted of some of these facts. With best wishes, I am, Respectfully and sincerely yours.

THE RICE INDUSTRY-AMENDMENT OF AGRICULTURAL ADJUSTMENT ACT

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that at the conclusion of the routine morning business tomorrow the Senate shall proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 5221) to amend the Agricultural Adjustment Act with respect to rice, and that if that bill shall be disposed of, the Senate, during the remainder of the morning hour, shall proceed to the consideration of unobjected bills on the calendar.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I did not understand the bill to which the Senator made reference.

Mr. ROBINSON. I refer to House bill 5221, to amend the Agricultural Adjustment Act with respect to rice, a bill which the producers of rice are anxious to have disposed of in the early future.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, is that the so-called "amendment" to the A. A. A. Act?

Mr. ROBINSON. No.
The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Arkansas? The Chair hears none, and the order will be entered.

WORK-RELIEF PROGRAM

The Senate resumed the consideration of the joint resolution (H. J. 117) making appropriations for relief purposes.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, may we have a vote on the pending amendment?

Mr. HASTINGS. I inquire of the Senator from Virginia whether the amendment before the Senate is that appearing on page 3?

Mr. GLASS. Yes.

Mr. HASTINGS. That is what I desire to talk about. Mr. GLASS. Will the Senator let us take a vote on it and then talk about it later?

Mr. HASTINGS. I should like to talk about it first.

Mr. BORAH rose.

Mr. HASTINGS. I yield to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I thought we were about to vote on the pending amendment. After that shall have been done I shall offer an amendment. However, if the Senator is about to speak on the subject of the pending amendment, I will not offer my amendment at this time.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. President, before we vote on the pending amendment I should like the chairman of the committee to give some consideration to lines 5, 6, 7, and 8 on page 3 of the joint resolution.

After the address made yesterday by the distinguished Senator from Vermont [Mr. Austin], I began to make some investigation to ascertain for myself whether or not there is as much difference as he believes there is between the present form of the joint resolution and its form before it was recommitted to the Committee on Appropriations. I got the distinct impression that it is intended by the joint resolution to give the President the right to use all this fund for relief purposes, if he cares to do so. The language used is-

Provided, That except as to such part of the appropriation made herein as the President may deem necessary for continuing relief as authorized under the Federal Emergency Relief Act of 1933 as

In talking with some members of the committee, I received the impression that that language is intended to continue the Federal Emergency Relief Act of 1933. I examined that act and found that it was approved on May 12, 1933, and that it distinctly provides what shall occur at the expiration of 2 years. I read the exact language:

The Federal Emergency Relief Administration and the office of Federal Emergency Relief Administrator shall cease to exist upon the expiration of 2 years after the date of enactment of this act, and the unexpended balance on such date of any funds made available under the provisions of this act shall be disposed of as the Congress may by law provide.

I have given some consideration to that subject. I do not believe the language which I first quoted from this amendment extends that act. I think it will be necessary to put in some additional words if we desire to continue this relief. To continue the act itself would mean to give the President authority to transfer this whole amount so that it would come under the provisions of that act, and thereby destroy all the allocations or the supposed allocations made in the pending amendment. That is what might be done if the act itself were extended.

I do not know whether it was intended to do that, or whether it was not; but I am desirous, as I am sure all Senators are, that the Federal Emergency Relief Act of 1933 shall not be ended on May 12, because, assuming it to be practicable at all, it is certainly not possible within the next 2 months, or perhaps less than 2 months after this joint resolution shall be passed, to take all these people off the relief rolls and put them on work relief.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, I may say to the Senator that we purposely did not desire to complicate this joint resolution with that question. I am perfectly confident that the Emergency Relief Act will be extended beyond May 12 next. However, we thought that was a question which could be decided separately from this joint resolution.

Mr. HASTINGS. I am sorry to know that that is true, because it enlarges the powers which the committee undertook to limit in some measure after the joint resolution had been recommitted. I was about to suggest that in line 7, page 3, if we should strike out the words "relief as" and substitute the words "direct relief" in the same manner as now authorized under the Federal Emergency Relief Act of 1933, as amended", it probably would not be necessary to extend that act. If, however, the chairman of the committee has considered that matter, and desires to have the joint resolution passed in its present form, and then to continue the Federal Emergency Relief Act of 1933 by some other act of the Congress, I shall not in any way attempt to interfere with that course.

That brings me to the suggestion made yesterday by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. Austin], who at first was so greatly shocked that $4,880,000,000 was to be turned over to the President, contending that it was not constitutional, and then satisfied himself with these miserable amendments to the joint resolution, the first of which is perhaps the most dangerous of all, the one of which I have just spoken.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HASTINGS. I yield.

Mr. LONG. Does the Senator say he understands that that language is what satisfied the Senator from Vermont?

Mr. HASTINGS. The Senator from Vermont said that if the joint resolution should not be materially changed he was likely to vote for it, and he discussed these amendments.

Mr. LONG. That is not the question I asked the Senator. Mr. HASTINGS. I will say to the Senator that that is the only way in which I can answer the question. I cannot do anything more than call attention to what the Senator said

Mr. LONG. The Senator may not want to answer my question, but I wish to state it again. Does the Senator understand that language to be what caused the Senator from Vermont to take that stand? That is not what I understood brought about that result.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. President, what I may say here with respect to this amendment will be largely in answer to the argument made by the Senator from Vermont.

The Senator from South Carolina [Mr. Byrnes], in answer to the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG], called attention to the fact that the President has said what he proposes to do with this money. He argued to the Senate that that ought to be reasonably satisfactory, particularly to those who have confidence in the judgment of the President. But it has always seemed to me that a Member of this body ought to be able to complain with reference to what the body itself is about to do without having some Senator say to him that it is because he has no faith in the President of the United States.

I disregard entirely who may be President of the United States or how much confidence we ought to have in his integrity and judgment. That is wholly beside the point. As the distinguished Senator from Vermont emphasized here yesterday, it is the business of the legislative body in appropriating money to know, with some good reason, and to have some fair intelligence as to what is to be done with the money. It is for that reason that I call attention to the first few lines of the amendment which permit the President to take that whole sum and pass it over to the Federal Emergency Relief Administration provided in the act of 1933, after it shall have been extended, and from that fund it may use money in direct relief or it may do all kinds of things that are authorized under that act.

It will be borne in mind by the Senate that this is not only a relief act, but it is a relief and work-relief act just as is the pending joint resolution. The sanctity of the particular amendment is that it is what is called a "break-down" of | what the President must do with this money.

Mr. GLASS. What the President may do with the money; not what he must do. There is nothing in the joint resolution that at all says what he must do.

Mr. HASTINGS. I know the Chairman of the Committee on Appropriations has that feeling about it. I think the amendment is some improvement over the original joint resolution. I agree with the Senator from Vermont in that I am not greatly impressed with the word "miscellaneous" included in the amendment. I am inclined to think, although I am by no means certain, that the word "miscellaneous" has relation to the words which precede it, and the particular projects which must be miscellaneous projects of a like character.

But to my mind that is wholly unimportant, because, as the distinguished Chairman of the Appropriations Committee has said, pretty nearly anything can be done under the measure. There are, however, some limitations. Under the previous measure I had in mind that the President might buy and operate a railroad; I had in mind that he might establish a newspaper in every congressional district in the country. I do not think either of those things could be done under the measure as it is now before us, although I am not quite certain. I should like to ask a question of those who are satisfied with the amendment. It is provided that some of the money "shall be available for the following classes of projects, and the amounts to be expended for each class shall not, except as hereinafter provided, exceed the respective amounts stated-namely, highways, roads, streets, and grade-crossing eliminations, $800,000,000." I invite attention to the fact that persons who are anxious that some of this money shall be used for these projects have absolutely no assurance that a single dollar of it will be used for any such purpose. In other words, where the $800,000,000 is set up there is nothing in the amendment itself which compels the President to spend a single dollar for that project. The same thing is true with respect to rehabilitation and relief in stricken agricultural areas, for which $500,000,000 is provided, and as to all the other projects set out.

In order that I might make a little more clear what might be done I have drafted a new resolution applying to roads. .It is not exaggerated, but I think it will demonstrate what may be the result under the amendment which is satisfactory to the Senator from Vermont:

Resolved, etc., That in order to provide work relief there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, and in the discretion and under the direction of the President, $800,000,000 to be used for highways, roads, streets, and grade-crossing elimination projects. The President shall not be required under this resolution to use any of said funds for said purposes. If, however, the President concludes to use said funds for said purpose, and in order that he may have additional funds for the same purpose, there is hereby approadditional funds for the same purpose, there is hereby appropriated an additional sum of $941,000,000.

The $941,000,000 I get by taking 20 percent of $4,705,000,-000, which I understand to be the amount as of today.

The President shall not be required to allocate any part of such fund to any particular State. He is hereby authorized to spend the whole of said sum in a single State or in any group of States wholly in his discretion. Nothing in this resolution shall prevent the President from spending any or all of said sum in the territories and possessions of the United States, exclusive of any

The President may, in his discretion, construct one or more highways extending from the Atlantic to the Pacific Oceans, and likewise may construct one or more highways from the northern portion of the United States to the southern portion.

Prevailing wage provisions in the present law shall not apply to the projects constructed under this resolution, nor shall the President be compelled to buy local material, but may import it from abroad.

Mr. President, I should like to call attention to another item in this amendment. It consists of 1 word and 9 figures:

Housing, $450,000,000.

Assume that the Senate has before it a joint resolution appropriating $450,000,000 for work relief, for housing: I committee or some member of the committee, if he canto tell me what is to be done under such a provision as that. Does it mean that the President is to build houses? If so, what is to be done with the houses? Will the houses, after they are built, belong to the Government?

The provision is-Housing, $450,000,000.

I do not know what is to be done with the houses. Are people to be taken off the relief roll and put in the houses that are to be built with this $450,000,000?

I made a little calculation as to how many houses could be built with this amount of money. When I get into these figures somebody may think I have been talking with Dr. Townsend; but if these houses were built on 52-foot lots, and were put in a row, there would be 100 lots for each mile; and if a $2,000 house were built on each lot, we should have a cost of $200,000 for a mile of houses. Senators can make their own calculations as to the effect of that.

As I say, $200,000 would build a mile of houses on 52-foot lots at a cost of $2,000 for each house. If this amount of money were spent in that way, we should have a row of houses 2,250 miles long, with not very wide spaces between them; and if we should add to this fund the $941,000,000 resulting from taking 20 percent of the whole amount carried by the joint resolution, we should have enough money to build 6,955 miles of houses, twice as many as would reach from coast to coast of this country, enough to put houses on both sides of a highway reaching from the Atlantic coast to the Pacific coast. If we should calculate the highway fund provided in this amendment at $80,000 a mile, we should have enough money in it to build 10,000 miles of road; and, for all I know, it may be contemplated to build such a highway with houses on each side of it.

Is not the Senate entitled to know, however, what this housing fund is to be used for? Can it be intelligently described by using the word "housing"? We cannot even get an intelligent definition of "housing" by going to the dictionary. It might mean pretty nearly anything. I think the Senate is entitled to know what it means as used in this amendment, and I do not know how anybody can be satisfied to appropriate that sum of money without knowing what is to be done with the houses. Are they to be built and sold? Are they to be built and rented? Is the Government to control all these houses? Is the Government to give them away to people who need them?

I call the attention of the Senate to the fact that the Home Owners' Loan Act of 1933, which we passed in an effort to help the home owners, covers eight pages of printed matter and provides that an individual cannot be helped to a greater extent than $20,000; and for weeks the House of Representatives has been trying to increase the amount. Under that act money can be loaned to a home owner only to the extent of 80 percent of the appraised value of his home, and the act goes into great detail as to how these few millions of dollars are to be spent to help the home owners. Having passed that act in 1933, however, we are now asked, 2 years later, to support a joint resolution with $450,000,000 in it for what is described only by the one word "housing."

I respectfully submit that the country is entitled to know and the Senate is entitled to know what is to be done with that money. I am entitled to know whether or not the Government is to come into my State and build houses. I am entitled to know whether or not the Government is to come into my State and build houses in competition with the contractors in my State. Every Senator here is entitled to have the same information.

I have not the slightest idea what is to be done with that housing money. No act passed by the Congress of the United States defines the word "housing" to mean something in particular.

The joint resolution appropriates $600,000,000 for the Civilian Conservation Corps. We know something about that, because we know that the Civilian Conservation Corps has been established; so when we appropriate $600,000,000 should like some Member of the Senate—the chairman of the for it we have some definite idea as to what is to be done with the money. When, however, we are asked to appropriate $450,000,000 with no more description of the purpose of the appropriation than the word "housing", I cannot understand how any Senator could be entirely satisfied with this amendment to the extent of being willing to vote for it when he was not willing heretofore to vote for the large sum carried by the joint resolution without having it broken Does the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. Robinson] desire to have the Senate adjourn now for the day?

Mr. ROBINSON. Does the Senator from Delaware wish to continue his remarks?

Mr. HASTINGS. I do not desire to keep the Senate here. Mr. ROBINSON. Perhaps a vote cannot be taken tonight.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, I should like to have the Senate adjourn for the day unless the Senator desires to continue his remarks tonight.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment I intend to propose to the pending joint resolution. I ask to have the amendment printed so that it may be read by Senators tomorrow morning. It is an amendment to the section under consideration.

There being no objection, the amendment was ordered to lie on the table, to be printed, and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

On line 17, page 3, strike out "$600,000,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$300,000,000", and following the semicolon insert the following: "For colleges and universities, to be used to advance money to students in need of and desiring financial assistance so that such students may pay the costs and living expenses necessary for pursuing study at such colleges or universities, $300,000,000."

PUBLICITY OF INCOME-TAX RETURNS

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, during the day I presented an amendment which I intend to offer in the nature of a substitute for House bill 6359, relating to the repeal of the so-called "pink slip" provision of the income-tax law. A number of Senators have indicated some interest in the amendment, and I, therefore, ask unanimous consent that it may be incorporated in the RECORD as a part of my remarks.

There being no objection, the proposed amendment was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"That section 55 of the Revenue Act of 1934 is amended to read

That section is of the Revenue Act of 1934 is amended to read as follows:

PUBLIC-UTILITY HOLDING COMPANIES

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, my colleague the junior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. Bachman] and I have received many thousands of letters from Tennessee about the Wheeler antiholding company bill, most of the letters being from persons opposed to the bill.

The bill referred to consists of 140 pages, and contains a great many intricate proposals. My colleague and I have not had time to give it and the proposals therein contained proper attention, but shall do so at the very earliest opportunity, and give the opinions of our correspondents every

We find it absolutely impossible, with our present office forces, to answer each one of the letters personally. hope, therefore, that every one who has written upon this matter will take this statement as an acknowledgement of his or her letter, and will understand that we cannot make an immediate personal reply because of the unusual volume of these letters.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, I thank the Senator for making this statement. In the last week 15,000 letters on this subject have poured in on me. I understand that each utility in my State has notified each of its employees that if he cannot get 40 letters sent to the Senators and Representatives from Missouri he will be discharged. The result has been that in my Sunday morning mail, usually very light, I received 6,000 letters of this character. I thank the Senator from Tennessee for calling attention to this matter for the RECORD.

Mr. McKELLAR. My colleague and I received so many letters from Tennessee that we were obliged, in justice to our office forces, not to reply to them personally.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I ask to have inserted in the RECORD a communication enclosed in a letter I have received, the communication being from the Associated Gas & Electric Co. to the security holders of the Associated Gas & Electric system, calling upon the owners of securities to write to Senators and Members of the House of Representatives.

I also ask to have inserted a circular letter which was presented to the employees of a holding company setting forth the objections to the bill to which the Senator from Tennessee has called attention, describing it as a demagogic attempt to destroy industry, and making a few comments about the bill.

It is as a result of these circular letters that the employees of the companies and the owners of securities are writing to the Members of the House and of the Senate, and I think we ought to put these letters in the RECORD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the letters were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

To the Security Holders of Associated Gas & Electric System:

The campaign of political persecution and abuse against the public-utility industry has culminated with the recent introduction into Congress of the so-called "Public Utility Act of 1935" (House bill 5423, Senate bill 1725). This legislation proposes to place public utilities under the power of three Federal commissions and expressly provides for the abolition of public-utility holding companies at the end of 5 years or earlier.

It is doubtful if more drastic or vicious legislation was ever submitted to Congress. It goes far beyond regulation by Government. It means management by Government and destruction by Government.

ment.

The contribution of the holding company to the comfort and convenience of the American people has been equaled by few other institutions. Holding company operation throughout the country has meant unification, extension, and cheapening of the charge for electric service. The wiping out of holding companies can only mean the wiping out of investments owned by millions of their security holders and their consumers which holding companies have given in the past and will give in the future if they are not denied.

ing companies and their consumers which holding companies have given in the past and will give in the future if they are not denied by law the right to exist.

While this company will do everything in its power which it properly may to defeat this bill, you can accomplish much more by direct action of your own. It is time you took such action. Furthermore, persons interested in other lines of business should also take heed and act likewise. No one can tell how long before some other line of industry will be singled out.

Some other line of industry will be singled out.

You cannot afford to permit the passage of this legislation. Your Senators and Representatives in Congress are listed on the reverse side of this letter. Write them that you protest against the destruction of holding companies, the wrecking of private investments, and the domination of the electrical industry by political agencies. Ask them what possible reason exists for such drastic and confiscatory legislation.

If convenient, we would appreciate your sending us copies of your letters and copies of the replies you receive. Prompt action your letters and copies of the replies you receive. Prompt action on your part is necessary as hearings on these bills before congressional committees are now under way.

Very truly yours,

ASSOCIATED GAS & ELECTRIC CO.

OBJECTIONS TO PUBLIC-UTILITY HOLDING COMPANY BILL A. MAJOR OBJECTIONS

1. It is a demagogic attempt to destroy, in the public-utility industry only, a form of organization which can continue in all other branches of activity, including railroad, industrial, mining, commercial, and social.

2. It contains many misstatements of fact and is difficult to understand, except that it does leave clear a goal of complete

It permits Federal agencies to dictate and control in matters that are local and subject to State control.

4. It is unjust and discriminatory class legislation—today it is the public utilities; tomorrow it may be your neighbor's business.

5. It can only lead to one ultimate end, complete Federal domination and control, with the attendant bureaucratic evils and "pork barrel" waste.

B. OBJECTIONS BY HOLDING-COMPANY EMPLOYEE

Only one thing is obvious if the bill is passed, he will lose his job at any time between the date the bill passes and January 1, 1940.

C. OBJECTIONS BY OPERATING-COMPANY EMPLOYEE

1. Holding companies will hesitate to finance additions and im-

1. Holding companies will hesitate to mance additions and improvements, with the result construction, maintenance, and distribution staffs must be reduced.

2. Purchases of materials and supplies will be curtailed, thereby affecting purchasing stores, and affiliated employees.

3. New business efforts and cooperative programs will be disrupted; financing these sales and cooperation with the dealers will be uncertain; a number of the employees will no doubt lose their tobs. jobs.

4. As the holding companies lose their control, new interests will take charge of the individual operating units. General managers, department heads, and many others will no doubt be supplanted by men friendly to the new interests. As these changes take place the other employees in all departments will in some manner be affected by the policies of the new interests.

5. While the period of grace is labeled 5 years, the process of disintegration and liquidation will begin immediately, and every tradesman, shopkeeper, and local banker will be affected.

Mr. GLASS. I should like to inquire if any of the Senators have received letters advocating holding companies for

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator from Virginia that there have been just a few trickles of the deluge along that line. I have had a few letters on that subject.

Mr. GLASS. Advocating holding companies for banks? Mr. CLARK. Yes; I have had some from the States of Minnesota and Iowa on that subject.

Mr. GLASS. Advocating holding companies for banks?

Mr. CLARK. Yes.

Mr. GLASS. Have they heard from Michigan?

Mr. CLARK. I am not informed as to that.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. GLASS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. TRAMMELL, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, reported favorably the nominations of several postmasters in the State of Florida.

He also, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, reported favorably the nominations of sundry officers in the Navy and in the Marine Corps.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The reports will be placed on the Executive Calendar.

If there be no further reports of committees, the calendar is in order.

THE JUDICIARY

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Edward G. Dunn to be United States attorney, northern district of Iowa. Iowa.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

POSTMASTERS

The legislative clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations of postmasters.

Mr. McKELLAR. I ask that the nominations of postmasters be confirmed en bloc.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the nominations of postmasters are confirmed en bloc.

That completes the calendar.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. ROBINSON. As in legislative session, I move that the Senate stand adjourned until 12 o'clock tomorrow.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 5 minutes p. m.) the Senate, in legislative session, adjourned until tomorrow, Wednesday, March 13, 1935, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

TUESDAY, MARCH 12, 1935

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m.

Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Who shall ascend into the hill of the Lord? or who shall stand in His holy place?

He that hath clean hands, and a pure heart; who hath not lifted up his soul unto vanity, nor sworn deceitfully.

Almighty God, unto whom all hearts are open, all desires known, and from whom no secrets are hid, cleanse the thoughts of our hearts by the inspiration of Thy Holy Spirit, that we may perfectly love Thee, and worthily magnify Thy holy name. Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT

Sundry messages in writing from the President of the United States were communicated to the House by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries.

FOG

Mr. STACK. Mr. Speaker, I would like permission to address the House for 1 minute on the fog, atmospheric and otherwise.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. STACK. Mr. Speaker and fellow colleagues of the House, this morning coming to work I noticed that there was a bit of fog in the atmosphere, but tonight before the sun goes down the atmosphere will clear.

Last night I listened with admiration to that man of God from Michigan who wants to clear the political atmosphere. He reiterated a statement that he is still with Roosevelt and against his money advisers. I think we owe a vote of thanks to that man of God from Michigan, and if it is in order I so move you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. BLANTON. I make the point of order, Mr. Speaker, that that is not in order.

Mr. STACK. Thank you, Mr. Blanton. [Laughter.]

HOME, SWEET HOME

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD on the duty of the Government on the Home Owners' Loan Corporation.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Speaker-

Home, home, sweet, sweet home; Be it ever so humble, There's no place like home.

The sentiment and force of these three lines has had much to do with shaping and molding the citizenship-building virtues of home life in our Nation during the last 100 years.

Two years ago when Congress became aware of the fact that multiplied thousands of home owners in the United States had lost, or were about to lose, their homes because of financial distress, they immediately looked about to find ways and means by which the homes could be saved. After due consideration the Home Owners' Loan Corporation was set up.

It is needless for me to say here that it was a gigantic task for the Government to undertake. Naturally there would be many complicated angles in setting up such a large organization. It follows that there would be many avenues in which there would not be the efficiency desired. It is only natural that a certain percent would be selected for the various positions who would not be fully qualified to render full efficiency. This is true in old set-ups and organizations such as our banking institutions, civil service, and others. It would follow that in a new set-up there would be a greater percent of apparent inconsistencies than in an old established set-up or institution.

However, the great task confronting us as a nation at that time was, as far as possible, to save the little home owners and the farmers from losing their homes; to keep the sheriff from selling them out; to keep the mortgage holder from closing in on them and thus not only shatter their own ideals for the rest of their lives, but weaken the Nation's fundamental institution, "the home."

I myself, know personally of weaknesses in the execution of this measure but I also know that as a whole it was one of the great fundamental procedures of the Seventy-third Congress. It will go down in history as such.

By putting into force the Home Owners' Loan Corporation some 18 months ago, we have been able to save thousands, yes hundreds of thousands, of little homes, and by extending the time of this Corporation and making additional appropriations for the perpetuation of the same, we will save multiplied thousands more homes. The same could be said of the Farm Loan Act. We will save thousands of farms for the farmers who are being overtaxed just like little home owners have been for the last 10 or 15 years.

My contention has always been that we must give adequate protection to the little home owners, the farmers, the laborers, and the little business men. This act was designed to do that, and I am pleased to say that it has accomplished much in this direction, and by extending it we will continue to accomplish much more in the same direction.

In my own State of Pennsylvania I find, according to data furnished me this morning from the main office of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation here in Washington the following activities or accomplishments under the Home Owners' Loan Act, since it went into operation some 18 months ago. They are as follows: 106,259 applications have been received in the State of Pennsylvania; 34,000 of that number withdrawn or held for further consideration; 72,105 net applications received; 30,596 applications pending in Pennsylvania; 10,837 pending before delivery to legal department; 10,837 pending after delivery to legal department; 41,509 loans allowed or closed in the State of Pennsylvania; and $120,-539,981, amount of money loaned for these loans in the State of Pennsylvania.

Mr. Speaker, in times like these a nation must always come to the assistance of the home owners. The strength of any people and in any nation since the beginning of time depends on the attitude of the mind of its people. Where a people own their own homes and farms we find an attitude that has greater citizenship-building and nation-building power than any other one avenue of procedure.

ADJUSTED-COMPENSATION CERTIFICATES

The SPEAKER. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. Forp] is recognized for 20 minutes.

Mr. FORD of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, ever since the first adjusted-service compensation bill made its appearance on the floor of this House in 1920 I have believed that the veterans of the World War should receive a cash adjustment for the services they rendered in defense of our country.

Adjusted-service compensation for the American soldier has been the victim of the bitterest, longest drawn out, and most powerful attack ever directed against any legislative measure. Yet, after 15 long years of relentless opposition from the big interests of the country, the idea still survives and stands a monument to the sense of justice of the masses of the people.

I am glad that the Members of Congress will soon have an opportunity to pass a measure that will pay the country's greatest war debt. Mr. Speaker, when I use the word "greatest", I do not mean the largest in size but refer to the one having the most justice and equity. Almost 18 years have passed since that day in April on which the Congress of the United States stood up and solemnly declared the existence of a state of war between America and Germany. I am glad to say that during those 18 years I have not forgotten how our brave boys left their homes and loved ones, endured the hardships of camp and the weariness of drill and march. Neither have those boys forgotten the rough sea voyage, the insanitary and indescribable conditions of the trenches, and the nerve-wracking hours and days under the fire and the gas of the enemy. Those men were the choice selection of 100,000,000 Americans, and many of them walked into the jaws of death itself to save and defend America and its people. Those who were not under the actual fire of the enemy were subject to being called at any time.

The circumstances under which these young Americans went to war should be well known to everyone. They were not given the opportunity to enter into any voluntary contract as to the pay they should receive, and their wishes were never consulted. The mighty voice of the United States Government ordered them to perform military duty for $30 a month and such personal upkeep as might be provided for them. Out of that $30 a month $15 had to be sent to dependents and $6 was paid for insurance, leaving 90 percent of the soldiers with a net pay of $9 a month or 30 cents a day. It is commonplace, yet absolutely true, to say that without the soldier we would have been helpless and defenseless; and we all know that they sacrificed personal gain, health, happiness, and even life itself in order that our country might be protected. To that American soldier and to his loved ones the tragedy of war appeared in its most horrible form, yet the Government paymaster made him a 30-cent man and forced his family to live amidst skyrocketing prices on a miserable pittance of $15 a month. Upon investigation of the statistics, we find that this same paymaster, who allowed the soldier only 30 cents a day, was at the same time paying civilian employees high salaries for services performed by them in the perfect safety made secure by the valor of the United States fighting man. A typical example of these high salaries is seen in the pay of workers who were employed by the Government for the construction of ships. Their basic wage was $12.50 a day. If they worked overtime their pay was increased. The minimum wage in private enterprise was very rarely under $4 a day and in many instances was far more than that, yet the soldier could not profit from such delightful wages. The enemy was not fighting on the basis of an 8-hour day, and some days the soldier would work for a full 24 hours without any increase in remuneration. Even before the close of the war our people began to see the injustice of the low salary being paid the service man, so Congress provided that he should be given $60 in additional pay when discharged from the service. Sixty dollars was hardly more than enough to pay for a suit of clothes to wear while looking for a job, but it had a very significant indication. The conscience of the country had awakened to the justice of the idea that the war veteran should have an adjustment in the amount of pay he had received for winning a terrible war, a war from which everybody but he and his family had secured their profits.

About this time we saw the wizards of high finance glean an idea from the sentiment in favor of the soldier. The railroads, having been under the operation of the Government during the war, by reason of contract, asked for compensation for injuries alleged to have been sustained as a result of Government operation. Unlike the soldier, these railroads drew up their own contract and made their own terms and agreement. Afterward when the profits were not as large as they had intended them to be under the terms of the contract there was no serious opposition when the Congress voted a billion dollars in cash as additional remuneration to the railroad corporations of our country.

Then came the war contractors who claimed injury because the war ceased when it did, so, in grand style, they were given a half billion dollars. These profiteers had been under coercion from no one and made their own contracts, yet when they decided they had not made enough money they asked for more and they got it. The special committee of the Senate investigating the munitions industry has just recently brought to the attention of the American people some very surprising and shocking facts concerning the profits made by the war profiteers who exploited the Government in the sale of war materials. The committee learned that during the 4 years immediately preceding the war the Hercules Powder Co. made an average yearly profit of $1,271,000 but during the war it made $7,430,000 annually. General Motors made $6,954,000 a year before and $21,700,000 a year during the war. Anaconda Copper increased its profit from $10,649,000 to $34,549,000 yearly. Bethlehem Steel for a similar period was able to clear $49,427,000 as compared to the pre-war $6,840,000 and at the same time Du Pont gained from $6,092,000 to $58,076,000.

In 1918 the Bethlehem Loading Co. made a profit of 362 percent on its investment in the shell-loading business. In 1917 Colt's Fire Arms made 64 percent, Savage Arms Corporation made 65 percent, and Western Cartridge Co., 35 percent. Thus it will be seen that the profiteers had their billions from the Government without any effort while the soldiers earned their meager 30 cents a day by long hours of hard work and the shedding of blood.

The civil-service employee, who had drawn around $2,500 a year while the soldiers were fighting for 30 cents a day, was on the inside of the Government council and quickly noticed the popularity of adjustments, so his demand for more compensation resulted in an allowance of another $600,000,000 from funds provided by the American taxpayer.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FORD of Mississippi. I yield.

Mr. BLANTON. To be exact, there was one bonus of $120 and two additional bonuses of $240 paid to all employees of the Government.

Mr. FORD of Mississippi. My good friend from Texas is correct and I thank the gentleman.

In the meantime the war veterans had received their 30 cents, their $60 extra allowance, and some experience the like of which had never before been witnessed in the history of warfare. They had been promised everything; yet they had to come home on a stretcher to get anything.

It was argued that the richest country in the world could well afford to pay these gigantic sums for the purpose of seeing justice done to industry and to Government employees. Very little was said about the profiteer, but he got his anyway. Congress did not turn a deaf ear to the railroads, the war contractors, and the Government employees when they demanded more than $2,000,000,000 from the Treasury, but did ignore the request of the financially hampered, disease-ridden, blood-stained veterans that could be seen in every community, village, town, and city in the whole United States and who were the victims of a train of events set in motion through no agency of their own.

When the ability of the Government to pay was discussed some forgot that during the war the same Government had loaned $7,077,114,754 to the allied countries. It was not remembered that after the war had actually stopped our Government loaned the Allies an additional $3,273,324,324.70, of which $2,533,288,825.45 was in actual cash money. Today, my friends, $633,818,220.44 of that sum loaned to those we helped to win the war is past due and unpaid. This is true, although they used part of the money we loaned them for the payment of additional money to their soldiers.

When all the facts have been considered the question was everywhere asked, "Why can't the soldier be given a fair adjustment in the pay he received while fighting for us, and while all others were growing more rich?" It can truthfully be said that the moral sense of the country dictated the enactment of an equitable adjustment, but the financial leaders of the country, under the cloak of financial wisdom, always opposed the adjustment and threatened a serious deficit in the Treasury if the rights of the veteran should in any way be recognized.

Although the heart of the people was in sympathy with cash payment, opposing pressure was brought to bear from the big interests of the country, and the attempts for adjusted-service compensation were defeated in 1920 and in 1922 in the United States Congress.

Thus, it was that in 1924, 6 years after the armistice, the question was still unsettled and the cause was still delayed, lacking of realization.

In 1925 the same old artillery and the same old infantry that had thundered so fearfully against adjusted-service compensation in 1920 and again in 1922 were brought forcefully into play, but despite the opposition a bill passed Congress over the determined veto of the President of the United States.

Mr. Speaker, the idea prompting the measure was one of the most praiseworthy in the history of American legislation, but there were at least two glaring faults in the law as finally enacted. The defects were: First, the refusal to pay in cash; and, second, the deduction of the original $60 payment from the credit given on the certificate. Our veterans were allowed an adjustment of $1 a day for home service and $1.25 a day for service overseas, after the deduction of the $60 original payment. I feel perfectly safe in saying that if I had been a Member of Congress in 1924 I would have voted and worked for cash payment, and I would have voted against the $60 deduction.

The country was enjoying prosperity, the war debt had been materially reduced, all others had been paid in cash, but the war veterans were given postdated checks, payable 27 years after the performance of the services they so sacrificingly rendered. The veteran who had received the least, who had done the most, and who needed the money the worst, was told to be patient for 20 years, at the end of which time he or his heirs would receive an adjustment. Our Government paid the war profiteer more profit, it wiped the slate clear of every obligation, while the doors of the Treasury were closed to the call of the man who had answered the call of his country.

With all these facts before you, no one can deny the justice of immediate cash payment of the adjusted-service certificates. There is no question of our ability to pay. It will cost no more to pay now than it will in 1945.

Mr. YOUNG. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FORD of Mississippi. I will yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. YOUNG. I agree with the gentleman that in 1924 at the height of the Coolidge prosperity era our Government was in good financial condition and could readily have paid the ex-service men in cash at that time instead of by a postdated check. Is it not a fact that our Government at that time, at the height of the Coolidge prosperity, was in much better financial condition to pay our ex-service men regardless of need than at the present time?

Mr. FORD of Mississippi. I agree that the Government was in much better condition during the height of the Coolidge prosperity era to discharge its obligation to the veterans but because it did not see fit to make the payment at that time is certainly no good reason why we should now deny the payment of an obligation which is so justly due the World War veterans of our country.

The credit of the country is not yet exhausted. This side of Congress has already voted appropriations totaling several billions of dolars and if it can afford to do that I see no reason why it could not now vote to pay cash for the obligations it owes to the veterans and which have been due since 1918.

Mr. YOUNG. One further question. A cash payment for all adjusted-compensation certificates would at the present time have our Government pay to approximately 750,000 veterans—

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired.

Mr. YOUNG. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Mississippi be extended for 5 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. YOUNG. My question is this: Five hundred and ten thousand veterans have not even borrowed on their adjusted-compensation certificates. In addition to that, if the adjusted-compensation certificates of these 510,000 veterans were paid in cash at the present time, it would entail a payment from the Public Treasury of approximately $500,000,000. Also, of our ex-service men there are many thousands who at the present time are paying income taxes to their Government. In view of all this, would not the gentleman be of opinion that it would be better first to exclude such ex-service men as I have referred to from the cash payment of the bonus and pay to the other ex-service men first?

Mr. FORD of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I do not agree with my friend from Ohio in saying that we should exclude anyone from the cash payment of their adjusted-service certificate. We did not exclude the railroad corporations, the war contractors, the war profiteers, and the Government employees from receiving their adjustments because they were not borrowing money nor because they might have been paying income taxes. We paid them in cash, and I think we should do likewise to all of the veterans.

Mr. Speaker, both justice and reason are in favor of immediate cash payment. The average war veteran is now a little past 40 years of age, and there is no doubt that he would make wise use of his money if it were paid him now. There is no doubt that the 50-percent loan made on the certificates in 1931 did a great deal toward remedying the depression, and complete payment, with the cancelation of interest on all previous loans, would be a great value at this time.

Mr. Speaker, the immediate cash payment of the adjustedservice certificate is not a gift, it is not a loan, it is not a dole. It is the payment of an honest obligation, now long since overdue. Payment will not only be beneficial to the soldier, but will help the whole country. The Government can afford to pay it; the people want it paid. [Applause.]

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Speaker, I rise at this time to announce the untimely death of Mary Anne Sadowski, the little daughter of our colleague the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Sadowski], and ask unanimous consent that he be granted indefinite leave of absence during this period of bereavement.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it will be so ordered. There was no objection.

SUBCOMMITTEE OF COMMITTEE ON LABOR—LEAVE TO SIT DURING SESSION OF THE HOUSE

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the subcommittee of the Committee on Labor be permitted to meet during the session of the House this afternoon. The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

The SPEAKER. Is there of

CALL OF THE HOUSE

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present. I think the Members should be here to vote on the Wolcott $50,000 amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Two hundred Members present, not a quorum.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The doors were closed.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

Allen DeRouen Johnson, W. Va. Mitchell, III. Bankhead O'Malley Doutrich Kahn Kleberg Kopplemann Beam Boehne Drewry Peyser Reece Duncan Gambrill Gasque Larrabee Lewis, Md. Sadowski Sandlin Buckley, N. Y. Goldsborough Carter McMillan Schaefer Maloney South Treadway Jenkins, Ohio Darden

The SPEAKER. Three hundred and ninety-five Members have answered to their names, a quorum.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I move to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The motion was agreed to.

The doors were opened.

HOLDING COMPANIES (H. DOC. NO. 137)

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce and ordered printed:

To the Congress of the United States:

I am transmitting to you herewith a report submitted to me by the National Power Policy Committee. I named this committee last summer from among the departments of the Government concerned with power problems to make a series of reports to coordinate Government policy on such problems. This report I am submitting to you is the recommendation of the committee with respect to the treatment of holding companies in the public-utility field. It deserves the careful attention of every Member of the Congress.

The so-called "public utility holding company bill" (title I of House bill 5423 and of Senate bill 1725), which was drafted under the direction of congressional leaders, incorporates many of the recommendations of this report.

I have been watching with great interest the fight being waged against public utility holding company legislation. I have watched the use of investors' money to make the investor believe that the efforts of Government to protect him are designed to defraud him. I have seen much of the propaganda prepared against such legislation—even down to mimeographed sheets of instructions for propaganda to exploit the most far-fetched and fallacious fears. I have seen enough to be as unimpressed by it as I was by the similar effort to stir up the country against the securities exchange bill last spring. The Securities Exchange Act is now generally accepted as a constructive measure, and I feel confident that any fears now entertained in regard to proposed utility holding company legislation will prove as groundless as those last spring in the case of the Securities Exchange Act.

So much has been said through chain letters and circulars and by word of mouth that misrepresents the intent and purpose of a new law that it is important that the people of the country understand once and for all the actual facts of the case. Such a measure will not destroy legitimate business or wholesome and productive investment. It will not destroy a penny of actual value of those operating properties which holding companies now control and which holding company securities represent insofar as they have any value. On the contrary, it will surround the necessary reorganization of the holding company with safeguards which will in fact protect the investor.

We seek to establish the sound principle that the utility holding company, so long as it is permitted to continue, should not profit from dealings with subsidiaries and affiliates where there is no semblance of actual bargaining to get the best value and the best price. If a management company is equipped to offer a genuinely economic management service to the smaller operating utility companies, it ought not to own stock in the companies it manages, and its fees ought to be reasonable. The holding company should not be permitted to establish a sphere of influence from which independent engineering, construction, and other private enterprise is excluded by a none too benevolent private paternalism. If a management company is controlled by related operating companies, it should be organized on a truly mutual and cooperative basis and should be required to perform its services at actual cost demonstrably lower than the services can be obtained in a free and open market.

We do not seek to prevent the legitimate diversification of investment in operating utility companies by legitimate investment companies. But the holding company in the past has confused the function of control and management with that of investment and in consequence has more frequently than not failed in both functions. Possibly some holding companies may be able to divest themselves of the control of their present subsidiaries and become investment trusts. But an investment company ceases to be an investment company when it embarks into business and management. Investment judgment requires the judicial appraisal of other people's management.

The disappearance at the end of 5 years of those utility holding companies which cannot justify themselves as necessary for the functioning of the operating utility companies of the country is an objective which congressional leaders I have consulted deem essential to a realistic and farsighted treatment of the evils of public-utility holding companies. For practical reasons we should offer a chance of survival to those holding companies which can prove to the Securities and Exchange Commission that their existence is necessary for the achievement of the public ends which private utility companies are supposed to serve. For such companies, and during the interim period for other companies, the proposal for a comprehensive plan of public regulation and control is sound.

But where the utility holding company does not perform a demonstrably useful and necessary function in the operating industry and is used simply as a means of financial control, it is idle to talk of the continuation of holding companies on the assumption that regulation can protect the public against them. Regulation has small chance of ultimate success against the kind of concentrated wealth and economic power which holding companies have shown the ability to acquire in the utility field. No Government effort can be expected to carry out effective, continuous, and intricate regulation of the kind of private empires within the Nation which the holding company device has proved capable of creating.

Except where it is absolutely necessary to the continued functioning of a geographically integrated operating utility system the utility holding company with its present powers must go. If we could remake our financial history in the light of experience certainly we would have none of this holding-company business. It is a device which does not belong to our American traditions of law and business. It is only a comparatively late innovation. It dates definitely from the same unfortunate period which marked the beginnings of a host of other laxities in our corporate law which have brought us to our present disgraceful condition of competitive charter-mongering between our States. And it offers too well demonstrated temptation to and facility for abuse to be tolerated as a recognized business institution. That temptation and that facility are inherent in its very nature. It is a corporate invention which can give a few corporate insiders unwarranted and intolerable powers over other people's money. In its destruction of local control and its substitution of absentee management it has built up in the public utility field what has justly been called a system of private socialism which is inimical to the welfare of a

Most of us agree that we should take the control and the benefits of the essentially local operating utility industry out of a few financial centers and give back that control and those benefits to the localities which produce the business and create the wealth. We can properly favor economically independent business, which stands on its own feet and diffuses power and responsibility among the many, and frowns upon those holding companies which through interlocking directorates and other devices have given tyrannical power and exclusive opportunity to a favored few. It is time to make an effort to reverse that process of the concentration of power which has made most American citizens, once traditionally independent owners of their own businesses, helplessly dependent for their daily bread upon the favor of a very few, who, by devices such as holding companies, have taken for themselves unwarranted economic power. I am against private socialism of concentrated private power as thoroughly as I am against government socialism. The one is equally as dangerous as the other; and destruction of private socialism is utterly essential to avoid governmental socialism.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and ordered printed:

To the Congress of the United States:

I commend to the favorable consideration of the Congress the enclosed report from the Secretary of State to the end that Public Resolution 118, Seventy-first Congress, be amended so as to authorize an annual appropriation to pay the pro rata share of the United States in the expenses of the International Technical Committee of Aerial Legal Experts and to authorize an annual appropriation in the sum of $6,500, or so much thereof as may be necessary, for the expenses of participation by the Government of the United States in the meetings of the International Technical Committee of Aerial Legal Experts and/or of the commissions established by that committee.

DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. BUCHANAN, from the Committee on Appropriations, reported the bill (H. R. 6644; Rept. No. 376) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1935, and prior fiscal years, to provide supplemental appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1935, and for other purposes, which was read a first and second time and, with the accompanying report, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I reserve all points of order.

ADDITIONAL HOME-MORTGAGE RELIEF

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 6021) to provide additional home-mortgage relief, to amend the Federal Home Loan Bank Act, the Home Owners' Loan Act of 1933, and the National Housing Act, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 6021, with Mr. Celler in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. COCHRAN. Am I correct in assuming that the order of business is the teller vote on the pending amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. Hancock] demanded tellers, but tellers have not yet been ordered.

Mr. COCHRAN. I ask unanimous consent, in view of the situation which confronts the House, a number of Members present now who were not present on Saturday last, that a member of the majority side and a member of the minority side of the Committee on Banking and Currency be allowed 5 minutes each in which to explain the pending amendments. If this consent is not granted, any number of Members will be voting blind. The Committee is entitled to know the situation that confronts us, and my request is fair to both sides. The mere reading of the amendments and substitute will not enable Members to understand just what is proposed.

Mr. BLANTON. Reserving the right to object, they might both be on the same side of the question. Both sides of this question ought to be presented. The 10 minutes should be against it.

Mr. COCHRAN. I think the Committee will be fair in the matter.

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, but it is a question of both sides having their own time. We want our rights.

Mr. COCHRAN. I will amend my request, Mr. Chairman. request that the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. HANCOCK] and the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOLCOTT] have 5 minutes each.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, a point of order. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. TABER. Under the rules of the House, the Committee having voted to close debate on this item, it is impossible for the Committee, by unanimous consent, to wipe that out.

The CHAIRMAN. The Committee can, by unanimous consent, change that situation. The request made by the gentleman from Missouri is for unanimous consent to do that.

Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Cochran] that there be allowed 10 minutes 5 minutes on each side of this question?

Mr. BLANTON. Five minutes each by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. Hancock] and the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Wolcott].

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. SISSON. Reserving the right to object, I am sure the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Wolcott], who made a very fine statement on this, which, unfortunately, the House did not hear on Saturday, would prefer that the gentleman from New York [Mr. O'CONNOR], who really led the debate on one side, should occupy the 5 minutes. Would that be agreeable to the gentleman from Michigan?

Mr. WOLCOTT. It is entirely agreeable. I think the gentleman from New York [Mr. O'CONNOR] should use the time allowed to me.

Mr. COCHRAN. Any arrangement, just so the situation is explained, suits me.

Mr. BLANTON. That is satisfactory. But, Mr. Chairman, if there are going to be a lot of questions that in themselves constitute prolonged debate, I will object.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will again state the unanimous-consent request. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN] asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. Hancock] have 5 minutes and the gentleman from New York [Mr. O'CONNOR] have 5 minutes in connection with this amendment. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. Hancock] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, ladies and gentleman of the Committee, on Saturday I think I explained clearly the issue which now faces the House. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOLCOTTI proposes to increase the amount of the credit or loans to be insured under title I of the Federal Housing Act from a $2,000 loan for home renovizing purposes to a $50,000 loan for improvements to commercial or industrial properties. This section, together with his amendment, would make any type of loan for most any kind of improvement to any kind of property eligible up to the amount of $50,000. provided it came through an approved institution. The committee brought in a bill amending title I, which would permit these loans to be insured up to $25,000, which, in my opinion, is an outright distortion of the true, original purposes of the activities to be carried on under title I.

Under the amendment which I have offered the entire section 22 of the printed bill, or 25 of the amended bill, would be stricken out, with the result that title I of the present Federal Housing Act would remain intact as now written on the statute books. To further clarify the situation so that the House may understand exactly the issue before it today, if we voted down the Wolcott amendment to my amendment, the question would then recur upon my motion to strike out the entire section. Please bear in mind that if the Wolcott amendment is voted down and my amendment is voted up, the original language of title I remains intact and the Admonition could continue to use equally divided, 5 minutes for the amendment and 5 minutes | its insurance fund of $200,000,000 in assisting small-home owners throughout the country to secure credit with which to make needed repairs to their homes. Your Banking and Currency Committee was advised at the time this legislation was considered that there were practically twelve or thirteen million homes in America owned by people of moderate means that needed repairs, and it was their opinion that through this method relief would be afforded them to rehabilitate their properties and that this in turn would aid enormously in stimulating the durable-goods industries and putting men to work.

It was essentially, however, a "better housing" proposition, and no one ever dreamed that we would be faced with a proposition of this kind. My judgment is that if the Wolcott amendment is adopted and my amendment is not adopted, Congress is in effect making a "hand-out" to a few of the large institutions and installment financing companies to further the sale of their products rather than to aid the small-home owner and the building trades throughout the country. For instance, if one of these lending institutions should make 10 loans of $50,000 each, amounting to $500,000, the Government would be responsible for $100,000 of that amount and in case of nonpayment on the part of the borrower the insurance corporation would have to pay over to the lending institution $100,000 in cold cash. I am perfectly willing and anxious to see these institutions assisted, but I do not think that the Government should be called upon with taxpayers' money to assume 20 percent of the liability. Is there another lending institution in existence which resorts to such liberal and generous practices? Will the Government take care of 20 percent of the loss which a home owner incurs when he faces pay day on his mortgage loan to a Government agency?

We should remember that out of a potential billion dollars of insurance, as provided in title I of the act, the Housing Administration has insured less than $40,000,000 in credits. More than one-seventh of this amount has been insured to take care of loans made through the National City Bank of New York, and practically all of this insurance has gone to protect loans made for the purchase of articles and materials from 10 companies in the United States. Bear in mind also that these loans are supposed to be character loans and that no security will likely be required. Why should this special privilege be accorded to a selected few? It smacks of favoritism, to my way of thinking. If my amendment, however, prevails, the losses would be held to a minimum, the benefits would be spread throughout the country and the original spirit and purpose of the bill would probably be made effective.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. HANCOCK] has expired.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from North Carolina have 2 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. SISSON. The gentleman will concede, I am sure, that the amendment offered by him to strike out this entire section or the part of it relating to the renovizing of small factories, business places, and so forth, does not represent the action of the Committee on Banking and Currency. It is the gentleman's own individual amendment?

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. I will say to the gentleman from New York that the committee voted, if I remember correctly, 12 to 11 in favor of the Reilly amendment, which reduced the amount from $50,000 to $25,000, as it now appears in the bill.

Mr. SISSON. That is correct. The committee also voted by a vote of 13 to 10 against the gentleman's motion to strike out this particular section. That is the purport of the present amendment?

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. I think that is correct. The vote was 13 to 10 against the amendment that I am asking the House to adopt. I am striving to make the issue as clear as crystal. I hope I am doing it.

Mr. COCHRAN. If the House defeats the Wolcott amendment, and then defeats the amendment offered by the gentleman from North Carolina, the bill will remain $25,000 as reported by the committee? Is that correct?

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. That is absolutely correct.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. I yield.

Mr. SISSON. If the amendment offered by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. Hancock] prevails, the entire provision recommended by the Housing Administration goes

Mr. COCHRAN. But if the amendment is defeated, the committee's recommendation stands.

Mr. SISSON. The committee's recommendation, adopted by a 12-to-11 vote, stands; but not the Administration's recommendation.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may proceed for 1 additional

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. I yield.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Do I understand correctly that the Administration's recommendation is $50,000?

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. If the gentleman considers that the officials of the Housing Administration are authorized to speak for the Administration, that is correct.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. They recommended $50,000?

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. They presented evidence and testimony to the committee in support of a $50,000 limitation.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. And the committee cut that down

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. I yield.

Mr. BLANTON. If the amendment of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Wolcott] passes, then apartment houses in all the big cities can get $50,000 at a whack.

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. Any industrial and commercial business.

Mr. BLANTON. And it will take up most of this money needed by the home owners of the country.

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. That is my judgment.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. I yield.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I wish to correct an apparent misapprehension in the minds of Members. We should not confuse the Home Owners' Loan Corporation with the Federal Housing Administration. Is it not true that there is no relationship whatsoever between the Home Owners' Loan Corporation funds and the Federal Housing Administration funds, and that none of this money comes out of any money which has been allotted to home owners under the Home Owners' Loan Corporation Act?

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. That is a correct statement, the kind the gentleman usually makes. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Chairman, I am glad the gentleman from Michigan just made that explanation. This proposed amendment has absolutely nothing to do with the Home Owners' Loan Act.

The gentleman from North Carolina had no hesitancy in voting to hand out $500,000,000 in addition, and directly, to the banks and other lending institutions. This amendment to the Federal Housing Act does not involve the use of any Government money. The money is loaned by the banking institutions, 12,700 of which have qualified by the administration.

The Federal Housing Administration proposed that in addition to loans up to $2,000 to alter and repair homes, and not in any way interfering with that provision, that the money they had should be used also to the extent of insuring up to 20 percent loans made to repair apartment houses, hospitals, and so forth—and every Member here must have a hospital in his district-and also manufacturing and industrial establishments. Of the $200,000,000 allotted to the Federal Housing Administration, it has used only some $43,000,000 on loans up to $2,000 to improve individual That provision as to individual homes is not touched by this proposal; that provision is separate and distinct from this proposal to insure loans on apartment houses, hospitals, and so forth. Fifty thousand dollars would not even touch repairs to any large apartment hotel in New York City. Every little town must have a manufacturing or industrial establishment; every little town must have a tenement of some kind; every little town must have a hospital to which this amendment would apply. Heretofore these small buildings that were not individual homes, have not been able to qualify under any of the acts. This amendment would allow them to qualify.

It is estimated that there are available applications to the extent of $1,500,000 for these loans, if the banks take them all. Of this $1,500,000,000, at least $1,100,000,000 will go directly to labor, because in alterations and repairs at least 75 percent of the cost is represented by wages, instead of only about 50 percent, as is the case on P. W. A. projects.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I yield.

Mr. CONNERY. And this is the only way in which the small business man can borrow money to make repairs to his plant.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Yes; and it is estimated that when this work is done, four times that amount of work is created, because the man goes further than the loan made by his

Mr. KRAMER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I yield.

Mr. KRAMER. In my district there are five outlying small towns such as the gentleman just referred to. Businesses in these small towns are not considered by the big banker as good risks, although the small-town business is just as much business as are the establishments in the big towns. Does this amendment apply to business men in the small towns?

Mr. O'CONNOR. Yes; it would.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the real issue here is whether or not the building-and-loan associations, which do not make loans for alterations and repairs or on apartment houses or small businesses, are going to control this House. They have already taken out hundreds and hundreds of millions of dollars and put it in their own coffers in exchange, not for their good mortgages but for the mortgages which were in default and which they have unloaded on the Government.

Mr. MAVERICK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I yield.
Mr. MAVERICK. The adoption of this amendment would benefit agricultural districts as well, because the spending of this money would lead to increased purchases of foodstuffs in the cities.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Certainly.

I may say further, Mr. Chairman, that it is only a small building or apartment house to which much altering or repairing could be done for $50,000. There are, however, many little tenement houses, cold-water tenements in which some people live. The Government has not done anything for such homes, yet they are the homes of our families. Some of our people have lived in these tenements for 50 years. A loan, 20 percent of which is guaranteed by the Government, would turn a cold-water railroad flat into a livable place; the owner could put in steam heat, he could put in toilets, he could put in bathtubs for the benefit of those who make such places their homes.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I yield.

Mr. SABATH. As I understand, this money is to be loaned by the banks and that only 20 percent of it is to be guaranteed by the Government.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Exactly.

Mr. SABATH. The money would be used for the repair of these buildings. This will create employment as well as improve homes.

Mr. O'CONNOR. That is the main purpose of the provision. The money is available. The amount necessary for insuring repairs to individual homes will not be interfered

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may proceed for 3 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma?

There was no objection.

Mr. NICHOLS. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. O'CONNOR. I yield to the distinguished gentleman from Oklahoma, who so ably presided over the deliberations of the House on yesterday.

Mr. NICHOLS. After a loan is made of private money by the banks to a person making repairs, if 20 percent only of the money is paid back to the bank the Government's responsibility ceases?

Mr. O'CONNOR. No; that is not exactly correct. Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. No. That is not correct.

Mr. NICHOLS. Twenty percent is all that is guaranteed. Mr. O'CONNOR. Twenty percent of the loss, if and when there is a loss.

Mr. NICHOLS. Then if they paid back 80 percent, the Government's responsibility ceases?

Mr. O'CONNOR. Yes, and in addition to that the Government does not guarantee each individual loan. The Government approves a lending institution and gives them a line of credit as it were, and guarantees all of their loans up to 20 percent, so the good loans may offset any bad ones, and the Government's risk is that much less in the last analysis.

Mr. HEALEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I yield to the gentleman from Mas-

Mr. HEALEY. The Government provides no part of the

Mr. O'CONNOR. No. The lending institutions use their

Mr. HEALEY. In other words, the bank puts up all of the money?

Yes.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Yes. Mr. HEALEY. The Government merely guarantees in case of a loss 20 percent of the loss?

Mr. O'CONNOR. Yes.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Is not the figure of $25,000 which has been set by the committee an arbitrary figure the result of compromise and entirely inadequate?

Mr. O'CONNOR. The difference between the $25,000 and $50,000, I am informed, would be $600,000,000 in loans. That is, the provision for $50,000 will provide $600,000,000 more in loans, 75 percent of which would go for wages. That is the real issue. In order to get out of the depression we have to put people to work, not merely take over the worthless mortgages of the lending institutions. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Wolcott], and on that tellers have been demanded by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. HANCOCK].

Tellers were ordered, and the Chair appointed as tellers the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. HANCOCK] and the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Wolcott].

The question was taken; and the tellers report there were-ayes 200, noes 88.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. RABAUT. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Rabaur: Page 13, line 24, after the word "hospitals", insert "orphanages, colleges, schools."

Mr. RABAUT. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 5 minutes on the amendment just offered.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. RABAUT. Mr. Chairman, it is with a sense of pride that opportunity is afforded me to stand in the Well of this House and ask that the provisions of the National Housing Act be extended to the orphanages, colleges, and schools of this Nation. It is distinctly the prerogative of Congress by its decisions to be the assistant to the Chief Executive of the Nation, and the present Executive at the other end of this avenue is the descendant in office of him who is revered as the Father of his Country.

The provisions of this amendment awaken the fatherly instincts of this body, for this amendment refers to those institutions having to do with the youth, the children, and the orphans of this land. I feel no great urge is necessary: I know the heart of this body; I know your ambition to be of service; I know your recognition of the justice of this amendment: and I have no fear about its passage. Moreover, this amendment will give employment to the building trades, so badly crippled, and so from its passage a twofold good will result.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, may I say there will be no opposition from the committee to the amendment just offered.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ELLENBOGEN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Ellenbogen: Page 14, line 10, strike out the words "such interest" and insert in lieu thereof the following: "a rate of interest which, inclusive of all charges, does not exceed 6 percent per annum."

Mr. ELLENBOGEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 5 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, debate on this amendment has been previously closed. and this morning debate has been reopened once. We have spent lots of time arguing over differences that did not merit so much consideration. I object to reopening debate on this section at the present time.

Mr. ELLENBOGEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 2 minutes.

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. Mr. Chairman, I object.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Ellen-BOGEN].

Mr. KVALE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment may be again reported.

The Clerk read the Ellenbogen amendment.

The amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. HANcock] to strike out section 25.

The Clerk again read the Hancock amendment.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the amendment of the gentleman from North Carolina has already been decided by the vote on the other amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules the point of order. Mr. FITZPATRICK. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. If the amendment offered by the gentleman from North Carolina is carried, it will do away with the amendment which we just agreed to.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. That is not a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that is not a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has not stated a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CONNERY. If a vote is taken now on this amendment and the amendment is agreed to, will it not do what the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZPATRICK] has just stated?

The CHAIRMAN. It is not within the province of the Chair to construe the purport of amendments.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Chairman, I am not sure, but did I hear the Chair state that this is a committee amendment? The CHAIRMAN. The Chair did not so state.

Mr. BOYLAN. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BOYLAN. Will the Chair kindly explain to the Committee the effect of a vote on this amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. It is not the purpose of the Chair or the practice of the Chair to explain to the Membership the purpose or the meaning of amendments.

Mr. BOYLAN. Is it not the duty of the Chair to give the House some information about amendments?

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Chairman, may we have the amendment again read?

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Chairman, I object.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected. The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 27. Section 302 of the National Housing Act is amended to read as follows:

"Sec. 302. Each national mortgage association is authorized to issue and have outstanding at any time notes, bonds, debentures, or other such obligations in an aggregate amount not to exceed (1) 15 times the aggregate par value of its outstanding capital stock, and in no event to exceed (2) the current face value of mortgages held by it and insured under the provisions of title II of this act, plus the amount of its cash on hand and on deposit and the amount of its investments in bonds or obligations of, or guaranteed as to principal and interest by, the United States. No national mortgage association shall borrow money except through the issuance of such notes, bonds, debentures, or other obligations, except with the approval of the Administrator and under such rules and regulations as he shall prescribe."

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Sisson: On page 15, line 15, add as a new section:

"Sec. 28. The first sentence of section 2 of the National Housing Act is amended by striking out the word "January" and inserting in lieu thereof the word "April."

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, this is simply a perfecting amendment. I can state the purpose of the amendment in 2 minutes and there ought not to be any controversy about it.

Under the provisions of section 2 of title I, the title which has just been under consideration on the recent amendment, title I expires on the 1st of January 1936. This is the end of the present calendar year. This is the emergency part of this act. This is at a time when the Congress is not in ses-

This amendment simply proposes that this shall be continued for a period of 3 months, but it is still subject to the limitation that the President may terminate it at any earlier time. In other words, we may find at that time that we have put hundreds of thousands of men to work and not have used all of this authorization, and it may be deemed inadvisable to continue it. This will have to be left to the Congress to determine, and I cannot see any reason why the committee should not have accepted the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. Sisson].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SAUTHOFF. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Sauthoff: Page 15, after the last paragraph, add the following:

"Whenever any loan or part thereof made pursuant to the provisions of the Federal Home Loan Bank Act, the Home Owners' Loan Act, and the National Housing Act shall not have been paid or otherwise discharged, there shall never be entered any judgment against any debtor for any sum beyond that realized from the property mortgaged or hypothecated for said loan and deficiency judgments against debtors for any sum beyond the amount from the sale of the property mortgaged are specifically prohibited."

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman wish to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. SAUTHOFF. Yes, Mr. Chairman.

The amendment which I introduced Saturday, prohibiting deficiency judgments, was ruled out on the ground it was not applicable to the section to which it was offered. The amendment I am offering now differs from the amendment I offered the other day in this respect: It applies not only to the Home Owners' Loan Act but to the other governmental agencies contained in this act we are now having under discussion. In addition to this, it does not apply only to the final judgment, but also to any part of it which may be in default. In other words, what I am trying to do is to protect home owners after they have lost their homes and have not a thing left from having a deficiency judgment entered against them, which will be good for 20 years in the future, and, secondly, that in the event that some future Congress sees fit to close out these agencies and to dispose of the assets to a private lending concern, it cannot hound a man for the rest of his life to collect what little is left from what he is earning on his job.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin proposes to amend a section of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation Act. The pending section of the bill to which the amendment is offered relates exclusively to section 302 of the National Housing Act and for that reason the Chair is of the opinion that the amendment is not germane. It is not offered at the proper time or place. Therefore the Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 15, after line 15, add a new section amending section 4 (d) of the Public Act 43, Seventy-third Congress, known as "H. R.

"In case foreclosures are prosecuted to conclusion the plaintiff shall not obtain any deficiency judgment for any sum still unpaid until all recourse has been exhausted against the collateral or mortgage securing the loan under the provisions of this act."

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that that is not germane.

Mr. McFARLANE. This amendment adds a new section to the bill, amending section 4 (d) of Public Act 43, Seventy-third Congress, known as "H. R. 5240." It adds to section 4 (d) the provision just read by the Clerk, that prohibits a deficiency judgment being entered against the mortgagor after he has lost his home, as has been so well described by the gentleman from Wisconsin.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Alabama wish to discuss the point or order?

Mr. STEAGALL. I do not care to further discuss it. Mr. McFARLANE. It adds a new section to this act and makes the amendment applicable to the proper section of the original Home Loan Act and for that reason, Mr. Chairman, I believe my amendment is germane.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas proposes to add a new section at the end of the bill relative to foreclosures under the original act of 1933. The original act refers to the subject matter contained in the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas, and therefore the Chair believes the amendment germane and overrules the point of order.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McFARLANE. I yield.

Mr. WOLCOTT. The amendment of the gentleman speaks of a default judgment. There is a difference between a default judgment and a deficiency judgment.

Mr. McFARLANE. The amendment says a "deficiency judgment." The Clerk read "default judgment", but that was because the amendment was hurriedly prepared and the Clerk could not read the writing.

Mr. Chairman, this matter is very clear and needs no explanation. It is a question whether or not the individual home owner shall be confronted with a deficiency judgment after he has lost his home that will follow him for the next 20 years. I do not believe that the House wants to do that, and I know that it is not now nor has it ever been the intention of this administration through legislation of this kind to take away their homes from the unemployed, the distressed, and aged citizens of this country, who have been and are to be the beneficiaries of this legislation. This administration has been doing everything possible to reemploy our people, to restore their buying power, and while doing this to stop foreclosures and to keep our citizens, urban and rural, from losing their homes and farms. This amendment, if adopted and made a part of this law at this time, will prevent those lending under the provisions of this act from securing deficiency judgment against the home owner, should the home owner through unfortunate circumstances be unable to take care of his payments as required under this act. Should it become necessary for the agencies under this act to foreclose and take the mortgagor's homestead, certainly this Congress does not want to and it would be unfair and unjust to persecute the mortgagor further and hound him for the next 20 years by holding over his head a deficiency judgment. I appeal to the Membership of this House to adopt this amendment. [Applause.]

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, I think it would be well to call attention to the fact that we are not dealing alone with regulation of loans on homes by private finance institutions. The Home Owners' Loan Corporation Act embodies a purpose on the part of the Government to come to the rescue of home owners who are in danger of having mortgages on their homes foreclosed.

We are advised by the people who have administered this law that only one foreclosure in the United States has been had out of nearly 1,000,000 loans. There is no purpose or thought of dealing harshly with borrowers on the part of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation. The whole intention is to save homes, to relieve distressed home owners, not to embarrass or injure them. The law represents an altruistic purpose, not an intention to oppress borrowers. This amendment would invite fraud upon the Government. It could easily arise in rare cases that an individual while having at one time been in danger of losing his home might, before maturity of the mortgage through fire or other cause, have a loss in value of the property conveyed, still such a borrower might be amply able to reimburse the Government from other resources. In such a case the amendment proposed would result in a fraud upon the Government. Not only would it result in fraud upon the Government but it would prevent the extension of aid to worthy applicants for aid from the Government. It would probably necessitate more conservative methods of appraisal and stricter business rules in extending loans. I hope the House will not adopt this amendment.

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I have supported the chairman of this committee in practically everything relating to this legislation, but we are now discussing a new feature in the way of an amendment, that of "deficiency judgments." It is a matter of great interest. Many States are now struggling with that proposition and many others have legislated against it. Its effects have been called to my personal attention and I know whereof I speak, that in certain cases in my county, that property having a mortgage of about $7,500, assessed for about $10,000 or more, with a valuation of about $12,000 would be bid in for not more than $2,000. Mortgagees are usually helpless in securing other bona fide bids to protect the owner of the property. Immediately a bill is sent from the mortgagee to the mortgagor attempting to recover the entire difference between the $2,000 and the face of the mortgage plus all expenses. This is what a deficiency judgment means. Does not this illustration, which I vouch for as correct, convince you of the possible iniquities of it? No doubt at times it might work out to the disadvantage of the lender, but usually the lender on property is rather careful not to loan more money than the property might be worth, in case of a forced sale, and if this practice is to continue, to bid in at an auction sale as low a price as possible, sue for the entire balance plus all possible expenses, then any Government, State or National, must act to prevent it. [Applause.]

Mr. ELLENBOGEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman

Mr. GIFFORD. Yes.

Mr. ELLENBOGEN. Is it not a fact that often the price at which the property is obtained at a sheriff's sale includes only taxes and costs and nothing on account of principal?

Mr. GIFFORD. And what redress is there for the party who is being sued? He can go to court and try to show the court that the transaction should "shock the conscience of the court", which is, I think, the legal expression. However, in many cases you cannot shock the conscience of the court in construing the simple procedure of the law. One Member has told me about his own State in the attempt to bring about proper deficiency-judgment legislation by determination of the present value of the property at the time of the sale, and granting a deficiency judgment only for the difference between the real value at time of sale and the amount due on the mortgage. There is a very serious condition in large sections of our country in this matter of foreclosures and the long, harassing litigation over the judgments. We may not interfere with property rights in the States, but we can undoubtedly control our own corporation in this matter, and perhaps set a proper example to the States. Perhaps I do not often seem to support what might be considered radical propositions, but I am forced by experience to support this amendment. [Applause.1

Mr. CAVICCHIA. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. We are dealing with a very serious question. I have no doubt in my mind, as poor a lawyer as I am, that if you accept this amendment as it is written, the courts will declare it unconstitutional. State legislatures which have tried it have had the laws declared unconstitutional by their supreme courts. You are facing a problem here. You are trying to protect the property owner who has lost his home and everything that he had, and he will be faced with a deficiency judgment which will hang over his head for the next 20 years. Then we are apt to turn this body into a woman's sewing circle or a missionary society, throwing the cloak of protection by congressional action on the people who can very well afford to pay deficiency judgments, if we resort to it, and who will not pay if we pass this amendment.

Mr. GIFFORD. I suggest that we could not interfere with the property rights of the various States, but I thought we might do this with our own mortgages. Does the gentleman suggest that we cannot do that?

Mr. CAVICCHIA. I think if the amendment be reworded so that if anyone is sued on a deficiency judgment, the person who is sued, the man who has lost his home, can, through real-estate experts, show what the real value of the property was when it was foreclosed, he might be protected; otherwise this is what will happen: A property worth $100,000 would be bid in by the mortgagee for $100. It is a legitimate bid in my State, if no one goes over that. It may be the mortgage being foreclosed is for $50,000, and the property may have a market value of $80,000 or $90,000.

The mortgagee can buy it in for $100 and sue for $49,900. We have had this happen in hundreds of cases. The State Legislature of New Jersey only permits a deficiency judgment now where the mortgagee actually proves that the value of the property he bought at sheriff's sale was less than the amount due him on the mortgage.

Mr. DONDERO. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. CAVICCHIA. I yield.

Mr. DONDERO. If we adopt this amendment, are we not ! liable to force out of consideration the moral risk of the borrower?

Mr. CAVICCHIA. The moral risk is a great part of this Home Owners' Loan Corporation Act, and if we adopt this amendment many a worthy citizen will be refused a loan on his home when he comes to the regional office or the district office for a mortgage loan. I think we are handling a very dangerous proposition.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. McFarlane].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. McFarlane) there were—ayes 65, noes 99.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Chairman, I offer another amend-

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. McFarlane: Page 15, after line 15, add a new section at the end of the bill, amending title I, section 2, Public, 479, of the Seventy-third Congress, by adding to the end of said section 2 the following:

"In case of foreclosure being prosecuted to conclusion, the plaintiff shall not obtain any deficiency judgment for any sum still unpaid, after all recourse has been exhausted against the collateral or mortgage securing the loan under the provisions of this

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, a point of order. I make the point of order that the amendment is not germane.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Texas [Mr. McFarlanel desire to be heard?

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Chairman, this is the same proposition. It is to amend section 2. This amendment, as shown on its face, is an amendment adding this provision to the end of section 2 of title I of Public, No. 479, of the Seventy-third Congress, the same being H. R. 9620.

The CHAIRMAN. That is, the gentleman offers an amendment to the National Housing Act?

Mr. McFARLANE. That is correct.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. CELLER). The point of order will be overruled.

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Chairman, I want to read this amendment. Let us have a free and frank discussion of it.

In case of foreclosure being prosecuted to conclusion, the plaintiff shall not obtain any deficiency judgment for any sum still unpaid after all recourse has been exhausted against the collateral or mortgage securing the loan, under the provisions of

Now, Mr. Chairman, this amendment is attached to the proper section of the National Housing Act, and it is to that section what the previous amendment was to the Home Loan Act. In all fairness and in all candor, why should we persecute a man after we have taken his home from him? These loans are not made without adequate collateral and without adequate security when they are made. After the Government has secured a man's homestead, has secured his property, why should we hang a defi-ciency judgment over his head that will haunt him for 20 years, and take away from him even his daily earnings? I do not think the Government wants to do that under these depressed conditions under which we live.

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. Will the gentleman vield?

Mr. McFARLANE. I yield. Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. Does the amendment that the gentleman proposes refer to loans made under title I of the Federal Housing Act?

Mr. McFARLANE. That is correct.

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. The gentleman appreciates the fact that the House a few minutes ago voted to increase the amount under that section to $50,000?

Mr. McFARLANE. Yes.

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. Does he believe the institutions which are now eligible to borrow that amount ought not be held to strict accountability when it comes to paying it back?

Mr. McFARLANE. I think that after they have all the information before them and they make these loans, if sort to deficiency judgments.

they are not made on a sound business basis, the sooner we find it out the better off we will be.

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. Will the gentleman yield for another question?

Mr. McFARLANE. I yield.

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. The gentleman appreciates the fact that most of the loans would be made to corporations?

Mr. McFARLANE. I do not know that that would be just exactly true. In fact, I think rather to the contrary. think the larger number of the apartment houses, as well as the other loans that will come under this act, could properly come within the provisions of this amendment. I see no reason why they should not.

Mr. BROWN of Michigan. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McFARLANE. I yield.

Mr. BROWN of Michigan. The gentleman understands that these loans are so-called "character loans" and it is not anticipated that collateral will be required under this title, so we must depend upon the character of the person who borrows the money. Certainly under those circumstances we should not be without the right to sue the man who borrowed the money.

Mr. McFARLANE. If the Government is going into the lending business on the recommendation of somebody's character, we had better stop that kind of proposition right now.

Mr. BROWN of Michigan. That is exactly what we have done in this bill. The losses have been very small.

Mr. McFARLANE. Yes; it may be true that character will be the principal basis for loans under recent amendments to this bill. However, if the Government is going to make any loans on character, I will say to the gentleman, frankly, we had better get out of the loaning business before we cause the Government to suffer tremendous losses.

Mr. BROWN of Michigan. We have already done it.

Mr. CONNERY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McFARLANE. I yield.

Mr. CONNERY. Speaking of character loans made in the banking business, let me tell the gentleman that of their character loans they collect 99 percent; in other words, they get their money, their money is saved; but when they take collateral from the big boys, from big business, they are liable to lose 99 percent.

Mr. McFARLANE. Regardless of all the arguments that have been made here, Mr. Chairman, it is nothing but right and proper that the collateral or the mortgage that is taken by the Government should be sufficient, and they ought not to prosecute and persecute that party, whoever he may be, in the future. I think in all fairness we ought to permit these parties under these depressed conditions where they are struggling to get by to save the very roof over their heads. If there is any justification for this legislation, it is that it is designed to help people about to lose their homes, or whose homes are dilapidated and need repair. Under these conditions, I think, frankly and candidly we ought, after they have secured the collateral or the mortgage and have foreclosed it, they should be willing to stop there.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may proceed for 3 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McFARLANE. I yield.

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. I want to say to my friend, the gentleman from Texas, that I am personally pretty weak when it comes to a deficiency judgment against the home owner, but I want in fairness to the Federal Housing Administration to let the Membership of the House know that in response to certain questions which I propounded to Mr. Moffett and to Mr. Ferguson, they agreed it would not be the policy of the Federal Housing Administration to re-

Mr. McFARLANE. Then, in all fairness, why should not | we adopt amendments that point out proper limitations of law so they will know what the mileposts are, and so safeguard our citizens as well as the Government?

Mr. REILLY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McFARLANE. I yield.

Mr. REILLY. Under character loans, the Government has nothing to do with the foreclosing or taking back of the security; so the gentleman's amendment will be absolutely useless regarding the loans made for repairs and improvements.

Mr. KERR. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McFARLANE. I yield.

Mr. KERR. It may be interesting for the gentleman to know that many of the progressive States of this Nation today have passed statutes prohibiting the taking of deficiency judgments of the kind the gentleman has described.

Mr. McFARLANE. Answering the gentleman, I will say that my State has passed such a law; most of the States have. I cannot see any reason why we in Congress should not be a little more progressive and enact progressive legislation now and then.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McFARLANE. I yield. Mr. CONNERY. The gentleman speaks about writing mileposts into the law. We have had trouble enough lots of times in getting them to put into effect what we have written into law, and it will not do a bit of harm to write these requirements into this law.

Mr. McFARLANE. It will save a lot of homes that otherwise would be sold over people's heads. If we permit these foreclosures and do not protect people we are going to have a lot of them on the street without shelter through foreclosures in after years. This could and should be prevented by these amendments.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, the taking of a deficiency judgment against the mortgagor, the owner of a home, has no more to do with the proposition advanced by the gentleman from Texas than have the flowers that bloom in the spring; they are not analogous at all. The Government, as has been said by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. REILLY], does not take the judgments at all. There seems to be a total misunderstanding of the purpose and the method by which this act is carried out on the part of the gentleman from Texas. The lending is not done by the Government; there is no money furnished by the Government. This is an effort to get private capital back into industry, the one objective we have been trying to accomplish; and we are trying to do it by making it sufficiently attractive under the emergency part of this plan, which is only a small part of it, by insuring a small portion of the loans made by private lending institutions.

The smaller loans are, to some extent, as has been said, character loans. Loans such as $50,000 will be made perhaps to some corporation, to some small concern that is going to rehabilitate a factory and put men to work. Certainly the banks cannot be encouraged to make loans if the banks are going to be stopped from enforcing their judgments against whatever collateral they may have. So I ask the House to vote down the amendment. I am glad in this instance to concur with my brother, the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. Hancock], who has given a very sound reason for opposing the amendment.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, it might be well to say that the insurance up to 20 percent of a loan does not cover individual loans.

It is insurance extended to lending institutions who make loans to the owners of commercial buildings, office buildings, apartment houses, or other buildings provided for in the bill, and the total amount of loans made by such institutions is insured by the Corporation to the extent of 20 percent, but there is no insurance of a particular loan. The Housing Corporation takes no security whatever, and there is no requirement that lending institutions making a loan either to home owners or to commercial-building owners shall take security. It is contemplated that the lending institution will be the sole judge of the security. It is not expected that even the lending institution will take security. We have been told all along that these loans are to be made as character loans, whether to the home owner or to owners of commercial buildings.

It will be remembered that originally the insurance was confined to loans made for the improvement of homes and limited to the amount of $2,000. Under this bill we still limit loans made for the improvement of homes to $2,000, but by the vote of this Committee we have raised the amount of loans insurable to $50,000 if made to owners of office buildings and commercial and industrial structures. But they, too, are to be treated as character loans, and no security is required of the lending institution to whom the insurance is extended, nor is the lending institution required to take security upon such loans.

Mr. SISSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEAGALL. I yield to the gentleman from New

Mr. SISSON. I entirely agree with the chairman of the committee; however, may I ask the chairman of the committee to make it plain that security may or may not be required in the case of loans above $50,000.

Mr. STEAGALL. Let us be sure about that. The gentleman is correct as far as he goes, but the statement in itself may not convey the idea which he has in mind.

No security is required by the Housing Corporation of the institution whose loans are insured; nor is the institution required to take security. The Housing Administration secures 20 percent of the total loans of an eligible institution and the institution is supposed to lend upon the character of the individual home owner or the owner of the commercial or office building. There is no requirement of security. The lending institutions have a free hand. They might make a bad loan entailing a total loss, but such a loss would be absorbed by other good loans. In other words, it would be possible for a loan that is a total loss to be covered by the insurance, because you insure the total amount of loans, and in some no losses would be incurred.

Mr. CONNERY. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. STEAGALL. I yield to the gentleman from Massa-

Mr. CONNERY. This is the same question I wanted to propound to the gentleman the other day when he would not yield. The committee stated to me the other day that I had the wrong information when I said a man had to have an income of $10,000 in order to make a $2,000 loan. I may say to the chairman that I got this information from gentleman who reiterates the statement, a Member of this House, the gentleman from New Mexico [Mr. DEMPSEY], who was National Federal Housing Administrator for the State of New Mexico. He says they have to have an income of $10,000 to get a $2,000 loan.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. That is ridiculous.

Mr. STEAGALL. The gentleman refers to a regulation. but it is one of which I have no knowledge.

Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto do now close.

The motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. McFarlane].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. TERRY. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. TERRY: Page 15, line 15, insert a new Amendment offered by Mr. Terry: Page 15, line 15, insert a new section, as follows:

"Sec. 28. Subsection (c) of section 5 of Home Owners' Loan Act of 1933 is amended by striking out the period at the end of said subsection (c), and inserting in lieu thereof a colon, and adding thereafter the following: 'And provided further, That such association which is converted from a State-chartered institution may continue to lend in the territory in which it loaned while operating under State charter.'"

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the amendment is not germane.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Arkansas desire to be heard?

Mr. TERRY. Mr. Chairman, this is a separate section entirely. The section which I offer is an entirely new section, and is in order, it seems to me.

The CHAIRMAN. I may say to the gentleman from Arkansas that he might have offered this amendment when we were considering another portion of the bill, but this portion of the bill refers to the National Housing Act. The Chair, therefore, sustains the point of order of the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. ELLENBOGEN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. Ellenbogen: Page 15, after line 15, insert a new section, as follows:

"Sec. 29. Any loan insured under the National Housing Act shall bear interest at a rate not to exceed 6 percent per annum, inclusive

Mr. ELLENBOGEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 3 minutes.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, all debate has been closed.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will say to the gentleman from Alabama that his request covered section 27 and all amendments thereto.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, a motion was made and carried, as I understood, closing debate on this section and all amendments thereto.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ELLENBOGEN | has offered an amendment adding a new section, and is entitled to recognition for 5 minutes.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, may we have the amendment read?

The Clerk again read the Ellenbogen amendment ..

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that this amendment, or one of similar purport, has already been passed upon by the Committee and rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's point of order comes too late. The gentleman from Pennsylvania has been recognized.

Mr. ELLENBOGEN. Mr. Chairman, I should like to explan to the members of the committee that, under the law as it is now constituted, the Government takes the chances on a loan. It insures all loans up to 20 percent, which, in effect, is nearly 100-percent insurance, because experience has shown that defaults and losses only total a small percentage of the loans made.

Mr. Chairman, at the present time the Housing Administrator has permitted interest charges up to 9.72 percent per annum, which means an interest rate of nearly 10 percent; and if there is a default in even one installment, 5 percent more is added. So that the interest charges on the small home owner who defaults on even one installment payment of a small loan is nearly 15 percent. You will find this information in the testimony of Mr. Moffet, page 88 of the hearings.

Mr. REILLY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. ELLENBOGEN. I gladly yield to my distinguished colleague from Wisconsin.

Mr. REILLY. Is not that rate of 9.72 percent the cheapest money anyone can get for this type of loan in the United

Mr. ELLENBOGEN. I do not believe it is. I know of a bank that told a borrower that if he came into the bank without the Housing Administrator's being in on it, he could get the money at 6 percent.

Mr. REILLY. It is true he can go to the bank and get it, but for a corporation this is the cheapest rate going in this country today.

Mr. ELLENBOGEN. But the gentleman forgets that the Government carries the risk without any charge and the bank gets the profit. Six-percent profit is enough, when these banks pay only 2½ percent on savings accounts. I know of loans insured under the National Housing Act, where the charge is nearly 15 percent, or 14.72 percent to be exact.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. ELLENBOGEN. I yield.

Mr. DONDERO. I am in sympathy with what the gentleman is trying to do, but would not the gentleman's point be covered by the usury laws of the various States?

Mr. ELLENBOGEN. No; it would not, because they are charging these rates in my State and we have a usury law providing for a rate of 6 percent.

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this bill do now close.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BOILEAU. In the event the motion of the gentleman from Alabama prevails, would it then be in order to submit a motion to strike out the enacting clause?

The CHAIRMAN. It would be in order to offer such a motion.

Mr. BOILEAU. And debate would be permitted on the motion?

The CHAIRMAN. The rule provides for 5 minutes' debate for and 5 minutes' debate against such motion.

The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Alabama to close debate on the bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Ellenbogen]. The amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule the Committee rises.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. Celler, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 6021) to provide additional home-mortgage relief, to amend the Federal Home Loan Bank Act, the Home Owners' Loan Act of 1933, and the National Housing Act, and for other purposes, pursuant to House Resolution 150, had reported the same back to the House with sundry amendments adopted by the Committee.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule the previous question is

Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment? If not, the Chair will put them en gros.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed, read a third time, and was read the third time.

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion to recommit the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is the gentleman opposed to the bill? Mr. ANDREWS of New York. I am, in its present form.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the motion to recommit.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. Andrews of New York moves to recommit the bill (H. R. 6021) to the Committee on Banking and Currency with instruc-tions to that committee to report the same forthwith with the following amendment:

On page 7, line 17, after the word "following", insert as a new paragraph the following:

"In the appointment of agents and the selection of employees for said Corporation and in the promotion of agents or employees, no partisan political test or qualification shall be permitted or given consideration, but all agents and employees shall be appointed, employed, or promoted solely upon the basis of merit appointed, employed, or promoted solely upon the basis of merit and efficiency. Any member of the Board who is found guilty of a violation of this provision by the President of the United States shall be removed from office by the President of the United States, and any agent or employee of the Corporation who is found guilty of a violation of this section by the Board shall be removed from office by said Board."

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.
Mr. CONNERY. If a gentleman offers a motion to recommit and the motion is defeated, can the gentleman vote then for the bill?

The SPEAKER. That is a question for the gentleman himself to decide.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the motion to recommit.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from New York to recommit the bill.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. Andrews of New York) there were-ayes 52, noes 165. Mr. ANDREWS of New York. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and navs.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 109, nays 292, answered "present" 1, not voting 29, as follows:

House Resolution 158

House Resolution 158

Resolved, That immediately upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for consideration of H. R. 6424, "A bill to continue the Cotton Control Act, to exempt a limited quantity of cotton from the tax thereunder, to provide for the better administration of such act, and for other purposes." That after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and shall continue not to exceed 2 hours, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Agriculture, the bill shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the reading of the bill for amendment the Comthe conclusion of the reading of the bill for amendment the Committee shall rise and report the same to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion, except one motion to recommit, with or without instructions.

The SPEAKER. The resolution is referred to the calendar and ordered printed.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

Mr. FULMER. Mr. Speaker, my colleague [Mr. Gasque] is unable to be present on account of illness. He asked me to state that if he were present he would vote "no" on the H. O. L. C. bill just passed.

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Speaker, I was called out of the Chamber temporarily during the calling of the roll on the vote on the H. O. L. C. bill. I would like to be recorded as voting " yea."

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is too late to be recorded. Mr. KELLER. I was in the Hall when my name was called. but did not hear it. I was called out for a moment, expecting to be back in time to record my vote. If I had been here, I would have voted "yea."

The SPEAKER. The Chair is of opinion that the gentleman's request to vote comes too late. The gentleman has made his record.

ADDITIONAL COPIES OF MESSAGE OF PRESIDENT ON HOLDING COMPANIES

Mr. LAMBETH. Mr. Speaker, I present the following privileged resolution from the Committee on Printing, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 159

Resolved, That 50,000 additional copies of the message of the President of the United States transmitting the report of the National Power Policy Committee with respect to public-utility holding companies be printed for the use of the House document room.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, does the Chair hold that that is a privileged resolution?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it is privileged.

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question or two on that matter?

Mr. LAMBETH. Yes.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that the one thought most prominent in the first part of the President's message referred to was that the President himself is opposed to propaganda. I certainly got that impression when it was read from the desk. If there ever was a message delivered to the House of Representatives that is pure propaganda for a piece of legislation now before a committee of this House, it was the message of the President this afternoon referred to. I think that is the intent and purport of that message. If the President himself is opposed to that sort of thing. I do not think the message ought to be distributed broadcast among the people of the country for the purpose of getting the people to send requests in to the committee considering a special piece of legislation.

Mr. LAMBETH. Has the gentleman a question he desires to ask me?

Mr. SNELL. Why should the gentleman distribute propaganda when the President himself says that he is opposed

Mr. LAMBETH. I do not think that question requires an answer. I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the reso-Intion

The resolution was agreed to.

FIRST DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL, FISCAL YEAR 1935

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 6644) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1935, and prior fiscal years, to provide supplemental appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1935, and for other purposes. Pending that, I would inquire of the gentleman from New York [Mr. Taber] about agreeing upon a time for general debate.

Mr. TABER. We have requests that will aggregate a little better than 2 hours on this side. I think we ought to have 4 hours of general debate. There is a good deal of demand for time on this side.

Mr. BUCHANAN. That is a good deal of time on a deficiency bill when it is necessary to pass it right away.

Mr. TABER. We will be through with it tomorrow night. Not much time will be consumed under the 5-minute rule.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Do I understand, Mr. Speaker, that this bill has the right-of-way tomorrow?

The SPEAKER. It has.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Then, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that general debate upon the bill be limited to 4 hours, to be equally divided between the gentleman from New York and myself.

The SPEAKER. Pending the motion to go into the Committee of the Whole, the gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent that general debate upon the bill be limited to 4 hours, one-half to be controlled by himself and one-half by the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER]. Is there

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. How long will it take to consider this bill under the 5-minute

Mr. BUCHANAN. We will pass it tomorrow night.

Mr. SABATH. Notwithstanding the 4 hours of general debate?

Mr. BUCHANAN. Yes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Texas to go into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly, the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 6644, with Mr. Cole of Maryland in

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, it is so ordered. There was no objection.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. FULMER].

Mr. FULMER. Mr. Chairman, I have asked for this time to call to the attention of the Members an article carried in the Washington Herald this morning entitled "Cotton Falls $9.50 Per Bale, Bringing About a Loss of $136,000,000 in the Value of Cotton."

Later in the statement, "cotton prices regain to the extent of $80,000,000", showing a difference of $50,000,000 in speculation that went into the hands of the parties who brought about the wild speculation on the exchange in New York yesterday. They refer to the fact that this was brought about because of the reporting of a bill proposing to amend the Bankhead cotton-control bill. I say to you, Mr. Chairman, that there is nothing in that bill that would interfere with the program that is now in effect or that will be put into effect this year. This was simply a rumor like many that are very often put out to the country to bring about lower prices at the expense of the Government, which is now holding several million bales of farmer cotton, and at the expense of the cotton farmers of this country. I say, Mr. Chairman, that in passing various bills here to regulate various well-organized groups and corporations, for instance, the security exchanges and holding companies, we ought to immediately report out and pass a bill that will take care of this wild speculation that is purely in the interest of those who have never produced a bale, or who have never even owned a bale of actual cotton.

In that transaction yesterday there was not a bale of cotton passed to or from any of those who participated in this wild speculation, but simply the buying and selling of paper contracts, as stated, purely in the interest of speculators. It is a crime to permit these speculators to use a rumor containing no truth which brought about the depressing of the price of cotton 2 cents a pound, or $130,000,000 decline in value. Perhaps these same sellers became buyers, taking the long side, bringing values back to $80,000,000, from the low. In other words, making profits going and coming.

Mr. ANDRESEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FULMER. I yield.

Mr. ANDRESEN. Is there anything to the argument that the Department will stop making loans on cotton on July 1 at the prevailing price?

Mr. FULMER. In connection with this article it was said that no further loans would be made under the Bankhead bill to produce cotton. There is nothing in the bill that refers to loans in 1935.

Mr. ANDRESEN. Will the gentleman yield further along that line? As I understand it, the present loans of 12 cents a pound on cotton will mature on July 1. Has the gentleman any assurance that the Department will continue to make those loans at 12 cents a pound?

Mr. FULMER. I will say that I cannot speak for the Department, but certainly the Department or the Government will continue to carry that cotton rather than place same on the market and lose millions of dollars of taxpayers' money that is now invested in that cotton.

Mr. ANDRESEN. They certainly should.

Mr. FULMER. It was simply a rumor. Mr. KVALE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FULMER. I yield.

Mr. KVALE. Bearing out the gentleman's assertion, is it not also demonstrable that the wheat speculators were not idle yesterday and that they availed themselves of this opportunity by capitalizing upon the rumors that were bandied about?

Mr. FULMER. Absolutely.

Mr. KVALE. And does it not demonstrate the need for legislation, which is in a formative stage now, to curb that sort of thing?

Mr. FULMER. Absolutely. I will say further that it is my belief that the enemy of the agricultural program was largely responsible. While the statement said it was hedge selling on the part of the mills of this country, I will say to you, if you will investigate the speculation on the New York Cotton Exchange yesterday, you will find, as stated, it was brought about by speculators and the enemies of the cotton program, which has for its purpose to bring about a fair price for farmers' cotton whereby they will have some purchasing power, which is necessary to help bring about national recovery.

Mr. SABATH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FULMER. I yield. Mr. SABATH. The gentleman is familiar with the Jones bill amending the control of speculation on the board of Mr. FULMER. That bill is now pending, and we hope to get that bill reported at the earliest possible moment.

Mr. SABATH. Is it not the opinion of the gentleman that if that bill had been passed this gambling which took place yesterday and which takes place every day would not have been possible, and does not the gentleman think that such legislation is absolutely necessary in the interest of the country as well as of the farmers?

Mr. FULMER. I will state to the gentleman that he is absolutely correct.

I have been promising for the past few years a bill that would tend to check this type of speculation and, I am sure, would tend to increase or maintain a fair cotton price based on actual supply and demand. In other words, would cut out speculation by those who are willing to sell short to almost any extent, knowing that even if they were called upon to deliver actual cotton they did not have to do so under the Cotton Futures Act as passed by the Congress some years ago.

My bill proposes to put the buyer on the same basis as the seller. Under the Cotton Futures Act, at present if a buyer demands actual cotton, the seller has the right to deliver any one of the tenderable grades, which perhaps in every instance cannot be used by the buyer and, therefore, the seller is able to force a paper settlement.

My bill proposes to write into the contract at the time of purchase the actual grade of cotton to be delivered, on a 50-50 basis on the part of the buyer and seller, according to the grades as outlined in the various groups contained in my bill.

If my bill had been in operation prior to the wild speculation yesterday, cotton would never have declined around 2 cents per pound because the seller would not have taken a chance on selling that which he did not have and that which he had no special reason to believe he could go on the market and buy at a price that would take care of his sales.

In the first place, if the buyer had the privilege to demand the actual cotton, the seller would be more particular about having the actual cotton on hand. In the next place if he had to go on the market to buy this cotton so as to deliver, certainly it would create a demand and tend to increase the price, as previously stated.

I am glad that we have a President in the White House at this time who is very strong for protecting legitimate business, as well as putting out of business money changers, speculators, and unfair and unsound business practices that are now being carried on by many of the well-organized and well-financed groups of the country, through holding companies or otherwise, which have been robbing the innocent public in the past out of millions of dollars.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FIESINGER].

Mr. FIESINGER. Mr. Chairman, I do not know but what I have to say may have some bearing upon what the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. FULMER] has just spoken about.

Mr. Chairman, nearly all the time since England went off gold there has been a considerable opinion in this country and abroad that the principal currencies of the world should be stabilized one to the others. The vocality of that opinion has risen and fallen at times, but with the recent action of sterling that opinion has again become unusually vocative, as witnessed by the fact that the responsible ministers of the gold-bloc countries are proposing another international meeting, and a considerable agitation in the public press in this country is to that end. The Treasury of the United States, however, has not spoken on these proposals, and so far as I have seen, the responsible governmental ministers of Great Britain, on the surface at least, are not immediately favorable, although it is my opinion that if the Treasury of the United States was to warm up, the British would be more than anxious to go along. And I am not so sure but the recent action of the pound is but a play to get the Americans to see the light for stabilization. In other words, what we have been reading in the public press of late may be a setting of the stage by the international bankers for stabilization, and if not that, it may be a trial balloon to see how the world reacts.

I make bold to assert that the entrenched wealth and banking interests of the world now want stabilization, for if they can get it on the present level of world prices, the producing classes of the world will be securely under their domination for the next generation. The yoke may be placed, but it will not stay, because it is my prediction that the producing masses will rise up in their might and smite their oppressors, and we are likely to see serious social disturbances. We all favor orderly processes, and I am only giving warning of what I see to be inevitable, and, if this comes, it may destroy both classes, and then it will take many years to emerge from its consequences.

Now, what is the issue between these contending forces? The issue is not new but ever old. Producers wanting more and wealth wanting to give less. The producers of prime commodities, that is to say, the producers of the new wealth that comes from the earth and the water thereof demand a fairer share of the benefits therefrom as against old wealth in the shape of money and capital.

The age-old struggle has again become particularly acute because involved in it now is the question of which side is to assume the lion's share, if not all the remaining costs of the World War. If the producers of wealth are to escape an unjust portion of that obligation and we continue to operate under the capitalistic system, and I for one see no other that is even worth while trying, then the producers of prime wealth must have higher price levels. That brings me to a much-mooted question. Should price levels be raised, and if so, how? Some people say by monetary means-others say not. There is very eminent authority on both sides of this question. On the side that monetary policy be made to affect price levels and price levels be stabilized, permit me to quote from the remarks made by Sir Reginald McKenna, the eminent British banker, to the shareholders of the Midland Bank on February 3, 1934.

Again, the critics of the policy of exercising control over the supply of money in accordance with trade requirements stigmatize the policy as artificial tampering with the value of the currency. They recognize that operations of the Bank of England are responsible for variation in the total quantity of money, and they admit that the quantity of money is a governing factor in the price level; but so long as the operations are based upon the more or less accidental changes in the gold stock they regard them as natural, whereas such operations become artificial if deliberately directed with reference to the price level. It appears to me that the critics really mean no more by the term "artificial" than that the conception of reasoned control of the price level is unfamiliar to them. When they become familiar with action by the Bank of England with a view to keeping the price level stable, they will call it natural.

stable, they will call it natural.

There is similar shrinking from recognition of the fact that inflation is sometimes desirable. The word inflation is in constant use as a term of reproach; but just as deflation may be good or bad according to the conditions at the time it is put into operation, so also with inflation. Not a voice has been heard in protest against the inflation we have experienced in the past 2 years. The fact that inflation has been undertaken quite deliberately on a large scale is simply ignored, and the fact that this inflation has been the most important element in our trade recovery receives no grateful recognition.

It will be seen from the above, that the Bank of England has deliberately inflated price levels in terms of sterling and it is fair to assume that the Bank of England is going to stabilize the price level at some point. What is that point? Action heretofore indicates the 1913 price level, which was before the war costs were entailed. Why do I say that? Because since England went off gold in 1931, she has maintained according to her board of trade wholesale commodity price index, which is in terms of sterling, prices on the level of the year 1913. Taking the United States Bureau of Labor Statistics for all commodities with 1926 reckoned at 100, United States 1913 figures were 69.8 or a difference of 43.3 percent in favor of the 1926 price level. Taking the figures of the board of trade, Great Britain with 1913 as 100, their 1926 figure was 148.1; taking Great Britain figures with 1926 as 100, their figures for 1913 were 67.5. So you will see taking 1926 as 100. United States prices for 1913 were 69.8 and Great Britain 67.5. Just a little higher percentage for Great Britain than the United States. Taking Great Britain figures with 1913 as 100, 1926 Great Britain figures were 148.1 and January 1935 was 105. United States prices, with 1913 as 100, were 143.3 in 1926 and 112.9 in January 1935. On the basis of 1926 for the United States, January 1935 our figure was 78.8 and Great Britain 70.9. This seems to indicate that the United States is struggling to 1926 as 100 and Great Britain to 1913 as 100.

England has held to that line of prices for about 4 years now, and therefore I deduct that that is the point where she may desire stabilization. And should she stabilize her prices at that point, the producing classes of new wealth of the world are going to pay the lion's share of the costs of the war, if not the whole cost of the war. And it is going to be particularly hard on the producers of prime wealth in the United States, because they will not only have to pay our costs of the war but the cost that England and the other countries of Europe have saddled on us as a result of their repudiation. I say to the Congress, if we allow this to eventuate, this depression has just started and will continue for another generation at least, and I see in the horoscope serious social disturbances when our credit gives out, which it eventually will, because we cannot long continue a policy of huge borrowing to relieve unemployment. While England is pursuing an intelligent course to procure a price level in her own interest and imposing that price level in her own interests and saddling the costs of the war if she does on the producing classes of the world, the Congress of the United States is fooling around devising new ways and means of extending and enlarging its pipe lines into the United States Treasury to draw off our priceless credit without compensating taxes, illusorily creating purchasing power by taking from one interest and giving to another, and regimenting producers of prime commodities so that our surpluses will not interfere with the march of progress of other lands with whom we are in competition.

Permit me to say I hold no grudge against England. I have said before in this House that the United States and England must stand together in friendly relationship in the interests of the people and progress of the world, yet I have a suspicion that the entrenched financial interests of England are intent upon impressing their will upon the world. For confirmation of my arguments I want to quote from a book recently circulated in the United States entitled, "The Rise and Fall of the Gold Standard", written by the eminent British authority, Sir Charles Morgan-Webb, pages 166 and 167:

The currency manifesto of 1933 does not contemplate a merely passive attitude until the point of equilibrium on the price index suitable for stabilization shall be attained. An active policy to reconcile the stability of exchange rates with a reasonable measure of stability of prices is immediately possible. Such a reconciliation can be effected at once between the countries of the Empire. Its achievement will be aided by the pursuit of a common policy of raising price levels. The manifesto is most emphatic that no stability of exchanges can be satisfactorily achieved except on the basis of the pursuit of a common policy of raising price levels. In order that the new imperial currency policy may have a chance of success there must be no commitments to other countries as regards the future management of sterling. Stability of the exchanges must be subordinate to a common policy of stabilization of prices. There must be no possibility of the new system of currency being wrecked in internecine conflicts of the nature of those which wrecked the gold standard between 1925 and 1931. No stabilization of the exchanges is to be effected with any country except on the clear understanding that the imperial policy of price stabilization is accepted and will be adopted.

But provided that other countries are willing to adopt and operate a policy on similar lines, they will be welcomed into the group, and their inclusion would make possible the attainment and maintenance of exchange stability over a still wider area. Stability of exchange with sterling is to be regarded as a privilege and not as a right. It is to be an inducement to all countries willing to cooperate with the British Empire in the restoration of world prosperity. It is not to be permitted to countries whose currency policies are of such an intensely national character that they tend to wreck any international currency system with which they are associated.

The members of the sterling group of nations have been bitterly disappointed at the repeated declarations by responsible British statesmen of adherence to the gold standard. They cannot understand the typical British procedure by which momentus revolutions are effected under cover of the pretense that nothing has been changed. They refused to believe "the great and notable change" proposed in the Macmillan Report because it associated with adherence to the gold standard. They refused to believe that the Ottawa Conference actually set up a new working system of international currency for the same reason. But the British Empire Delegates Currency Manifesto of 1933, despite a similar handicap, made a different impression. It did not invite them to come to a conference. It invited them to come into an actually working system of international currency, free from the disturbing influence of the franc and the dollar, a currency as near as possible as the altered world conditions will permit, to the sterling standard under which they had flourished before the war.

While I realize that Sir Charles does not speak for the British Government or the Bank of England, yet my suspicions were aroused by the language he uses in the following particulars, and I have set forth the above quotation so you may observe the context, to wit:

No stabilization of the exchanges is to be effected with any country except on the clear understanding that the imperial policy of price stabilization is accepted and will be adopted.

* * * Stability of exchange with sterling is to be regarded as a privilege and not a right. * * * It is not to be permitted to countries whose currency policies are of such intense national character that they tend to wreck any international currency systems with which they are associated. * * * It invited them to come into an actually working system of international currency free from the disturbing influences of the franc and the dollar, a currency as near as possible as the altered world conditions will permit, to the sterling standard under which they had flourished before the war.

If that is dominant British thought, it means that while we are the greatest industrial and creditor Nation in the world, our dollar cannot enter the sacred precincts of the pound sterling except it come with its hat in its hand, a prayer upon its lips, a firm resolution to serve and not to dictate to its lord and master, the pound sterling.

If the Congress of the United States were alive to its responsibilities—yea, its sworn constitutional duty to coin money and regulate the value thereof and of foreign coin and regulate it in the interests of the 1926 price level not only for the United States but all the world—then the dollar would be in command and the yoke would be lifted from the producers of prime commodities everywhere, and they would escape from an unjust share of the burdens of the war. The United States will then escape the intolerable condition of economic vassalage and take its rightful place in the sun—first in industry, dominant in commerce, and primary in banking and finance.

I offered a proposal to the Seventy-second and Seventy-third Congresses in the form of H. R. 1577—Seventy-third Congress—to accomplish this result; and I invite again your attention and serious consideration to that proposal to the end that we may save while it is not yet too late the producing classes not only here but everywhere in the world and protect the holders of wealth from their own folly. [Applause.]

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. Culkin].

Mr. CULKIN. Mr. Chairman, I have asked for this time today to discuss a subject which is very near to my own heart and should be near to the heart of every Member of this body. The subject in question is the legislative integrity of this House.

The founding fathers, when they established this Government, created three distinct branches thereof, to wit, the legislative, the executive, and the judicial. Like all elementary things, that fact is now forgotten. The legislative branch under the constitutional set-up was to make the laws, the Executive was to enforce them, and the judicial branch of government was to interpret them. The country has witnessed, during the present session of Congress, not without earnest protest from the people, the self-abasement and surrender of the House of Representatives to the Executive and his associates. Never in the history of legislative government has so complete a surrender of a parliamentary body been brought about except by force of arms. Then, indeed, it was only temporary, and the representatives of the people, elected by them, in due course regained control over the lawmaking power of the nation and its purse strings.

A typical example of this surrender is the pending works bill, as drawn and presented by the Presidential draftsman. It originally gave the Executive control over all the legislative functions of the Government and a blank check for $4,800,000,000. This bill, as presented to and reported by the committee, contained a provision that any person or corporation violating any rule, however informal or little known, thereafter promulgated by the Executive, was subject to imprisonment for 1 year or a fine of $2,000, or both. This measure, somewhat modified, was passed under a gag rule and by a substantial majority in this House.

Can the Members of the House who are familiar with our history believe that such procedure would have been possible in the days of Clay, Calhoun, Webster, and a host of other men who constituted the representatives of the people during the years that have passed?

Today, if by any chance the spirits of these illustrious dead are sentient and hover about this Chamber, they must indeed view with spiritual disgust the base surrender of the House of Representatives to the "kitchen cabinet" who write the laws and then compel the House to pass them under the Presidential lash. Nor can the Members of the House or its leadership alibi itself by the complaisant avowal that we are in the midst of a depression as grim and terrible as war. The fact is that the delegations of power to the President heretofore made have been passed on to Ickes and the like, who, while holding Congress in complete contempt, maladminister and waste the funds intrusted to them by this body. Congress when on its own was saving and highly efficient compared to the maladministrators who have neither wit, wisdom, nor experience.

What part has the experienced chairman of the Rivers and Harbors Committee [Mr. Mansfield] played in the decisions on waterways? What part has the acting majority leader, the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. Taylor] had in the allocation of funds for reclamation purposes? What part has the experience of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Connery] had in the writing of labor legislation? To what extent has the Chairman of the Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee [Mr. Bland, of Virginia] had in the framing of laws and policies with reference to merchant marine? What part has the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. Wilson] had in the framing of the policies on flood control? Or the gentleman from New York [Mr. Somers] on coinage, weights, and measures? Or the distinguished gentleman from Alabama [Mr. STEAGALL] on the legislation on banking and currency? The Nation has educated these men and qualified them by their long service and large experience for the posts of leadership on these issues. The Presidential field marshals have ridden them down one by one and usurped their functions.

The history of the House of Representatives is a record of achievement in the field of national development both material and cultural. Yesterday you might have stood against the world, now there is none so poor to do you reverence.

Mr. KNUTSON: Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. CULKIN. I yield for a brief question.

Mr. KNUTSON. I may say to the gentleman that the situation that prevails in the House at the present time is identically the same as the situation which prevailed in the House during the Sixty-fifth Congress. That Congress also was known as a "rubber-stamp Congress" and was dominated by President Wilson.

Mr. CULKIN. I thank the gentleman for his contribution. Abject and submissive, you ignore your constitutional status as a great branch of the Government and are today a mere debating society where shadow-boxing oratory takes the place of constructive deliberation and legislation. I have been proud of the record of the House in the past, today my heart is filled with sorrow at its supineness. I am speaking these unpleasant truths in the hope that your pride may be roused and that you may again function as the Constitution provides.

Mr. HARLAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. CULKIN. I yield.

Mr. HARLAN. The gentleman a moment ago said he rose to criticize the recent work-relief bill on the ground that the jobs had not been specifically named and that this put too much power in the hands of the Executive. About 2 years ago the Democratic House passed a work-relief bill in which every item was designated and stipulated, yet the gentleman and his conferees on his side of the House voted against it.

Mr. CULKIN. Mr. Chairman, I yielded for a question, not a speech.

Mr. HARLAN. My question is what kind of bill the gentleman wants, how the gentleman wants Congress to function between these two systems; the gentleman objected to both of them.

Mr. CULKIN. If the gentleman was here then—— Mr. HARLAN. Yes; the gentleman was. Mr. CULKIN. The gentleman from Ohio is highly intelligent, and I respect him for his intelligence; he must know that that was a camouflaged piece of legislation written by the former Speaker, now the distinguished Vice President, for the purpose of baiting the then President of the United States.

I rise particularly today to call the attention of the House to one of the results of this delegation of power. I refer to the now abortive attempt of the administration to remove Robert Moses from membership on the Triborough Bridge Commission, New York City. This commission is expending $42,000,000 for the construction of this bridge through a Federal grant. The building of this bridge makes a physical fact of a dream that has possessed the hearts and minds of the residents of New York City for many years. The construction of this bridge involves the coordination of parks and avenues, and the mayor of New York placed on this commission one Robert Moses, who, to my mind, is one of the outstanding career men of the United States. He is the park commissioner of New York City, where he has served with distinction and ability. His service as park commissioner of the city has been brilliant and he has created parks and bathing pools without number in the congested sections of that metropolis. He has beautified the existing parks, and his work bears the stamp of a vision and intelligence that is extraordinary.

But he sinned in two particulars. First, he was a devoted friend of former Governor Smith and served as his first lieutenant when Governor Smith reorganized the government of New York and established the budget system in that State. Robert Moses was captivated by the personality and political philosophy of Governor Smith. May I add that he followed the political fortunes of Governor Smith to the bitter end and at Chicago was an outspoken advocate of Governor Smith's nomination for the Presidency. Have you watched the fate of those Democrats who followed the political fortunes of Alfred E. Smith into the convention at Chicago? One by one they have been cut down and destroyed. No South American dictator was ever more ruthless in destroying his partisan opponents than has been the present occupant of the White House, acting in conjunction with Field Marshal Farley. Go over the facts in your minds with reference to your own States and you will reach the same conclusion that I have.

Robert Moses sinned again when he ran for Governor of New York State on the Republican ticket last fall. Millions of the people's money were poured into New York State to defeat him. In the election his spear knew no brother and he campaigned perhaps too bitterly. Suffice it to say that he was outspokenly in opposition to the White House policies. That is recent history, and I will not burden you in detail with the facts and circumstances of that campaign. It is clear that he offended the President and the Postmaster General by reason of his ability to tell damning truths in plain English.

And now the scene shifts to the White House. For on December 26, 1934, the President entered an Executive order delegating to the Federal Emergency Administrator of Public Works certain functions, in substance as follows:

First. At the Administrator's discretion, to sell and deliver all securities purchased under the authority of section 203 of the Recovery Act.

Second. To alter, amend, or waive any existing rules and to prescribe any other rules which the Administrator might deem necessary for the purpose of carrying out the Recovery Act.

Of even date therewith, ere the ink on this first order had dried, there was born in the Executive Office of the White House a twin order. General Farley and Honest Harold Ickes were the obstetricians in charge of this dual delivery. By the terms of this second order, duly christened "No. 129", the city of New York was denied further funds for the Triborough Bridge construction unless Robert Moses was removed from the commission.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 7 additional minutes to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. CULKIN. My observation of the public service is that few public men are able to use power wisely and with tolerance. I wish to characterize the making of these two orders, the existence of which were not known until some 3 weeks after their issuance, as an act of tyranny unexampled in the history of the Republic. The fact is that the Boston Tea Party was held for less offensive administration than this. It is more than medieval, because even in the Middle Ages free cities possessed governmental autonomy which neither king nor prince could invade. The Members of the House know from their own experience that a municipality is a legislative creation, and that a city necessarily plays an important and necessary part in the development and safeguarding of human liberties. The part they have played in the American scheme of things has not always been commendable, but cities, great cities more particularly, have been characterized by a spirit of tolerance and have been a great factor in the development of culture in the field of music, painting, and literature. They have been confronted with the great problems of education, life and fire protection, sanitation, and water supply. A municipality, as the House knows, is a creature of the State legislature, responsible only to the State government when political corruption is shown or there is a failure to protect life and property.

New York City is imperial in population and wealth. It pays one-fifth of the taxes of the Nation, more than is paid by 30 whole States I could mention. It is entitled to autonomy. Now we find the Central Government cold-bloodedly attempting to invade the power of this great municipality and launching its thunder against a man who of all men is concededly the best-fitted public officer in his field in all America. I wish we might call back to life Webster, Clay, and Calhoun and hear their reactions to this outrageous extension of Federal powers.

Mr. KVALE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CULKIN. I yield. Mr. KVALE. I hope the gentleman will not forget to refer to the chief of the gentleman of whom he is speaking, who courageously kept him at his post of duty.

Mr. CULKIN. What the gentleman says is true. The distinguished mayor of New York, a former colleague here, is giving an able and brilliant administration of the affairs of the city of New York. In this situation he, of course, was between the devil and the deep blue sea, as the gentleman from Minnesota knows; but he conducted himself with his customary courage, and, while he is now feeling responsibility in large measure for the first time, Mayor LaGuardia retains his habitual courage; I do not think that has in any way diminished, I will say to the gentleman from Minnesota.

For the purpose of protecting what remains of the integrity of this body, I introduced a resolution March 6, which is as follows:

Resolved, That the Administrator of the Public Works Administration be, and he is hereby, directed to furnish the House of Representatives the following information:

1. The official reason for the entry of Administrative Order No. 129, P. W. A., which in its terms automatically bars the Tri-borough Bridge Commission of New York City from the receipt of any further Federal funds unless one Robert Moses, now a member of said board, retires from said activity.

2. Under what warrant of law or Executive authority the Administrator of the P. W. A. is empowered to destroy the home rule of a municipality and its right to select its own executives.

 Whether or not he intends to withhold funds necessary for the prosecution of the Triborough Bridge improvement unless said Robert Moses resigns from said authority.

Yesterday the Secretary of the Interior, after weeks of wisecracking, stated that he did not intend to enforce order 129 for the reason that the same was not retroactive. For weeks Ickes told the newspapermen at numerous press conferences that the order would stand like Gibraltar and that Moses would have to go off the triborough board. The people of the city of New York, through their vigorous protest, have carried the day. The President and his fugleman have yielded to the mass demands of the people of the city of New York. In the days to come I trust that the Executive will keep himself free from interference with the government of States and municipalities, who can best carry out their own destinies through absolute autonomy.

I congratulate the people of New York City on the outcome of this attempted Executive interference. They have fought a brave fight and have won. [Applause.]

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CULKIN. I yield.

Mr. KNUTSON. The administration's reversal in the Moses matter is indicative of the possible outcome of the candidacy of the President for reelection.

Mr. CULKIN. I think that may be so. In other words, in the face of repeated statements, both inferentially from the White House and openly by "Honest Harold", as he is self-styled, that he would not abate this order or modify it, that it would stand like Gibraltar, he did, in fact, withdraw it. It has some significance at least as showing the fact that the people, when thoroughly roused, do rule.

Mr. KNUTSON. They did not want to alienate a couple of million votes.

Mr. CULKIN. No. Votes begin to play an obvious part in the Presidential plans.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. CARTER].

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, as a Member of the House, may I say that there is one office in this Government that has rendered a most efficient service on behalf of the Government. I refer to the General Accounting Office, administered by Comptroller General McCarl. I have read with considerable consternation in the press the last few days that certain attacks have been made on this Office which I fear will hinder and destroy the unusual and effective administration of its work.

Mr. Chairman, may I say that I do not know Comptroller General McCarl personally, but I do know his institution. I believe that he has saved vast sums of money for this Government, and I regret to see attempts made to interfere with the proper administration of that Office. [Applause.] I understand that, in the argument with the Navy Department, perhaps it does not mean the saving of dollars and cents in this particular instance. As I understand the matter, the difficulty arises in regard to travel pay of certain retired officers. Of course, the Secretary of the Navy could order them here and have them retired before their retirement date and the Government would have to pay their travel expenses to Washington. However, that is not the proposition. The proposition is whether we are going to permit a wedge to be driven in.

Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that every man connected with this Government, whether it be the Chief Executive, a Cabinet officer, a Member of Congress, or someone else, should stand for a fair, just, and equitable administration of the Comptroller General's Office. [Applause.] I think, further, that if he is not clothed with sufficient authority to administer that office under all conditions, the authority should be given to him so that all doubt would be removed. I know that we have all discussed the Comptroller General at various times when he turned us down on something, but I want to say that I have heard Members also say, "Well, he turned me down, but, of course, I know the Comptroller General is right." Therefore, Mr. Chairman, I think that the best interests of the Government require that we should uphold him in the proper, efficient, and legal administration of his work. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Young].

Mr. YOUNG. Mr. Chairman, my purpose is to advert to the right of freedom of speech and press and to defend civil liberties.

The Ohio Chamber of Commerce has forwarded a resolution to me, as have other Chambers of Commerce, advocating the enactment of alien and sedition laws and other measures which sound patriotic but which are bound to lead to grave abuses, oppressions, and persecutions.

I wrote the Chamber of Commerce:

Your circular letter is the most untimely, unnecessary, and foolish letter I have received in a long time.

Your position is untenable, arbitrary, and un-American, and stamps you as being opposed to liberties guaranteed to our people. Evidently you claim a man has no right to be a Communist; that a man has no right to advocate any changes in our form of government.

form of government.

It would be a good idea for you to read the Constitution of our country, including the Bill of Rights, instead of urging acts which would bring our form of government "into contempt, scorn, contumely, or disrepute."

Every now and then we read in the newspapers of some "red" scare. The facts are the Communists polled only 102,000 votes in the entire country in 1932 and less than that in 1934. There are in all 48 States fewer than 25,000 Communists. At this time new laws are proposed to make it illegal to influence a soldier or sailor to advocate changes in our form of government. Do army and naval officers admit that they have failed to maintain discipline? Is it necessary for us to make a few more crimes in order to protect the fighting forces of our country? The record of 160 years of loyalty and patriotism refutes and repudiates such a suggestion. With worthy and industrious men and women unemployed and little children underfed, the Congress has more important work to do than to make a few more crimes because some ignorant, misguided agitators rant and rave against the Government.

In line with this "scare" talk are the assertions of former Brig. Gen. Smedley Butler. I studied the complete testimony of Smedley Butler given at the executive sessions of the hearings on propaganda activities before a committee of the House of Representatives.

The committee suppressed a portion of this testimony as far as general publication was concerned for the reason, according to statements to me, that Butler's testimony involved reputable citizens of the highest standing, based on the merest and flimsiest sort of hearsay evidence.

The accusations made by Butler and hinted at by him were unsupported by any credible evidence of any character. Butler claimed he was repeating statements made to him by Gerald C. Maguire. Butler said of Maguire, "Due to a wound in his head (Maguire's) he is a little flighty."

I am not a member of this committee. I have studied the complete unexpurgated testimony of Smedley Butler. It was really outrageous to spend taxpayers' money to permit this fellow to rant. He is a publicity hound and a faker. Butler's testimony was a fanciful phantasmagoric tale. It deserves no consideration whatever. There was not even a scintilla of evidence that he was asked to lead even a corporal's guard against the Government.

Our Government was born in a revolution. Look at the bottom of the Declaration of Independence and you will see a noble roll of radicals upon that immortal scroll. Samuel Adams, John Hancock, Patrick Henry, George Washington were radicals in their time. Radicals have always been the beacon lights of history. They come from high. They come from low. The greatest was born in a stable and crucified between two thieves.

Whenever a majority of our fellow citizens want to change our form of government, that government will be changed. That is proper. As a schoolboy I was taught that the Constitution of our country was a divinely inspired instrument. I find if there were any divine instrumentalities in the framing of our Constitution, it was not of the choosing of the makers. Benjamin Franklin's motion that each day's session of the Constitutional Convention be opened with prayer did not receive even one supporting vote. When the Constitution was first announced there was an uproar from libertyloving patriots who had won the Revolutionary War. They forced the standpatters of that day to accept the Bill of Rights. The makers of our Constitution legislated for 13 orphan colonies, for a nation of frontier farmers and hunters, with a few merchants at the seaports. They did not legislate for all time. They did the work their times called for them to do. They did it well. In addition, they wisely provided the manner for changes to be made in the Constitution when the demands of new conditions made such changes advisable or necessary.

A man has as much right to be a Communist as a Republican or Democrat, and a Communist ought to have as much freedom as either. I say, however mistaken in his views a Communist might be, he should have an equal right to persuade others, as long as it is done peaceably.

These words came not from any dangerous radical or "parlor pink." They came from an eminent judge in New Jersey—Vice Chancellor John O. Bigelow.

We should be eternally vigilant against attempts to check the expression of opinions that we loathe.

The late Justice Oliver Wendell Holmes, of the Supreme Court of the United States, one of the very great men of our time, said that.

"Let the people know the truth", said Abraham Lincoln, "and the country is safe." The Bill of Rights guarantees to us free speech, free press, and free assemblage. The right of free speech is the basis of all social and political progress. This fundamental right stands in jeopardy because of the foolish fear of agitators. It may be dangerous to permit certain opinions to be expressed. It is more dangerous to attempt to suppress the expression of such opinions. To attempt to prevent an explosion in a boiler by sitting on the safety valve is obviously futile and foolish. It invites disaster. Suppression is the seed of revolution. "No abuse of a free press", said George William Curtis, "can be so great as the evil of its suppression."

We need the safety valve of freedom of speech.

We would do well to recognize that there are two historic methods of dealing with communism and radicalism. Patrick Henry said, "There is but one lamp by which my feet are guided and that is the lamp of experience." He said, "I know of no way to judge the future except by the past."

The method of Czarist Russia and Bourbon France was to crush communism and radicalism. This failed miserably, resulting only in a further spread of communism and radicalism.

The other method is the method of enlightenment. Let us find what causes radicalism, discontent, and communism. Let us seek to end injustices, discriminations, and hardships by justice and reason in dealing with Communists, radicals, and in fact all of our people. Let us bring more of God's sunlight into the lives of men, women, and children. Let us make life broader and more worth while for all. Let us strive mightily to provide steady employment and economic security for all. Succeed in this and we shall put an end to any menace of Communists or communism. [Applause.]

The Christian religion owes Nero an immense debt of gratitude for the advertising he gave it by his persecution of the early Christians. Christianity might, in fact, have remained but an obscure Jewish sect had it not been for the persecutions of the early Christians by Nero.

Free speech and free press stimulate respect for opinions other than our own. "A decent respect for the opinions of mankind" is a necessary safeguard against the illusion that we are infallible. Oliver Cromwell warned members of Parliament:

I beseech you, gentlemen, by the mercies of Christ, to remember that it is possible for you to be mistaken.

Those who now seek to crush Communists by force are doing an evil. You cannot exterminate ideas with clubs; you only scatter them. Combat wrong opinions with right opinions; combat fallacies with facts. Thomas Jefferson said:

Error of opinion may be tolerated if reason is free to combat it.

Benjamin Franklin said:

Abuses of freedom of speech ought to be suppressed, but to whom dare we commit the care of doing it?

The history of attempts to combat radicalism and communism with force and brutality, instead of by reason is a wearisome tale of monotonous failures. That we in the face of the failures of the Czars of Russia, the Bourbons of France, and the Kaisers of Germany, continue to repeat these ill-fated methods indicates amazing stupidity.

Public officials or private citizens who seek to suppress free speech are lawbreakers. Whether prominent as members of Chambers of Commerce or high in public office, individuals who seek to suppress freedom of speech are lawbreakers. They should be treated as such.

Those who disagree with and condemn the first amendment to the Constitution of the United States, written on the demand of men who won the Revolutionary War, have the right to agitate for its repeal through the regular and orderly method prescribed for making changes in the form of our Government.

The very first amendment to the Constitution of our country provides:

Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or abridging the freedom of speech, or of the press; or the right of the people peaceably to assemble, and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.

This is the law of the land. Either obey it or change it in a lawful manner.

Strangely enough, those who are organizing a wave of hysteria and arrogantly unlawfully flouting rights dear to all lovers of liberty pose as 100-percent Americans and patriots. Such chamber-of-commerce lawbreakers ignore the ideals of America. They, most of all, need to be Americanized.

Over and above our Constitution and the statutes, and greater than all, is the supreme sovereignty of our people, with whom should rest the final decision of all great questions of national policy. All civil liberties must be safeguarded. Let us protect all the people all of the time in the exercise of all their rights. Do this, and eye hath not witnessed nor finite mind conceived the future grandeur and glory of our country. [Applause.]

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 23 minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Short].

Mr. SHORT. Mr. Chairman, I enjoyed immensely the remarks of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Young], who just preceded me, and I most heartily concur in his application of free speech. God forbid that the time should ever come when any American citizen is denied this constitutional right and privilege. I quite agree with the gentleman that persecution promotes propagation and that bayonets are bad instruments with which to combat ideas. The only way to overcome a bad philosophy of life is with a better philosophy, in the open forum of reason and in the court of conscience. Voltaire was right when he said, "I may disagree with everything you say, but I will die to give you the right to say it."

Mr. Chairman and members of the Committee, I regret that because of the limited time I cannot yield and will not yield this afternoon, at this late hour, until I have finished my remarks.

Two years ago this month Franklin D. Roosevelt was inaugurated President of the United States. In the campaign of 1932 we Republicans were told by our Democratic opponents that conditions could not be worse-that we needed a change. God knows we got it! No voter ever anticipated such a change as we now have. In an emotional moment the American people, by the most overwhelming majority ever given a party, elected the present administration. No President ever entered the White House with more solid and unanimous sentiment of the people back of him than did the present occupant. The Republicans of this Nation, in characteristic fashion, put what they thought to be the welfare of country above party, and graciously and willingly turned over the reins of government to the proponents of the new deal. With one voice and a single purpose Franklin D. Roosevelt was acclaimed a Heaven-sent hero to lead us out of the wilderness. He was indeed a prince charming and a knight errant, who with his winsome smile, mellifluous voice, and entrancing personality won the plaudits of an excited populace. Many people felt that the millenium had come and that Utopia would immediately be set up on this earth. For many months no one felt free to criticize or question the policies of our President. Many of our most patriotic and intelligent citizens have gladly cooperated with the new administration, even though they have gone against their own best judgment. Franklin D. Roosevelt has had his own way; in both the last and present Congresses he has had an overwhelming majority in both the Senate and the House; the Members of Congress have carried out his every wish, and no one is responsible for the outcome of his policies except the President himself.

During this unparalleled economic crisis of our Nation, no one wishes to appear an obstructionist; but when a program so radically different from anything ever before undertaken and when issues so momentous and of such far-reaching effect threaten to undermine and destroy the very foundations upon which this Republic rests, every American who knows his history or has his country's welfare at heart is compelled to exercise his constitutional right and duty, and criticize the wisdom and feasibility of certain proposals which he is convinced are dangerous and inimical to human liberty. This is no time for destructive or hostile criticism, but it is high time for honest and intelligent criticism. This is not the hour to sling mud, but it is time to speak the truth.

This administration has betrayed not only the American people but the Democratic Party as well. Its history is one of disappointment; its record is one of failure. With the single exception of repeal of the eighteenth amendment, every promise in the 1932 Democratic platform has been broken, every pledge violated, and every traditional principle for which the party of Jefferson and Jackson stood has been rankly repudiated. Dismissing and forgetting the advisers of the old school and lovers of the Constitution, the President, immediately after his inauguration, surrounded himself with college professors and young theorists who scorned our American institutions, branded our form of government a failure, and immediately began to set up a new deal which they could call "heaven on earth."

We were promised by the last Democratic national convention that our Budget would be annually balanced; that a sound currency would be maintained at all hazards; that governmental expenditures would be drastically reduced; that we would have a Tariff Commission free from executive interference; that Government would be taken out of private enterprise; and that extravagance would be eliminated by consolidating useless offices and departments and by abolishing bureaus. Much to the disillusionment of a hopeful and expectant American electorate, the diametrically opposite has happened. Instead of a single Budget, we now have two-both unbalanced; we have gone off the gold standard, debased our coinage, violated the sanctity of contract, repudiated Government obligations; we have increased our national debt by more than $10,000,000,000, given the President control over the Tariff Commission and the power to negotiate reciprocal tariff treaties with foreign countries without the consent or ratification of the United States Senate, placed the Government in all kinds of business in competition with its private citizens, and established so many bureaus that we have exhausted the alphabet.

Today there are 11,000,000 men out of work, more than 22,000,000 people on the dole, and by the end of next year our national debt will have reached $34,000,000,000. In the name of God and common sense, when and how will this huge indebtedness ever be paid? And what right have we to shift the expense of our present folly upon the backs of unborn generations? What will posterity think of its present-day ancestors when it is called upon to repay the enormous sums that we now wildly and extravagantly spend like drunken sailors? By the time all of these innumerable bureaus and alphabetical agencies, with their vast army of governmental employees, are taken care of, we will hear an SOS PDQ for the G. O. P.

I regret that lack of time will not allow me to discuss in detail the various planks in the last Democratic platform and the different alphabetical agencies in the most stupendous, goading, and self-perpetuating bureaucracy the world has ever known. Today I want to discuss briefly only one outstanding new-deal measure.

The administration at first based its hope of recovery upon the N. R. A. From the very first many of us realized that America can neither parade nor ballyhoo herself back to prosperity. From the beginning many of us doubted the wisdom and feasibility of the N. R. A. We felt that the machinery it set up and the means which it employed were unwise, unsound, unworkable, and unconstitutional. However, we were loath to criticize, hoping against hope that the scheme would work, and were ready to give all honor and credit to its sponsors if it did work. We were more patient than Job. But the time has long since arrived and passed when, as honest and patriotic citizens in the defense of cherished liberties and for our future protection, we must openly and frankly express our opposition to a scheme so foolish, foreign, and contrary to the spirit and genius of the American people.

If selfishness could be eliminated from human nature, and if we could repeal the natural economic law of supply and demand, such an artificial and arbitrary agency as N. R. A. might possibly work; but unfortunately the whole thing is an idle and impotent dream. Human nature is still selfish, and on every corner are to be found cheaters and chiselers. To enforce the provisions of N. R. A. our whole populace would have to be turned into a police force, with an equal number of people imported to watch us. Only the Pollyanna optimist, who flees after fancy rather than fact and who follows the wish instead of reality, has faith in it. Under the provisions of the National Recovery Act our antitrust laws have been repealed, honest as well as cutthroat competition has been abolished, and giant monopolies have grown up among us. It can never work in a free country, and the amazing thing is that anyone with any sense could ever have hoped it could work in a republic. Over 18 months ago I said:

In a country so vast and diversified as the United States, where the standard of living and the cost of labor vary so greatly, the attempt to force the members of any business or industry to comply or conform to a single universal standard is sheer idiocy and impossible of accomplishment.

Yet N. R. A. attempts to place American business in a strait-jacket. The ill-considered and dictatorial rulings of many code authorities are more tyrannical and brutal than the tyranny and oppression of the Spanish Inquisition. This ruthlessness applies not to a special code but to practically all codes alike. The little hotel and restaurant owners and operators in my district are threatened with extinction, though the codes regulating these industries have been partially suspended; a leather-goods manufacturer under the N. R. A. has been marking up deficits; many private contractors have lost enormous sums of money; and automobile agencies have closed their doors. A spring-bed company was first placed under the furniture code, later it was placed under the bedding code, and is now also under an accessory code; this one firm is compelled to pay assessments to two code authorities, and though at first it was placed in the southern wage differential scale, it was later, in violation of a promise of code authorities, placed in the northern division.

Not only in my own district but in other parts of my State we have seen numerous examples of the arrogant and inhuman manner with which code authorities have turned thumbs down on an industry or segments of an industry which do not meet their august approval. The men's clothing code authority is a case in point. The gentlemen who rule this industry collect in taxes from the individual manufacturers something like a half million dollars a year. At present this code authority has a budget before N. R. A. for its approval which calls for $221,000 to carry the code authority from January 1 of this year to June 30. Some of the expenditures listed in the budget are very interesting; for example, the chief executive officer collects $12,500 in the period from January to June, or a neat $25,000 a year salary. Legal counsel collects $1,000 per month. Under the heading of "investigators", which probably covers the inspectors, spies, and stool pigeons, we find a sum of $42,264 alloted for 6 months. Clerical employees add another $55,000 to the 6-months' budget. The half-million dollars or more which this one code authority of a comparatively small industry garners to itself in the course of a year is obtained by the use or threatened use of the boycott, the blackjack of Incidentally it is interesting to note that N. R. A. code authorities are costing the various business firms which are members of the code $41,000,000 annually, and the taxpayers an additional $11,000,000. These $52,000,000 per year, or $1,000,000 per week, are naturally passed on to the consumers of the country, which helps explain the increase in the cost of living.

The code for the men's clothing industry, which we can assume was written by the proponents of the present code authority, contains provisions which enable the governing body to charge a fee for each Blue Eagle label in each garment produced and further provides that anyone who fails to pay this fee or fails to insert these Blue Eagle labels is in violation of the code. A particular clothing manufacturer in Missouri, a personal friend of mine, though complying with the wage and hour requirements of the N. R. A., was hounded, harassed, and punished for failing to insert the "blue buzzard" labels in his garments; his factory was temporarily closed, and many satisfied employees were thrown out of work. My friend was forced to make several long business trips, employ attorneys, and hire accountants, and only after going to this great expense and suffering this humiliation and embarrassment did he succeed in reopening his factory.

In my State there was another small manufacturer of clothing who had operated for many years in a small way, employing about 30 people. Under the code there were more different operations to perform in the manufacture of clothing than he had employees. He tried to comply with the code by raising wages and giving all his employees in turn a chance to earn the highest piece-work rates. Last September the Cossacks of the code authority descended upon his small shop and told him he was in arrears to his employees to the extent of $35.06 for a year's work. He believed that this was not the case, and his employees agreed with him. Nevertheless, a young upstart, just out of college, with the badge of authority pinned upon his vest and a card from his superiors in Washington, haled this good man before the code authority, threatened him with lightning, and ordered him to pay up. But this American citizen had extraordinary courage. Counsel advised him that although justice was on his side, it was useless to break his head against a stone wall. He persevered, however, and like my other friend, in addition to obtaining legal assistance, hired an accountant. The audit made by expert accountants showed that he was not in arrears $35.06, but had actually paid his employees $507 more than the code authority maximum requirements. Although these facts were brought out in December of last year, the code authority has apparently not yet decided whether it will quash the indictment or exile an American citizen to Siberia.

While there are some code authorities, no doubt, which are reputable and functioning for the interest of the entire industry, there are too many which are functioning for the interest of a part of the industry and which are doing their best to destroy or drive out the competitors of the favored groups. Not only do these code authorities exercise the legislative functions of Congress by handing down codes-often contradictory codes-to be carried out by the members of an industry but in case any code is violated, the code authority sits as a court, and after convicting its victim, takes off its judicial robe, picks up the ax, and becomes the executioner. These code authorities possess the power of imposing taxes, formerly held exclusively by the Congress of the United States, and now maintain interstate and national police forces with authority comparable to that of the Federal Government and enjoy judicial power which in their use savors more of a drumhead court martial than of legitimate legal procedure.

Thomas Jefferson once said: "That government is best which governs least." What would Jefferson think of this country and of his party, when a small group of inexperienced, impractical, theoretical visionaries, sitting behind mahogany desks in Washington on swivel chairs, attempt to tell the American business man, small-town merchant, and large industrialist in the remotest corner of this great Republic just how each shall run his business, how many men they shall hire, how many hours they shall work, what wage they shall pay, and how much the raw or finished product shall bring? These bureaucratic Lilliputians never had any business of their own, could never be elected aldermen on the smallest village council in Missouri, and the American | for just a few moments to discuss the bill and parts of people will never tolerate the dictatorial interference or submit to the browbeating methods of any bully, whether he be a hard-boiled army general or a cynical, sophisticated college professor. Today our country has been filled once more, as it was during the World War, with spies, snoopers, agents, investigators, and inspectors, piling upon the American people debts, codes, rules, and regulations, prying into every detail of their private lives. Sponsored and backed for the most part by big business, the whole tendency of N. R. A. has been to cripple initiative, legalize and encourage monopoly, preach and practice the nefarious business of boycott, raise prices for the consuming, laboring public, and squeeze the little business man out of existence.

Code authorities have operated in dark and devious ways, with the tacit consent, if not indeed the full approval, of N. R. A. There is one way to stop these evil practices, and that is by turning the pitiless spotlight of public attention upon them. These sinister things can survive only in darkness and obscurity. Not until the New Jersey tailor was fined for charging 5 cents less than the code price for pressing a suit of clothes, not until the old-maid sisters in New York were forced to stop making dolls and go on the public dole, not until the small battery manufacturer in Pennsylvania was placed behind jail bars and assessed a large fine, not until a restaurant proprietor in my own State was taken out of his place of business by angry competitors who beat him severely; not until innocent, law-abiding, honest American citizens have suffered these outrages has the Congress of the United States taken action.

Because of an aroused public sentiment, the United States Senate is now investigating N. R. A. In spite of these gross errors, rank wrongs, and brutal butcheries, this administration is asking that this infamous bureau be continued for 2 more years. To be sure, radical changes are recommended, but what the N. R. A. needs is not a surgeon but an undertaker. We have now reached the point where this dirty, dastardly, and diabolical despotism should be knocked in the head. However, this seems to be superfluous, since the founder of N. R. A. himself has admitted that it is as "extinct as the dodo" and "deader than a doornail." In spite of this frank and noble confession by General Johnson, who was by far the ablest man in the N. R. A., I am ready to admit that nothing in this world is wholly bad, not even the N. R. A .- though it would come nearer than anything else to disproving this statement. Whatever good has come from this costly and painful experiment should be recognized and salvaged; we should have something for our enormous investment. But we already have existing agencies of Government, such as the Interstate Commerce Commission, the Department of Labor, and the Federal Trade Commission which can carry on whatever deserves to be perpetuated. The administration itself knows that N. R. A. is a rotten mess and a miserable failure, but it has not the honesty or courage to admit it.

Let this "blue buzzard", which never had a tail and consequently could not fly, whose pin feathers were plucked by Clarence Darrow and his commission, breathe its last on June 16 of this year. I am bitterly opposed to granting the N. R. A. any extension, and I do not believe in giving it even a decent burial. It was never more than a foul mixture of colossal stupidity, haughty insolence, meddlesome interference, and rapacious arrogance. It will go down in history as a dismal and egregious failure. Let us now put an end to these un-American practices, break the deadly shackles which now enslave American business. Complete and immediate abandonment of N. R. A. is one of the surest and quickest roads to recovery. [Applause.]

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Cooper].

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, today we were privileged to hear read a message from the President of the United States on holding-company legislation which is now pending before Congress. As a member of the committee now considering this important legislation, I want the President's message.

It seems to me this message was adroitly timed to come to the House today. Our committee has been holding hearings on this important bill for practically 3 weeks. It is one of the most important pieces of legislation that has ever come before an American Congress. It has already been admitted by some from the various departments of the Government who favor this legislation that it is probably too drastic in its present form and some changes should be made. But I repeat, Mr. Chairman, this message was adroitly timed. I noticed that the call bells rang at 10: 35 this morning. The House was to go into session at 11 o'clock. The regular time for call bells is 15 minutes before the House convenes, but today the bells rang 10 minutes ahead of time. Of course this was in order to get the membership of the House here to listen to the President's message. Then after we convened there was a quorum call, and it was a very opportune time for the reading of the President's message on the holding-company legislation.

Mr. Chairman, I want to read one or two things which the President mentioned in his message, and, as a member of the committee. I make this statement, because there are many things in the bill which, as it stands, I cannot approve.

The President states, "It deserves the careful attention of every Member of Congress." I agree with the President in that respect, as I said a moment ago, it is one of the most important measures the Congress has ever had to consider.

In the second place the President says:

I have seen much of the propaganda prepared against such legislation, even down to mimeographed sheets.

No doubt every Member of the House has received many letters opposing the passage of this legislation. I will not deny that some of it has been inspired, but I believe I can truthfully say on my honor as a Member of this Congress that not 10 percent of the letters I have received, which run into several thousand, against this legislation is in form letters. Most of them have been written by individuals, insurance companies, business houses, banks, and various kinds of industries. I have received letters from old people who have written them in longhand, and you could see that they were well up in years, for their hand tottered when they wrote the letter.

If these men and women who have invested their life savings in a utility as a protection for old age believe that the passage of this bill may destroy the securities which they have honestly bought, they have a perfect right to come to the Congress and protest against the passage of such a measure.

But how about the propaganda on the other side? It all depends on whose propaganda it is, whether it is wrong or not. Within 2 hours after the President delivered his message to the Congress, the Chairman of the Printing Committee in the House stood on this floor and presented a privileged resolution providing 50,000 copies of the President's message read here today, to be printed at public expense and to be sent out all over the country. Now this is a different kind of propaganda for Congressmen who favor the bill to send out under their franking privilege.

Then, again, I believe this administration ought to be the last in the world to talk about propaganda. If there is any administration in the history of this country that has had more propaganda in every form sent out to the country, I cannot recall it.

How about a few days ago, when it was commonly known and stated in every large newspaper in the country that the President, or at least his advisers and friends, held up the $4,880,000,000 public-works-relief bill in the Senate in order that they might create sentiment throughout the country and have propaganda sent to the Senators of the United States to try to get them to change their vote on the Mc-Carran prevailing-wage amendment to the public-works whether it is right or wrong.

Then, again, the President says:

I have seen enough to be as impressed by it as I was by the milar effort to stir up the country against the securities-exchange bill last spring.

Yes; there was propaganda against the securities-exchange bill, but I want to remind the President that the securitiesexchange bill, as we passed it in the House, was not the bill that the President sent down to the Congress in the first instance and recommended its passage. The bill was modified by the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee of the House, which made it more acceptable to those who opposed it in the beginning.

Again, the President says:

The so-called "public-utility holding-company bill" * * * which was drafted under the direction of congressional leaders—

Who were the congressional leaders that were consulted in the drafting of this bill? Who were they, I ask you? The chairman of the committee, Mr. RAYBURN, of Texas, admitted in committee that he had nothing to do with the actual drafting of the bill, that the bill was presented to him, and he introduced it in Congress. Who were the congressional leaders that helped to draft this bill, I should like to know? The members of the committee had nothing at all to do with the drafting of the measure.

Now, I hold no brief for some of these holding companies. Some of the practices and abuses they have carried on are indefensible and cannot be justified in our economic life. and I believe the Congress should take prompt action to stop these abuses at the earliest possible moment, and, for one, I urge legislation into this House that will stop these corrupt practices which have been carried on by some holding companies in the past. However, I am also much concerned about how far the bill is going to go and the effect it will have upon millions of innocent investors in public utilities.

How far is it going to go? Is it going to destroy the money that they have invested in these public utilities?

I will tell you what I believe ought to be the right title of this bill in its present form—a bill to force public ownership of public utilities. The bill provides for dissolution of holding companies in 1940, and if the bill is passed in its present form, there will be many of these smaller units which the holding companies have taken over and are now operating that will not be able to stand on their own feet. Then what becomes of the stock that the American citizens have invested in these public utilities? They will be worthless, and public ownership will follow.

This bill carries some of the most drastic regulations over private capital ever written into a bill that any Congress has had to consider.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman from Ohio 2 minutes more.

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. And yet at the same time we are told we must have this drastic regulation. On the other hand, however, the regulation does not apply to publicowned utilities. During the 2 years of the present administration the Federal Government has invested $100,000,000 of the public's money in the T. V. A., and it is understood there will probably be invested $500,000,000 in this and other projects. What for? To go into the generation, distribution, and sale of electric energy in competition with private industry without any regulation under the provisions of the holding-company bill. They will have no taxes to pay. All of their mail matter can be sent out under the franking privilege. In the construction of these industries they receive a rebate in rail rates on the material that is used in the construction of the dams, transmission lines, and so

What chance has a private company to compete with such competition as this?

May I call the attention of the Congress to the fact that the Tennessee Valley Authority, in pursuance and in accordance with an Executive order of the President of the United States dated December 19, 1933, formed a holding-company

So I say it all depends on who sends out this propaganda | corporation under the laws of the State of Delaware. It is known as the "Electric Home and Farm Authority, Inc." The persons who made the application for the above-named holding-company corporation are Arthur E. Morgan, Harcourt A. Morgan, David E. Lilienthal, all of them officials of the Tennessee Valley Authority. The charter granted under the laws of the State of Delaware to the Electric Farm and Home Authority-holding company-permits the Federal Government to engage in competition with private public utilities in the distribution and sale of electric power, electric equipment and appliances; to loan money for the purchase of electric equipment; to manufacture, buy, sell, deal in, and to engage in, conduct, and carry on the business of manufacturing, buying, selling, and dealing in electrical appliances and equipment, and in goods, wares, and merchandise of every class and description necessary or useful for the operations of the corporation.

I doubt if any charter was ever granted to a corporation under the laws of the State of Delaware which is as broad and far-reaching as that granted to the holding-company corporation known as the "Electric Home and Farm Authority, Inc.", a subsidiary of the Federal Tennessee Valley Authority, which does not come under the regulatory provisions of the holding-company bill. Why did the Authority go to Delaware to incorporate and get the charter? If it is proper and right for the Federal Government to engage in these activities in competition with private industry, why was it necessary to get a charter in the State of Delaware?

I repeat and state again as a member of the committee that in now considering the holding-company legislation, I want to see legislation promptly enacted by Congress which will correct some of the indefensible practices and abuses which have been carried out by some large utility-holding companies. It is my duty also to do everything in my power to protect in every way possible legitimate business and industry, and the investments of millions of citizens who have put their money into public utilities which may be destroyed by drastic regulation through an act of Congress.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. Cole of Maryland, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 6644) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30. 1935, and prior fiscal years, to provide supplemental appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1935, and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution thereon.

EXTENSION OF THE FEDERAL DEPOSIT INSURANCE CORPORATION TO PHERTO RICO

Mr. IGLESIAS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by including a resolution passed by the Legislature of Puerto Rico.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. IGLESIAS. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include a resolution, unanimously approved by the Senate of Puerto Rico, with respect to H. R. 5357, a bill to provide for the sound, effective, and uninterrupted operation of the banking system, and for other

I think that it will not be an indiscretion to preface my remarks by stating that the President is in favor of extending the provisions of this measure to Puerto Rico, as well as the Director of the Division of Territories and Island Possessions of the Department of the Interior and some of the members of the Committee on Banking and Currency with whom I have communicated.

The necessity for giving the local banks of Puerto Rico the privilege of membership in this proposed insurance corporation is so obvious that it hardly requires comment.

The island has the National City Bank and the Chase National Bank, both of which may advertise that the deposits of any one individual or corporation up to a limit of $2,500

are insured, while the smaller, purely local banks are denied |

This will constitute a discrimination of the most flagrant nature, and it cannot be the intention of Congress or the Insurance Corporation to do anything injurious to banks properly administered, serving a community and in a financial condition which would warrant their entrance into the insurance fund. It would cause an injustice of granting guarantees to certain banks, while, at the same time denying that right to banks located in Puerto Rico, which, by the way, form an integral part of the United States. Furthermore, the insular organic act establishes the theory of Congress that any law not inapplicable to Puerto Rico must be made extensive to Puerto Rico.

The representatives of the local banks of Puerto Rico are definitely of the opinion that, unless they are included to participate in the obligations and the rights of the abovestated bill, it will simply mean throwing the entire banking structure of the island into the hands of the large banks.

In conclusion, in submitting their personal opinions and suggestions, the banking representatives say that, if their local banking interest can obtain the Federal Deposit Insurance facilities, it would be for the best interest of the people of the island. For the foregoing, and other reasons, the Legislature of Puerto Rico unanimously approved the following resolution:

> SENADO DE PUERTO RICO. March 6, 1935.

Hon. SANTIAGO IGLESIAS,

Resident Commissioner of Puerto Rico, Washington, D. C.

Washington, D. C.

Sir: I have the honor to transmit herewith a certified copy of Senate Concurrent Resolution No. 5, entitled "Concurrent resolution to petition the Congress of the United States of America to make extensive to Puerto Rico the benefits of the act in regard to the insurance of deposits in banking institutions, and especially those derived from the activities of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation", which was unanimously approved by the Senate of Puerto Rico on February 19, 1935, and by the house of representatives on March 5, 1935.

ENRIQUE GONZALEZ MENA Secretary of the Senate.

I, Enrique Gonzalez Mena, Secretary of the Senate of Puerto

I, Enrique Gonzalez Mena, Secretary of the Senate of Puerto Rico, do hereby certify:

That the following concurrent resolution was unanimously approved by the Senate of Puerto Rico on February 19, 1935, and by the house of representatives on March 5, 1935:

"Concurrent resolution to petition the Congress of the United States of America to make extensive to Puerto Rico the benefits of the act in regard to the insurance of deposits in banking institutions and especially those derived from the activities of the stitutions, and especially those derived from the activities of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation.

"Whereas it is unquestionable that the inclusion of Puerto Rico in the benefits of the Deposit Insurance Corporation created by virtue of amendments introduced into the Federal Reserve Act would considerably improve the condition of insular credit bound up in the local banks organized under the laws of Puerto Rico with Puerto Rican capital;

"Whereas, such inclusion of Puerto Rico in the benefits of said organization will place the local banks in circumstances similar to those of the national banks doing business in Puerto Rico, and will avoid unjust and unequal competition on the part of national banking institutions against those organized under the laws of Puerto Rico;

"Whereas insular credit requires that the native credit insti-Whereas insular credit requires that the native credit institutions organized with local capital, where numerous interests of the country are united, be placed on the same plane of action as the national banking institutions doing business in this island of Puerto Rico, and be protected in like manner by national legislation so that no new uneasiness may be caused in our economic structure, actually bankrupted by the economic depression through which we have been passing for the last few years;
"Whereas neither the provision of the provisio

"Whereas neither the previous act creating the Deposit Insurance Corporation nor the pending bills now under the consideration of the Congress of the United States, and especially the Steagall banking bill, H. R. 5357, include Puerto Rico, notwithstanding the fact that the benefits of the act are made extensive to the Territories of Hawaii and Alaska;

"Whereas it is urgently necessary that all said legislation include Puerto Rico, making its benefits extensive to the local credit institutions established, organized, and operating under the laws of Puerto Rico:

"Whereas by this resolution the Legislature of Puerto Rico expresses its desire, willingness, and wish that the benefits of the said Deposit Insurance Act be extended to Puerto Rico, and the credit corporations and institutions and banks organized under the laws of this island and doing business in Puerto Rico, receive the benefits thereof; Now, therefore, be it "Resolved by the Senate of Puerto Rico (the House of Representatives of Puerto Rico concurring): "Section 1. That the Congress of the United States of America be petitioned, and it is hereby petitioned, to make extensive to Puerto Rico the benefits of the Deposit Insurance Act, and likewise to extend to our island all the activities of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation so that all credit institutions and banks organized under the laws of Puerto Rico may receive its benefits. "Sec. 2. That as the said measure is also of prime importance for the guaranteeing of insular credit, the President of the United States of America is likewise petitioned to intervene and give his decided cooperation toward securing for this island all the benefits of the said act.

decided cooperation toward securing for this island all the benefits of the said act.

"SEC. 3. That a copy of this resolution be sent by air mail, immediately after its passage, to the President of the United States, to both Houses of Congress of the United States of America, to the Chief of the Division of Territories and Possessions of the Department of the Interior of the United States, and to the Resident Commissioner of Puerto Rico in Washington, requesting the latter to give his whole cooperation to the petition herein contained; and that a copy be sent to the Governor of Puerto Rico, asking for his cooperation."

For transmittal to the Resident Commissioner of Puerto Rico in Washington, I have hereinto set, my hand and caused to be in Washington, I have hereunto set my hand and caused to be affixed the seal of the Senate of Puerto Rico on this 6th day of March 1935.

ENRIQUE GONZALEZ MENA, Secretary of the Senate.

Mr. SHANLEY. Mr. Speaker, I was unavoidably detained during the roll call on the passage of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation bill this afternoon. I ask unanimous consent to state that if I were here I would have voted "aye."

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. Taylor of South Carolina, for several days, on account of pressing business.

To Mr. Sadowski, for an indefinite period, on account of death in the family.
